Biggest surprise of the play was John Reardon, who instilled maturity and insight into his lead role of a seasoned Air Force general. John was solidly backed by Don Seaton and Bob Erskine. Erskine, you will remember, played "Animal" in last year's "Stalag 17."

Jim Borden and Bernie Coyne considerably "shook' 'the appreciative audience with their down-to-earth humor and wild antics on the stage. "Suburban" Bill Brown caused great wonderment as to why he didn't run for a senatorial seat from Mississippi in last week's election.

ROTC Drill Team To Perform at Pro Grid Game

Villanova's smooth-stepping NROTC drill team will perform with drill teams from St. Joseph's and La Salle during halftime of the Washington Redskins-Philadelphia Eagles football game Nov. 28 in Connie Mack Stadium, Drillmaster Walt Gould announced last week.

Preparing for the performance, Gould has his 40-man squad drilling on these chilly November mornings. The junior civil engineer says he will be able to use only 24 men during the three-team exhibition.

Not Competition

However, Gould emphasized that the team is not being judged in an official competition. But Gould thinks the crowd will be able to spot the best performing team.

Gould says, "there's no doubt about the winner—Villanova."

The drill team will have the entire length of the field for their four minute exhibition, Gould added. He said teams will perform individually.

Gould, a regular midshipman who has his eyes set on a Marine commission, is in complete charge of the drill team. He drills the team in its morning workouts. M/Sgt. J. E. Waryha and Marine officers attached to the NROTC unit sometimes make suggestions, but Gould "runs the show," according to Lt. Col. Elliott Wilson, USMC.

In his Blood

And Gould has had plenty of experience to fit him for his drillmaster's job. He entered Villanova after absorbing four years of military training at Christian Brothers Academy, Albany, N. Y. Gould was also a member of a fancy drill team in his hometown.

Although he is a junior engineer, Gould will not earn his degree until June, 1957. Engineering students in NROTC must spread their course over five years.

Student-Faculty Reports Outlined To SC Members

Student government activity reached a peak at Villanova yesterday and over the past week end.

At last night's meeting, Student Council members were expected to hear reports about decisions made during the Student-Faculty Committee meeting yesterday afternoon.

The S-F Committee was to consider the Council's request for a change in the rule which permits only one off-campus social event a year. Council wants each organization to be able to hold one off-campus event a semester. Council also requested a free day for seniors and the band St. Patrick's Day, so that they might participate in New York's famed parade.

Sunday afternoon a delegation from Villanova attended the first meeting of the Regional Student Government Commission, which is sponsored by the National Federation of Catholic College Students.

Early Score Overcome By Rally

The brunt of seven consecutive defeats bear heavily upon the brow of captain Mike Mayock, as he watches proceedings from the sidelines after injuring his shoulder early in the Houston loss two weeks ago.

Team Captain:

Mayock's Leadership, Spirit Inspiration To Team Mates

By Bob Strayton

"If hard work means anything at all to a football team, then we should start winning ball games soon." And just such an example of that hard work is the author of the above statement, Villanova's team captain, Mike Mayock.

Hustling since he came to Villanova four years ago, Mike has gained the admiration and respect of coaches and fellow ballplayers. His aggressiveness and never-say-die attitude on the ball field marked him a perfect choice for team captain when the post was vacated last year by Joe Faragalli. Aside from his football attributes, Mayock also possess fine leadership ability, and excellent judgement. Recognizing this, his teammates unanimously elected him at a meeting held for that purpose earlier this year.

Morale-Builder

Mike, in assuming the responsibility of leading the team, has done an admirable job. Despite a very poor record, which almost always demoralizes a team, this year's ball club still abounds in spirit. Mike is a leading factor in helping maintain the high morale of the squad.

Getting his initial experience at St. Joseph's Prep in Philadelphia, Mike not only starred in gridiron endeavors, but also played four years of basketball, in which he also displayed exceptional talent.

When he came to Villanova in the fall of 1951, Mike donned his cleats, and continued his footballing career for the Blue and White. He was immediately noticed by the coach, Art Raimo, who held Mayock in very high regard.

Performed Creditably

In his sophomore season, the first chance Mike had to show his stuff in varsity competition, he saw but little action, due to the vast depth at the end post. However, he still performed creditably in his debut.

The following year told a different story, though. Mike was a junior now, and in many respect a seasoned campaigner. He started the Georgia opener, and played well on both the offense and defensive positions in one platton football which was the new innovation of the NCAA at the time.

Sixty Minute Standout

For the rest of the 1953 season Mike was a sixty minute stalwart, and invaluable to Villanova. Along with Roy Kershaw, who played from the right end post, Mike crashed lines, broke up plays, and in general wreaked havoc upon the opposition. Offensively, he did just about the same, throwing key blocks for the adept running game of Gene Filipski and Ralph Cecere, and snaring an aerial or two when the occasion presented itself.

Freshmen Take Third; Dump Delaware 13-6

By Darryl Ditenfest

Winning their third ball game in a row after dropping their opener to Wyoming Seminary, Villanova's powerful freshman football team displayed excellent ability as they captured a tough 13-6 contest from the Delaware frosh at the latter's field Friday.

After a slow start in the first stanza of the ball game, the frosh applied the power. Late in the first period, Jack Devroe intercepted a Delaware aerial on their 35 yd. line. Classy quarterbacking by field general Eddie McGhee brought the ball down to the 2-yd-line, and that is where it stood when the 1st period ended.

McGhee Scores First

The initial play from scrimmage in the 2nd period saw a Villanova touchdown, as McGhee went into paydirt on a neatly executed sneak play from the two. Chuck Bastian, the versatile lineman, converted to make the score 7-0, Villanova.

Things remained that way when the halftime intermission gun sounded. In the third period, Delaware's yearling got rolling and scored on a pass into the end zone. That proved to be their only bid of the day, as the big Wildcat forward wall proved adequate to the job of stalling the Blue Hen attack.

Team Performed Well

Among the stand-out linemen for the Mainliner yearlings were Howard Birchmeyer, Bastian, Charlie Vaughn, and center Vince Chaeverino, whose combined efforts thwarted Delaware threats throughout.

Fennessy Gets Only TD On Pass From Ferruolo

By Bill Brown

About this time of year, it would be the conventional thing for Villanova football fans to raise the chant "Wait until next year." It's altogether possible that they may have to wait until next year for a Wildcat victory. In losing to Boston University on Saturday afternoon, 28-6, at University Field, Boston, the representatives of the Main Line showed that they could play good football.

Showing a sharpness that is becoming de rigeur for the first minutes of a game, the Villanovans quickly cut through the Terrier's defense for a score. Boston University fought back, and at the end of the first quarter led 7-6. A safety and two more touchdowns wrapped up the game statistically.

Improvement Noted

Villanova's improvement could be gauged by the fact that this Bosto nteam tallied 41 points against Syracuse, a team which set down Villanova 28-6.

Coach Frank Reagan could smile at the performances of some of his proteges. Unfortunately, Frank D'Alonzo, a good fullback in his own right, will be remembered on campus as Pete's brother. Frank set up the Wildcats' touchdown with a 30 yard trot in the first quarter. a 12 yard pass from John Ferruolo to Larry Fennessy for the score had the visitors' fans cheering.

Wild Pass . . . Safety

Boston then dominated the proceedings. In the persons of Terrasi, Pino, Gastall, and Hagerstrom, Boston leaked through Villanova's dike. Terrasi scored first on a short jaunt. Early in the second quarter, the Beantowners scored a safety when the center's pass went over punter Jack Helm's head, and into the end zone.

Gastall's passes were in form with his reputation as a T-formation expert. The second touchdown was made by Hagerstrom, who plunged over. Pino scored the final two touchdowns.

The defensive strength and the well balanced power of Boston's T-formation squad was too much for the Wildcats. Coach Reagan now has the job of priming his boys for the Mississippi Southern game.

Geisz Announces Football Playoffs To Begin Thursday

By Chauncy Olcott

Ed Geisz, Intramural Athletic Director, has announced that intramural football competition will be concluded with the championship game Thursday, which will be played regardless of weather conditions. The Shamrocks and Delurey each boast a 3-0 record to pace the Austin League. In the Mendel League, the Falcons' 3-0 slate leads the field. The Early Morning Mendel League presents a first place tie between the Galloping Ginks and the Chow Hounds.

Wrestling and Weight-Lifting Begin

Wrestling and weight-lifting competition, which represents another first for the Intramural Department, began yesterday in Alumni Hall. Training sessions were held throughout last week for the amateur musclemen.

Basketball

Basketball will enter the intramural scene next Tuesday. Team entries must be completed by Friday. An intramural all-star team will be formed, and will compete against outside collegiate stars. The traditional game with the Villanova Frosh will also be played.

Bowling

Phi Kappa Pi, the engineering fraternity, is planning to supervise the bowling league. The Intramural Department will supply new bowling balls for the field house alleys, which are expected Nov. 19.

SPORTS CHATTER

By Norm Feldpush

THE CURTAIN DRAPED LIGHTS, and chair-ladened field house playing surface has resulted in a one week delay of practice for Villanova's basketball team. Our opponents on the twenty-six game schedule have been conducting intensive drills since the official opening of practice under N. C. A. A. rules, Nov. 1. This unfortunate situation recalls an even greater obstacle encountered by the team of 1928-29, which resulted from a fire in College Hall during January, 1928. The scientific laboratories were moved into Alumni Hall, which was the college gym.

In the winter of 1928, the circumstances remained, so the team was bestowed the privilege of practicing in the Rosemont College gym. "Home" games were played at West Catholic High School. Captain of this team was present coach Al Severance.

THE EVER MOUNTING LOSING STREAK of our varsity footballers has become the concern of everyone connected with Villanova's sixty-one year football record, which will reveal that disastrous seasons have been experienced before, as at most football playing institutions, and the gridiron sport continued.

In 1923 the Wildcats lost seven of their eight-game schedule, salvaging only a scoreless tie with Muhlenberg. The Mainliners were defeated by Dickinson, Gettysburg, Rutgers, Lebanon Valley, Duquesne, Third Army Corps, and Quantico Marines. What makes the season unique is that Villanova did not score a single point in the eight games.

VILLANOVA ALUMNI maintain prominence in professional ranks. John Sandusky remains an offensive tackle position in the Cleveland Browns starting lineup, and plays defense in a spot role when the Browns employ an eight man line. Lou Ferry ('49) fills the first string defensive tackle position for the Pitt Steelers. Ralph Pasquariello, former Blue and White fullback, occupies the same post with the Chicago Cardinals, but is currently on the injured list. Steve Romanik teammate of Sandusky and Pasquariello on the 1949 team, is a reserve quarterback with the Chicago Cardinals, after three seasons with the Chicago Bears.

In professional basketball, 1950 All-American Paul Arizin and Tom Brennan are members of Eddie Gottlieb's Philadelphia Warriors. They are expected to be joined by erstwhile Mainliners Larry Hennessy and Jim Mooney upon their discharge from the service.

Bob Haner, former V. U captain, is commanding the attention of professional scouts with his exploits for Fort Belvoir, and will probaby be employed by the National Football League when discharged.

Villanova's freshmen football team will be participants in the Second Annual Silver Bowl game on Nov. 20, when they encounter Bullis School. This game is sponsored by the Lions Club of Silver Springs, Maryland. All proceeds will go to the Silver Springs Boys' Club. Bullis defeated Maryland's frosh in last year's inaugural. Enthusiasm and ticket sales are running high.

wrath. He proved himself time and time again, and, although he didn't see a full 60 minutes of action in the latter part of the season, he made a full account of himself when he was in the ball games.

Aggressive Competitor

This year, probably because of the responbilities of his captaincy, Mike seems as though he was a player possessed. Vicious blocking, savage tackling, and consistently rough football makes Mr. Mayock a nemesis, as far as rival antagonists are concerned.

In the Houston debacle, probably Mike's very best performance to date, he accounted for Villanova's lone tally of the contest when he hauled in a 40-yd. Dick Scott aerial on the goal line with a spectacular finger-tip grab.

In recounting the figures, it certainly seems that, when the team met to select a leader for the present season, they made a wise choice, for Mike Mayock is a football player personified; courage, leadership, aggressiveness, and talent combined.

laid out pages," "good head writing" and "eye-appealing typography." The VILLANOVAN amassed 1685 points in all departments to merit the All-American rating.

Dick Winfield, who edited the award-winning VILLANOVAN last year, stated last week, "This comes as a complete and very happy surprise. More than anything else, it's a well-deserved tribute to the editors and staffers who worked unceasingly, as they do now, to publish a fine newspaper."

Bright Future Due Scot Distance Man Alex Breckenridge

Scotland's gift to Villanova could turn out to be one of the best trackmen in the school's history. The reference is, of course, to long-striding Alex Breckenridge.

Alex was discovered by a former Villanova star, John Joe Barry. Breckenridge was running for the Victoria Park Athletic Club in Glasgow when Barry met him. When John Joe saw him win a mile feature race, beating a field that included another Villanova great—Fred Dwyer, he persuaded Alex to come to the Mainline. Breckenridge's time of 4 minutes, 11 seconds set the Scot record for the mile.

Cross-Country Champ

This mile victory was just one of Alex's track achievements in Scotland. Besides winning numerous distance races, he has posted a near-record 9:05 two-mile time and is the Scot cross-country champ.

Since coming to Villanova, Alex has continued his fine performances. His brilliant 4:06.3 effort in the Boardwalk Mile last winter, defeating the famed Mal Whitfield, was the highlight of the indoor season. Because of the freshman ineligibility rule, he could not run in college competition until this fall.

Breckenridge has had trouble rounding into shape this year because of a summer job which kept him from getting the proper rest. Also, the heat of summer in this area, being much greater than in Scotland, bothered him.

Record-Improving

Alex is working himself back into top condition by running cross-country. He says that he feels stronger after every race and the record attests to his improvnig condition. He was fourth man on the team in the Navy meet, third man in the Pittsburgh run and was the second Villanovan to cross the finish line in the Georgetown-St. Joseph meet.

Breckenridge is planning on entering the indoor meets again this winter. Next spring, he and Bill Rock will be counted upon to supply the one-two punch in the distance events.

Dan Murphy, 150-pound club halfback, and Don Harley, end, show effects of hard first-half play against Penn Friday, as they left field with a 6-0 deficit. Penn eventually scored again and won, 12-0.

Wildcats Oppose Southern Teams In Away Games

Villanova in the next two weeks will play its fifth and sixth southern opponents of the 1954 season, Mississippi Southern College and Vanderbilt, meeting both teams for the first time.

The first of the two games to be played south of the Mason-Dixon Line will be that with Mississippi Southern, perhaps the most underrated team in college football. The intersectional clash will take place in Mobile Alabama's Ladd Stadium on the night of Nov. 13. Halftime entertainment will feature 1000 or more high school musicians performing with the "Pride of Mississippi" marching band, in celebration of Alabama High School Band Day.

Led By Vann

Mississippi Southern is living up to all the pre-season hopes of head coach Thad (Pie) Vann, who, in himself, has compiled quite a record at MSC. Since the team has been under Vann's guidance, they have won 41 games while losing only 17. This is even greater in consideration that only eight years ago this southern college had a total enrollment of a mere 300 students. Today, it has grown to 2800 strong, making it Villanova's equal in size, but not in football background and experience.

Thus far this year, the Southerners have won four games while dropping two. In their first game this year they squeezed out a victory over a strong Alabama team, 7-2. Since then they have beaten La. Tech., Abilene Christian, and Chattanooga; while losing to two rivals by one touchdown, N. Texas State, and Southeastern.

Small Backfield

Operating from a Chicago Bear "T", the Southerners will be led by 5 ft. 11 in., 164-lb. quarterback Jim Davenport. Last year Davenport completed 35 of 70 passes for 503 yards and four TD's. Rounding out the backfield will be: Fred Smallwood at fullback, Brick Mason and Jackie Howard at the halfback slots. The average weight of the entire backfield is only 166 lbs., but these "Pony Backs," as they are referred to, make up for their lack of weight by tremedous speed and football know-how. Speed is not the only reason for the long gains rattled off by these backs, at least not in consideration of the pact that they are playing behind one of the heftiest lines in the country. The MSC line averages a mere 217 lbs., with individual weights ranging from 192 to 251. Perhaps the most outstanding lineman is Leo (the Lion) Herrmann, a varsity performer for his third year, and last year named on the Little All-American squad. Other standouts on the squad are P. W. (the Undertaker) Underwood, guard; Jim (Coon Dog) Davis, Tackle; and ends Hub Waters and Leo Williams.

With sixteen lettermen and thirteen newcomers, MSC will present a well-rounded passing and runnning attack. It will be one of the shallowest teams Villanova will face this year, but at the same time it will be the most underated team to be played. The game should prove to be a close one, perhaps it will be the best game of the season for the Wildcats.

Vanderbilt Host

On Nov. 20 the Villanova Wildcats will travel to Nashville, Tenn., to clash with the victory-starved Commodores of Vanderbilt University.

Coach Art Guepe has been plagued with the same type of suicide schedule that Coach Reagan has faced. Without a doubt, Vanderbilt has met the finest teams in the South. The Commodores have dropped five straight games this year. The only common opponent was Mississippi, who crushed the Wildcats 52—0. Vanderbilt held Mississippi to a slightly smaller score, losing 22-7. Other opponents which have sunk the Commodores include, Baylor, Alabama, Georgia, and Rice.

Preseason predictions put Vanderbilt at the bottom of the Southeastern Conference, but Coach Guepe indicated confidence that they would fare better than the '53 team, which was no pushover.

Use Split-T

The Commodores work from the Split T, the formation which has bothered Villanova throughout the season. It is a comparatively light team, but once again, a team which relies on speed and break away runners. Jim Looney and Billy Holmes will share the quarterbacking. Don Bailey, 5'9" 180 lbs., will fill the fullback position. The real threats will come from the halfback slots. Charley Horton, who averages 5 yards per carry, and Dan Byers will share the Left Half, while Bob Cappelletti takes over at right half.

The line, although hampered by injuries, is deep in reserves. Pete Williams and Bobby Goodall, both guards, are Vanderbilt's finest. All told, it is not a spectacular line, but neither is it weak. It is noted for its defensive ability, and much improved offensively.

Royalty Presents Second Painting

Along with the portrait of Very Rev. James A. Donnellon, O. S. A., Villanova president, Prince and Princess Alexis Droutzkoy have presented Rev. Daniel P. Falvey, O. S. A., librarian, a painting on copper of St. Augustine giving his rule to Norbert, the founder of the Norbertine Fathers.

The royal couple also presented a copy of Raphael's Madonna of the Chair, with a copy of the frame around the original. This painting is now hanging in the North Stairwell of the Library, Father Falvey said.

Note, Juniors:

Ring Chairman Owen Hickey has informed the VILLANOVAN that Dieges and Clust ring representative George Packer has announced that final fittings for those who ordered their rings in May wil be held Monday and Tuesday prior to the Thanksgiving holidays, November 22 and 23. The times: Monday—10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. in Father McLaughlin's Student Activities Office in Mendel; Tuesday—9:30 a.m. to 3 p.m., also in the Activities office. NEW ORDERS FOR JUNIORS AND SENIORS WILL BE TAKEN AT THESE TIMES, AS WILL PIN ORDERS. Rings will arrive for delivery before Christmas vacation starts. Balance of ring price must be paid upon delivery. Hickey added that he has a sample ring in his room—the official Junior ring approved by Father McLaughlin and Father John Vrana, O. S. Unbeaten Rifle Team Engages Lehigh Saturday

Villanova's rifle team, coached by M/Sgt. J. E. Waryha, USMC, takes on the Lehigh University sharpshooters this Saturday at Lehigh.

Undefeated in their first three starts, the Main Line markmen are looking forward to a successful season behind such as Hank Miller and Captain John Gilligan.

Score on Squad

The twenty-man squad also includes C. Trunzo, W. Gould, R. Day, R. Schleicher, W. Gordon, J. Mustard, R. Pyle, K. Scheetz, S. McGeehan, E. Ernst, R. Passarella, Murgia, Fideliber, Ventura, Moser, McSweeney, Gregg, Costa, Waller, Auth.

Making the team prospects look good is its initial victory over "C" Co., 111th Infantry of the Norristown National Guard, whose gunners are rated second in the state. The Wildcat riflemen are setting their sights high, aiming to repeat as Greater Philadelphia and Fourth Naval District NROTC Rifle Champions.

Blasted Marines

In the second match Villanova blasted the United States Marine Combination team into the defeat column. The Wildcats recorded their third win Saturday, outshooting Temple.

The schedule, which is the heaviest ever, with matches extending into April, calls for 25 matches—including 13 league clashes. Next home match is set for Nov. 30 and pits Villanova's sharpshooters against Penn.

Rifle team schedule:

In choosing a field, security is not as important as interest, members of Villanova's chapter of the American Institute of Chemical Engineers were advised last week by a Villanova alumnus.

Mr. John J. Duffy, sales manager of Penn Salt Co. and a 1937 graduate of Villanova, told the engineers that a chemical engineering background is necesary for a salesman's job in the chemical enginnering field.

Because the customers will be technically trained, the salesman must have similar training, Mr. Duffy continued. The speaker also described chemistry as a "growing field."

Mr. Duffy took his BS in chemical engineering after serving as swimming team captain and president of the Chemical Engineering Society.

RADIO CLUB

A Villanova Amateur Radio Club and station are aborning, Gene Rzodkiewicz, a sophomore electrical engineer, announced last week. Rzodkiewicz said a first meeting was being planned for before Thanksgiving, if there was sufficient response or interest shown.

Amateur Radio, he added, would provide a means for boosting the University's prestige, provide technical activities, and, incidentally, a means whereby students from distant states or countries could easily contact their homes.

All licensed amateurs or persons interested in amateur radio was urged to contact Rzodkiewicz at Room 18, Sullivan Hall.

This apparatus makes possible some of the most vivid demonstrations in collegiate physics, Vachon added.

Villanova's AIEE-IRE group has innaugurated its official season with a Pinochle and Chess Tournament for its members. It was stated in the electrical engineering organization's newsletter last week that prizes would be awarded to the winners at the annual AIEE-IRE spring picnic.

Chairman Jim Wrzesinski also announced that plans were being made for a group field trip to the Burrough's Research Laboratories in Paoli. The society's next meeting will probably feature a talk on High-Fidelity by a guest speaker, Wrzesinski added.

Dinner Dance

A new wave of enthusiasm among Villanova students has raised the spirits of Belle Air Ball Committee members, who report response to the ticket sale for the Nov. 19 dance has been "very good."

Prom Co-chairman Bernie Finan said the ecommittee was especially surprised at the warm response they received from freshmen and sophomores on a dormitory tour Thursday night.

Members of the Senior Class steering committee covered every hall on campus, Finan said. They explained to residents that the Prom was open to all students . . . that tickets were on sale in the Pie Shoppe . . . that students could probably get corsages and formal wear at a reasonable rate from campus salesmen.

. . . Come Early

One point Finan and his committee wanted to get across was a "come early—stay late" motto, in keeping with the gay, carnival spirit of the Prom.

Committee members would like to see prom-goers arrive at nine o'clock and dance until the affair closes at one. Finan promised continuous music from Lester Lanin and his band.

Mentioning the band, Finan reported remarks he had heard from a group of Villanova juniors who heard Lanin at a Manhattanville (N.Y.) College prom. One junior called Lanin and his band "the greatest he had ever heard at a college prom."

Tickets Going

While the ticket response has pleased the committee, they said tickets will also be on sale at the door of the Field House the night of the dance. The Pie Shoppe ticket booth will remain open until the day of the Prom, Ticket Chairman Jim Campbell said.

Finan said each member of the senior steering committee had been assigned ten tickets to sell.

Finishing touches on the art work of the murals will be completed this week, according to Decorations Co-chairmen Duke Micone and Jack Petitt. Actual decorating of the Field House will begin immediately after a faculty dinner Nov. 17

Gala 'Pre-Victory' Alumni Dance Set Friday Night

Blue and white pennants will bedeck the Main Ballroom of the Hotel Roosevelt (46th and Madison Ave., New York) for the "pre-victory" dance and rally of the Villanova Club of New York Nov. 26.

Some 420 reservations have already been submitted by students but tickets, priced at $5, will be on sale at the door, Athletic Secretary Bill (Go) Ryan announced last week.

Dance to Radderman

Dancing will begin at 9 p. m. the night before the Villanova-Fordham football game at the Polo Grounds. Ryan said the Radderman Band—the aggregation which performed at last year's successful affair — will provide music for dancing.

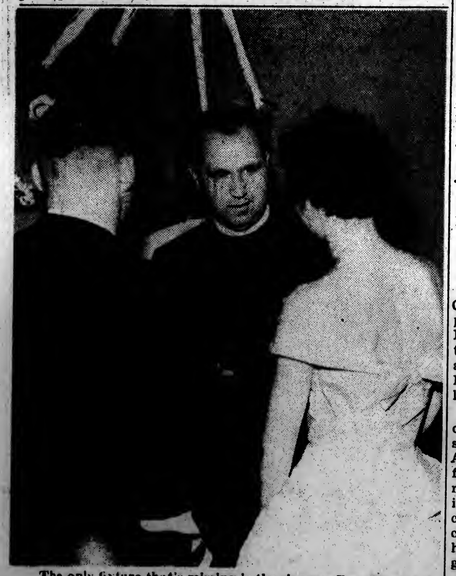
The exuberant athletic secretary exclaimed that Villanova's footballers were "very optmistic for victory. He said the Wildcats are equal, man-to-man, to the Fordham gridders and are anxious to salvage a disappointing season with a win over the metropolitan rival.

The Fordham-Villanova football rivalry was renewed last season, in hopes that a permanent arrangement could be made for a traditional game as the climax of both schools' football activity.

Annual Affair

Ryan and the New York alumni decided an annual dance the night before the game would be an ideal method of having old grads, present students and friends of Villanova get together socially.

After the dance last year was a sell out, Ryan and John McConville, publicity of the New York Club, looked around for a larger place to accomodate the affair this year.



The Hotel Roosevelt, capable of handling 1500 people in its Main Ballroom, was chosen.

Besides dancing, singing and cheering, an a short talk by Coach Frank Reagan will feature the evening's activity, Ryan added.

ASSEMBLY

A student assembly will be held in the Field House next Tuesday, Nov. 30, from 1:30-2:20 p.m., Very Rev. James A. Donnellon, O. S. A., Villanova president, announced last week.

Father Donnellon said he and Rev. Edward M. Dwyer, O. S. A., University Dean, will address the student body.

The only fixture that's missing is the cigar as Rev. Thomas A. Burke, O. S. A., makes with his dance-hopping at the Senior Prom Friday night. The couple being cross-examined is Senior Ted Clarkson and his date.

Cheerleader Advances Co-ed Inclusion Plan

Peppy co-ed cheerleaders leading stands of spectators jammed into Villanova University Stadium would go a long way toward rekindling spirit at Villanova football games, Head Cheerleader John Garrett proclaimed last week.

"It would really thrill me to stand in front of the packed stands in a stadium on my own campus and lead cheers," added the sophomore pre-med student.

Half Bill's Spirit

Discussing student spirit at games, Garrett remarked that if undergraduates showed half the enthusiasm of Bill (Go) Ryan, Villanova would have a good football team.

Garrett felt Boston University had the right idea when they had co-ed cheerleaders waving pom-poms and adding a touch of color and glamour to the stadium scene at BU games. Some southern schools, particularly Duke and North Carolina, have made the same use of the large numbers of co-eds in their student populations.

The blond graduate of Northeast Catholic High School in Philadelphia outlined some other ideas he had for the improvement of cheering at football games:

Gung Ho!

1. He supported Ryan's plan to gather—especially freshmen —together at the beginning of the school year and drill them in the cheers and songs and attempt to build a "gung ho" feeling in the student body.

2. He revealed plans he had last year for the revamping of the cheerleading team at Villanova. Garrett said his ideas were discarded when he discovered only two home games scheduled for the 1954 football team.

Collections, Charity Ball Aid 'Johnnies'

Footballers Pat Haley and Pete Cassidy give four smiling St. John's Orphanage lads a preview of the activities coming up to their benefit through Villanovans' generosity: Charity Ball, Dec. 3; Orphans' Party, Dec. 9; the annual outing, set for Dec. 11. Charity Ball tickets are now on sale, at $1 per couple, with the Criterions supplying the music.

The annual Junior Class project that always turns out to be the most rewarding for all concerned—the St. John's orphans benefits — moved into more concrete stages of preparation last week under the guidance of orphans' chairmen Mike Horan and Bernie Steinfelt and Charity Ball head Don Alton and their respective committees.

Events Tisted

The former committee, working in cooperation with contributions co-chairmen Pat Haley and Pete Cassidy, is nearing completion of plans for the following events:

1) Religion class collections on the Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, Dec. 1, 2 and 3, immediately after return from Thanksgiving holidays;

2) The orphans party at the orphanage Thursday, Dec. 9, with Santa Claus, refreshments, entertainments and gift-giving on tap; and

3) The orphans' outing on Saturday, Dec. 11, with members of the entire University making their yearly contribution to the kids' happiness, what with lunch, movies, and gift-buying scheduled in downtown Philadelphia.

Criterions Chosen

Moving on to the second committee, chairman Alton has announced that the Criterions, the group that played at the very successful Blazer Ball, will be on hand to entertain Friday evening, Dec. 3.

"We want to emphasize the social as well as the charitable angle," said Alton, and we want to promote a large turnout for a very nice evening as well as the idea of merely buying the ticket."

Tickets for the Ball are only one dollar per couple. Tickets

HOW YOU CAN HELP

The various events to be held for the benefit of the orphans at St. John's depend not only upon the support of juniors, but upon the generosity of the entire student body. The well-worn but very meaningful slogan used last year, "Never is a Man so Tall as When He Stoops to Help a Child," gives one an idea of the rewarding satisfaction that can be gained through such generosity. So, remember: be prepared to contribute generously in the religion section collection on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, Dec. 1 through 3, immediately after return from the holidays, for your section will be contacted only once. Secondly, buy a ticket for one dollar per couple to the Dec. 3 Charity Ball, and attend the Ball with music by the Criterions. Thirdly, volunteer your time and spending money on Saturday, Dec. 11, and treat one of the 400 orphans from St. John's during the annual outing.

Fr. President Speaks:

Accounting Forum Attracts Students, Professionals

A speech by Arthur D. Foye, CPA, an immediate past president of the American Institute of Accountants, was the high point of the Twelfth annual Philadelphia Accounting Forum, which was held at Villanova last Wednesday.

Over 500 students and accountants heard Mr. Foye's speech, which concerned "The Accountant's role in Public Affairs". He emphasized the active role that accountant should take in the affairs of community and country, noting that many accountants have already given-up high-paying jobs to serve the government.

Mr. Foye's speech was the climax of a day of speeches and discussions designed to help the present or future accountant.

The forum was presented by the Pennylvania Institute of Certified Public Accountants in cooperation with seventeen Colleges and Universities of the Philadelphia area, the National Association of Cost Accountants, and the Institute of Internal Auditors. This was the second time the forum was held at Villanova; the first time was in 1950.

The first meeting was presided over by Lawrence J. Scully, Vice-Chairman, Philadelphia Chapter, Pennsylvania Institute of Certified Public Accountants. The invocation was made by the Rev. Joseph C. Bartley, O.S.A., Dean, School of Commerce and Finance. A few words of greetings were de-

The Metamorphosis

In a high-ceilinged courtroom in Media one Thanksgiving ago, four gowned judges signed a legal document which started a chain of events whose effects are revolutionizing the old Villanova.

Where students once played touch football, there now stands an immense, Gothic, functional dormitory; where day-hops once sprawled in the mid-day sun, there is an orange and grey foundation of a modern student union building.

A new university president was installed, a new football coaching staff was signed, new faculty members were appointed. The largest freshman class in Villanova's 112 year history swelled its enrollment and the ambitious young law school accepted its second influx of first-year students.

A marble shrine was dedicated to Our Mother of Good Counsel and nearly one hundred men, including a handful of financial leaders, dedicated themselves to the job of raising $21 million for a far-sighted expansion program.

The document behind the metamorphosis is unimportant in itself; the court decision simply changed Villanova's title from "college" to "university."

But embodied in the Media decree were the seeds of a brand-new era of progress. Perhaps its least apparent outgrowth has been the more mature outlook by the students on such diverse matters as athletics, and discipline. Villanovans, no doubt prompted by an uninspiring football season, have begun to realize that the sun does not rise and fall on the Field House, that sports are accidental to higher education. And a sensible acceptance of more strictly enforced disciplinary regulations by the student body has shown that Villanovans are coming of age.

On Expansion

We have heard from a number of Villanovans during the course of the year the question, "When will the Expansion Drive really get under way?"

The events of the last few weeks give the answer to this query far better than we could. A national chairman of the highest eminence has been appointed. Committees of prominent businessmen and civic leaders have been selected to collect the funds and to coordinate the drive.

We feel sure that the people, not only of Philadelphia, but also of the rest of the country, will realize the importance of developing so important a center of Christian thougnt as Villanova. In these days of ideological conflict with an anti-Christian foe, it is of the greatest necessity for this nation to make strong those institutions which make strong the religious faith of our people.

Such an institution is Villanova. The center around which the ideas of Villanova's teachers revolve is the training of a man who is at once well-educated and sound in his Christian faith.

In producing such a man, Villanova is performing a service of great importance to the community. We feel that Villanova's appeal for funds in order to expand that public service deserves a most favorable public response.

Girls' Letter Assails View Opposing VU Coeducation

VILLANOVAN Feature Editor:

This is in reference to your article, "Let's Make Villanova Non Coeducational," published in the October 26 issue of the VILLANOVAN. Although arguments pro and con on the subject of coeducation are beneficial and encouraging, let's not miss the point entirely by distorting circumstances in trying to prove one's stand on the matter.

We are referring to the false analogy of the poor widower and his four young sons which occupies the major part of your article. First of all, we disagree with your use of the word "family". You state that "many neighboring families have only daughters," meaning the local women's colleges. The reader is expected to form the conclusion that Villanova is a family of men.

Do we detect the fallacy of composition in your comparison of a university of 2500 men to an incomplete family of four boys and a widowed father? Certainly a family lacking a mother's love and influence is neither complete nor normal. Would you have us think of Villanova University as an incomplete, abnormal institution?

By bearing out the analogy of the widower to the dean who organized the first class of Villanovans, you are again assuming that the university had an abject beginning. A widower is an unfortunate man who is deprived of a wife, his helpmate in rearing a family. If we must accept the comparison, then Villanova began under a great handicap, and, following it out logically, only when a woman dean appears will Villanova achieve normality.

The use of the word "orphanage" is entirely irrelevant. An orphanage deals with the unhappy situation wherein children without parents and without homes are offered the opportunity to find a semblance of the home life which they are lacking. When you compare an orphanage to an educational institution, are we to picture a university like Villanova as a housing project for unfortunate human beings?

You imply that this so-called family of a widower and four sons is hard-hit financially by the presence of the girls. Bringing it down to the underlying point of your analogy, is Villanova suffering from a heavy financial burden as a result of adding women to the student body? We are positive that the girl students are not taking the courses they need on charity. They are paying their way.

All this builds up to the question: Has your analogy proven conclusively your case for non coeducation?

In defining an analogy, "only significant resemblances have value . . . those which are essential or closely connected with the essence."

You have not compared essential qualities but only apparent similarities. For obvious reasons, your case crumbles before the INDOMITABLE LAWS OF LOGIC.

Fran Schoeniger
Alice Farrell, seniors
Immaculata College.

Now Let's Answer It . . .

The letter written by the girls from Immaculata, a non-coeducational school, represents an attempt to demonstrate NOT that coeducation is better, but that certain arguments opposing coeducation are not valid.

As such it is a complete failure.

In the first place we are not accustomed to using such 25 cent words in the VILLANOVAN as "analogy", "fallacy", "irrevelant", "logical", and "essence". We like to base our arguments on THOUGHT, the expression of which is contained in words whose meanings are familiar to all, especially ourselves.

Having digested the contents of high school English 101, we feel qualified to attach to our Oct. 26 story the label "allegory" which Webster says is "the veiled presentation, in a figurative story, of a meaning metaphorically implied but not expressly stated. Allegory is prolonged metaphor in which typically a series of actions are symbolic of other actions."

Analogical inference is a logical method which we did not pretend to be using.

In the second place, if we are to call individual terms "analagous", let us realize what the term means in a literary sense. According to Webster analogy is "a relation of likeness between two things or of one thing to or with another, consisting in the resemblance NOT of the things themselves but of two or more attributes, circumstances or effects."

Beyond these criticisms of the basis of this letter, it is necessary for us to point out several obvious misinterpretations. The word "orphanage" represents NOT the school but an organization which has children "to be placed."

Our allegory was a projection into the future, intending to show that coeducational on a permanent basis is wrong for Villanova. Thus references to "strained income" and "inadequate facilities" relate primarily to Villanova's development program. Girls' dormitories and other female facilities are not included in these expensive plans.

It was not the present situation that was being discussed; rather it was "what this present situation is leading us to."

These girls are lost in a dark cave within a huge forest, and they feel secure because they believe that they know the name of the forest. Perhaps we had better call out the Mounted Police . . .

The Other Side

There ARE convincing arguments in favor of coeducation, but these are mainly practical arguments based on present deficiencies in the field of female education. For instance, a four-year Catholic college in this area that offers professional nursing training and B.S. degree in nursing is certainly needed. The VILLANOVAN has continually presented the facts on this problem.

Villanova is an institution which is well qualified to meet

Writer Questions Military Justice

By Jim Greenlee

Recently an obscure backpage heading in the nation's press caused some raised eyebrows and a variety of comment. "Corporal Claude Batchelor's Sentence Commuted to Twenty Years" was the cause of this excitement. Behind that introduction was what might well become the most controversial question in recent years. Are there two codes of justice in our Armed Forces? There is a severe standard of discipline for enlisted men but apparently a much less stringent one for officers.

The age-old issue of service inequality is renurtured with Batchelor's recent appeal. The public cannot overlook Batchelor's sentencing in the wake of the trial of Lt. Col. Henry Fleming, who was courtmartialed on similar charges. Both men were convicted. Lt. Col. Fleming was given a dishonorable discharge, and Corporal Batchelor was put to hard labor for life.

Is this equal justice? It seems doubtful.

Last May, Corporal Dickinson, another former P.O.W., was handed a ten year sentence. Colonel Frank H. Schwabel, a marine, who also yielded to Red brainwashing, although convicted was merely reprimanded and even allowed to remain in the service even though it was admitted by high authorities that his usefulness to the service was definitely impaired.

The American public must wonder; if his usefulness to the service was impaired why was he allowed to remain in uniform? The charges against Schwable were similar to those against Dickinson yet Colonel Schwable was not imprisoned. Why?

Last spring a United States Army officer acting as official representative of the United Nations negotiated with the brainwashed G.I.'s who refused repatriation. He persuaded some that the American people were sympathetic with their cases and openly promised immunity if they returned. Trusting in the U.S. as the perennial champion of fair play and the world wide symbol of fair play, they returned. Retaliations were swift. This had been stringently exploited by the Communists who have initiated a voluminous propaganda program speciously distinguishing this unfortunate incident as an example of U. S. debauchery and inequality.

Public doubts

Undoubtedly, public confidence in the Armed Services is impaired. It is not that the public condones or excuses the actions of these four men, but it demands that the "good faith" of the U.S. be beyond reproach. It necessitates the removal of all inconsistencies in the mode of justice now extant. It inquires as to whether this two-fold system of justice goes deeper and includes dual conditions of other types.

The Communist propaganda concerning Dickinson and Batchelor must be discredited. The means to this end is a thorough scrutiny of the entire code of uniform military justice. The aroused public opinion apparent since Batchelor's sentencing denotes that this body will demand true military justice.

Last week the Army released information that Major Ambrose H. Nugent, from Merrill, Wisc., had been notified of charges of treason filed against him because of certain activities while a P.O.W. in Korea. The Uniform Code of Military Justice requires that a person charged with violations of the code must be informed. A spokeman for the Army emphasized that this does not necessarily mean that Major Nugent will be courtmartialed. America will vigilantly and anxiously observe the proceedings.

We Locate a Poetess . . .

By Tom Smith

The poetess whose poem, "Villanova," was published in the Catholic Standard and Times more than 30 years ago is still living quietly in the house where she was raised.

Miss Ella G. Farrell, of West Conshohocken, Pa., expressed surprise bordering on amazement when she was told that a typewritten copy of her work had been donated to Villanova's Library.

A retired teacher at West Conshohocken High School, Miss Farrell said she visits the Villanova grounds frequently, even though she has no connections here. However, Miss Farrell remarked that her elder brother, who died about 15 years ago, was a Villanova graduate.

The poetess, who would only admit that she was "more than 16 years of age," said she was moved to set down her thoughts on paper after she was first impressed with the beauty of the campus.

"Villanova" is not the sole work of Miss Farrell. She commented that she frequently contributes poems to the Standard and Times and other publications. But Miss Farrell admitted that she has never had any of her poetry published professionally.

She described her writing as a pleasant avocation and not as a profession. The poem:

Villanova, sublimely grand,
With golden spires and crosses tall,
Rises imposing heavenward—
Majestic—overlooking all:
Green placid loveliness of lawn
With bright and fragrant flowery isles
Diversified by bush and tree,
All beauteous with Nature's smiles;
Meandering avenues wind
Past church and hall and college famed
Within those walls God's Word is taught,
His holy truth and love proclaimed;
Gal flowerbells their censers swing,
And in the branches overhead
A bird choir sings a requiem—
Here nearby sleep the loved and dead.
Outside such charms!
Enraptured—thrilled—
A pause. It is eveningtide
And near the church. The unlocked door
Softly opens. A step inside,
And what reverence fills the soul!
There undimmed swings the altar light
Which speaks of Faith—His presence there
Within the Tabernacle white.
The ring and swing of the Angelus
Soon, vibrant and sweet, to and fro
Echoes through the grand old church,
As you kneel in the evening glow.
God's love for Mary it proclaims,
Ave Maria—shadows fall
On Villanova, sublimely grand
With golden spires and crosses tall.

NOTICE

Because of Thanksgiving recess, no VILLANOVAN will appear until Dec. 7. Deadline for copy for the next issue is Dec. 2.

Dayhop Speaks

Let's Solve Unity Problem

Dear Editor:

I am taking up my pen—I must use a pen for as yet I cannot afford a typewriter—to write a few words in connection with a campus problem that has often been discussed, only feebly combatted and unfortunately never solved. It has troubled me for three years now, and I think that finally the proper time has arrived for me to contribute a few of my own humble opinions on the subject.

A Beginning

Not that I think that this writing will solve the problem, but perhaps someone will take it from here and ultimately mold a solution.

It is simple logic that anything divided against itself can never be strong and cannot prosper. In order for any organization to succeed, it must have inner unity and strength, or INTEGRATION. In effect, our Villanova campus is divided against itself. Despite the immature nature of the division's cause, it has prevailed for years.

Regretably for us and future Villanovans there seems to be no indication that this somewhat ridiculous situation will be rectified in the near future.

Two Factions

Regarding almost any campus proposal, no matter whether it be of an academic, political, social or athletic nature, an instinctive force seems to divide our student body into two factions, dayhops and residents.

The resident will tell you that the dayhop is lethargic, that in campus affairs he displays a rather remarkable and obvious lack of interest. On the other hand, the dayhop, in defense of his position, maintains that the resident student, by reason of his inherited, closely-knit association with organization, had very early gained control of all student activities on campus, and that such a coup d'etat had nothing whatsoever to do with superior leadership on the latter's part.

Still Contention

This constant state of contention becomes manifest continually in elections, fraternities, committees, and practically any other school organization or function. It arises repeatedly. It is unveiled, observed, discussed, and condemned—but never actually defeated.

The usual course of events has shown that the dayhops will make an attempt to unite in an effort to bring their faction into power. But the residents, because of their proximity to each other, have a decided advantage and have an access to college facilities which the dayhops could never even hope to attain.

Efficient Machine

It is no great marvel that they retain this power and possess a more efficient machine. This is the evil. The dayhops, faced with failure in seeking "power," assume an attitude of disinterest, a disinterest which constitutes in reality a defense mechanism—an attempt to cover their repeated failures.

In the final analysis the whole of our university is actually suffering. We ourselves are the real losers in this situation which reduces itself to some disguised form of caste system. It is contrary to the spirit of fraternization which is necessary to a university.

Now what is the solution? It lies in the rather axiomatic statement that, for an organization to prosper, its members must think and act as one. After all, we are all Villanova men, and we all have basically the same problems, interests and ambitions. We must learn to work together for a common end, which should be the good of all. The good of all is the good of Villanova University.

Let's Cooperate

Learning to cooperate, to synchronize our every thought and action, to move as a single unit will bind us into a student body which will be infinitely more capable of coping with each campus problem that may arise, and solving it for the common good.

It would strengthen our spirit and would rekindle the dwindling sense of fraternity within us. Both factions must make concessions; and when they do so, the student organizations of Villanova University will grow and prosper.

A Senior dayhop,
P. Thomas Tulli

'Noche Espanola' On Tap For Spanish Club Members

Carlos Conde, Spanish Club president, announced last week that the club's traditional "Noche Espanola" will be held in C & F Auditorium Monday, Dec. 6 at 8 p.m. The affair will be open to all card carrying members of the Spanish Club and their dates.

Columbian Consul

The main speaker will be Don Carlos Borrero, the Columbian Consul in Philadelphia. In addition to Senor Borrero, many other distinguished personages from various Spanish-American consulates are expected to attend.

Father Lorenzo Lozano, O.S.A.

The program also includes a literary musical and a play, both of which will be put on by Spanish Club members.

This year's dramatic presentation will be "Angelina, Colegiala Pianista" or "Angelina, College Girl and Pianist." The play was written, directed and produced by Rev. Lorenzo Lozano, O.S.A., Spanish Club moderator, and stars Blanquita Bird of Rosemont as Angelina.

Others in the cast include Grace Nogueras and Alice Martinez, both of Rosemont, and Felix Lamela, Miquel Paez, Luis Haddock and Lawrence Macatee, of Villanova.

Production Dedicated

The entire production is dedicated to Don German de Caso, the Spanish Consul in Philadelphia, for his assistance in obtaining Spanish scholarships for Villanova students.

Although only members of the Spanish Club may attend, President Conde warns that those who wish good seats had better come early since a large turnout is expected. Refreshments will be served.

Licopoli Resigns; Schiller Named Band Conductor

Appointment of sophomore Bob Schiller as student conductor of the Villanova Band was announced last week by Rev. Joseph J. Burns, O. S. A., Band moderator.

Schiller, an accounting major, succeeds Senior Frank Licopoli, who resigned because of the press of his engineering studies.

The new conductor said he realized the job would involve plenty of responsibility but he was looking forward to assuming his duties because, "I do love music."

Schiller, who plays trumpet in the band, promised an active season for the concert band next spring. Hospitals and other institutions in the area will be visited, he remarked.

Besides his new duties, Schiller leads his own dance combo and the Villanovans, the school dance orchestra.

Honor System Subject for Student Council

The regular meeting of Student Council was held last night immediately after the football rally for the Fordham game.

Discussion centered around "old business" which had carried over from the previous meeting, Nov. 8. Jim Mink reported on his inquiry into seeing if the library could be opened on Sunday afternoon and evening for students' use.

Dick Segrave-Daly reported on his investigation into the matter of an arrangement whereby a student would not be given more than one test on any day.

Other reports and discussions centered around such varying topics as the possibility of eventually setting up an honor system, opening the Field House on Sundays and attempting to create adequate "waiting room" facilities for visitors.

The next meeting was scheduled for Dec. 6.

At the previous meeting Nov. 8 all the above points had been raised as motions and passed by Council. In addition, plans were discussed for the active participation of Villanova seniors and band in New York's St. Patrick's Day Parade.

A decision on this matter will be forthcoming. The meeting was highlighted by Dick Hepburn's motion to set up an investigating committee to study the possible creation of an honor system at Villanova.

March Publicity

"We hope all the men will be as generous as possible," commented Haley. "There'll be plenty of advance notices up to remind everyone of the collections, and we're looking for a very successful total for benefit of the orphans."

Horan and Steinfelt, hard at work with various preparations during the past three weeks, will lead a group of some 45 junior entertainers, laden down with gifts and refreshments, to the Dec. 9 party at the orphanage.

Seniors Set For Fordham Game

Play Finale For Villanova Saturday

Nine Villanova gridders will play their last game for the Blue and White when the Wildcats meet the Fordham Rams Saturday afternoon at the Polo Grounds.

These seniors will lead the team in an effort to avert the first winless season for the school in 31 years. The Reagan men will also be trying to repeat last season's victory over their New York rivals.

Like Villanova, Fordham has been having a poor year in football. In their last two games, though, the Rams have displayed great improvement while losing a one-point decision to Holy Cross and a two touchdown decision to Syracuse.

Nine To Be Honored

The nine seniors — Stan Brzenk, John Giordano, John Giordano, John Helm, Dan Hurley, Joe Leichtweis, Mike Mayock, Dick Scott, John Sullivan, and Joe Viverito—all of whom are ready for Saturday's game, plus injured Bill McGarry and team manager Larry McGrath, will be honored at the football banquet at the Broadwood Hotel on Dec. 15.

During their four years of varsity play, these men have all made their contribution to Villanova football history.

Following in the line of outstanding captains of Wildcat teams is Mike Mayock. Mike's spirit and leadership abilities were the deciding factors in his election to the captaincy.

In his junior year, Mayock was the second-ranking pass receiver on the club. He was a favorite target for Scott and Ferruolo passes this season until a shoulder injury in the Houston game side-lined him. Mike re-entered the lineup in the Vanderbilt game and will be ready for full time work this Saturday.

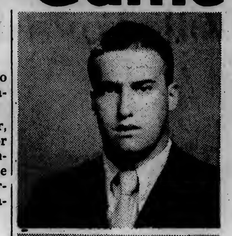
New York Players

Three senior linemen will be playing before hometown fans for the first time this year when Villanova journeys to New York. Joe Leichtweis, of Harrison, New York, Joe Viverito, Garden City, New York, and Stan Brzenk, Jersey City, New Jersey are the men who have the chance to end their collegiate careers in their own backyards.

Leichtweis, a husky 225 pound tackle, showed great promise in his freshman and sophomore seasons and was looked upon as a great prospect for future years. A painful back injury sustained in Joe's third campaign, however, ruined his chance for stardom. While he has occasionally shown signs of returning to his old form, Joe has never shaken the effects of his injury.

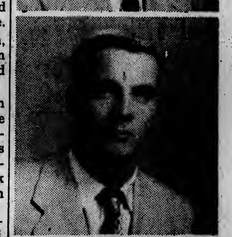
A three-year letter winner, center Joe Viverito is known for his hustle. A concientious competitor, Video has shared the pivot duties with Nelson Marshall during the past two seasons.

Brzenk a Starter



After three years of reserve action, Stan Brzenk became a starter in his senior year. Always a good blocker, Stosh developed his defensive ability this year and became a valuable two-way man on the Wildcat eleven.

Aggressive Dan Hurley is another Villanova lineman playing his last game in the Blue and White uniform against Fordham. A hard-charging tackle, Dan was a principal reason that Wildcat opponents found it hard to move through the V. U. line.



John Giordano, John Helm, Dick Scott, and John Sullivan are the senior backs who end their careers this Saturday.

Giordano and Helm have been prolific ground-gainers for the past four years. Speed is Giordano's chief asset and power is Helm's. Both men are two-sport athletes; G. I. is a track man and Erf is a first baseman

Shamrocks Defeat Galloping Ginks For Intramural Football Title

By Bill Hill

Shamrocks Grab Football Crown; Loop Season Begins

Irish eyes were smiling last Monday night and for good reason. The Shamrocks turned back the Galloping Ginks, 19-0 to reign as intramural football champions. Before a crowd of 300 fans, the Shamrocks, led by Captain Forhecz, displayed a team that was too aggressive for the Ginks. The passing duo of Dave Crowley to Eddie Zipf got in the hair of the losers all afternoon, as they combined for two touchdown plays which sewed up the tilt. Medals will be awarded to the victors, who went through the season without a loss on the record.

Tournament Results

In the football playoffs, the Wonders from Mendel League were defeated by the champion Shamrock, winners of the Austin League. The Early Morning title went to the Ginks by virtue of a forfeit. A word of praise must be extended to the officials of the league. Of the 580 students participating, not one serious injury was reported. This was due to the fact that sportsmanship and fair play were stressed by the referees.

Cage Season Opens

With the last boot of the pigskin, the dribbling of basketballs was heard in Alumni Gym. Ed Geisz reports that a new record has been set for team entries, but scheduling difficulties have forced some teams out of the competition. However, he announced, "Instead of having the limit set at ten men, we will raise it to 15 players per team. This will give the boys on the teams that were dropped a chance to play." A late report shows that Jocko Collins and his N. B. A. staff will not be able to ref the games this year. So again, the urgent plea goes out for some men to call the fouls.

Ice Skating Starts

Ice Skating has entered into the intramural program. Weekly trips will be made to the Philadelphia Arena, and the admission is FREE. Skates can be rented for a nominal price.

Wrestling Prevails

Wrestling continued to gather momentum this past week. To date, there are about fifty in the group, which meets from five to seven in the evening at Alumni Hall. New members are welcome.

Runners 3rd; Delaney Wins

By Joe Kinney

Villanova's speedy harriers concluded a most successful season by snaring third place in the annual IC4A Championships over the Van Cortlandt Park course in New York on November 15.

Unmentioned in pre-meet selections, the Wildcats registered 136 points, topped only by Manhattan and Pittsburgh. Penn State captured the fourth position while Georgetown, a previous conqueror of the Main Liners, rounded out the first five in a field of more than one hundred entrants.

Kopil Places Eighth

John Kopil, who has consistently paced the Blue and White all season, was the first of his team to complete the five-mile jaunt in a blistering 25:10, good enough for eighth place. Alex Breckenridge, who held the runner-up spot throughout the initial half of the race, faltered, but finished twenty-first with a respectable 25:49 time. George Browne (29th), Bill Rock (36th), and Al Peterson (58th) also ran fine races and received medals, for their efforts, while a trophy was presented to the entire team.

George Terry of Boston University was the individual leader, with George King, N.Y.U., trailing by 40 yards. Terry's 24:36.4 clocking was just six seconds slower than the course record established by Charley Cappozolli. Collectively, the first ten men ran the fastest time in the history of the event.

Delaney Leads Novices

Ron Delaney, a first-year man from Ireland, was awarded a gold medal for winning the freshmen three-mile race in 14:53.5 over Michael Midler, a member of the victorious Cornell squad. Delaney commented —"I was delighted to win my first race in America. I hope I will be fortunate enough to win more races for Villanova."

Beat LaSalle

On November 9, the hill-and-dalers drubbed a local foe, LaSalle, by a convincing 17-38 count at 20th and Olney Avenue. The Mainliners snared five of the first six places in recording their fourth triumph in seven outings. Kopil, Breckenridge, and Browne copped the first three positions in that order, as Joe Merkins, the Explorers' speedster, strided home just ahead of Bill Rock and Al Peterson for fourth place.

Dixie Opponents Extend Villanova Losing Streak

"Roughin' the passer, huh? Roughin' the passer!"

Ask any member of the football team what he thinks of the vaunted southern hospitality, and he will tell you that he never heard of it. The Dixie teams have mauled Villanova this year. This has never happened before, to our recollection. The past two games saw the Wildcats lose to Mississippi State and Vanderbilt. On the thirteenth of November, Coach Reagan's boys locked horns with Missippi State in Mobile. Taking their eighth loss, Villanova went down 27-0.

Southern Defense Strong

The Mississippi State defense absorbed everything that Villanova threw at it. Not since Pickett's ill-fated charge has an offense been halted with such finality. Villanova could get only fifty-five yards in the air and on the ground. The Southerners amassed four hundred and thirty-three yards at the visitors' expense. Laurels were given to Ron Wood and Jack Helm—Oustanding in defeat.

Wildcats Travel Again

The Mainliners had hardly finished licking their wounds, when again they were called to march southward. In Nashville, their march was stopped by Vanderbilt, 34-19. There was a bit of ironic comedy in this contest, as both teams were winless at game time. After playing the first quarter to a draw, Vanderbilt pushed two scores across in the second period. They scored three times in the second half. Villanova's scores came singly in the second, third, and last quarters.

Both teams used the pass effectively. After two Vanderbilt scores in the second quarter, Villanova got started with Dick Scott's fourteen yard pass to Mike Mayock. Two plays later, Scott tossed the ball forty-one yards to McComb, who scored. With the opening of the third quarter,, Vandy scored their third touchdown on a pass from Looney to Stephenson. At this point Villanova: first in the air, Scott to Mayock, and: then on the ground—Giordano scoring. ing. After a Vanderbit score put them in front 27-13, Scott hit McComb for another score. A Vanderbilt interception accounted for their final score.

Fordham Closes Season

On Saturday, the Wildcats forsake the not-so-warm South for the northern wilds of the Polo Grounds. The Villanovans will meet Fordham, another impotent team. This game is the traditional windup for Villanova, and the team will be up to salvage what they can from a statistically inglorious season. Fordham will attempt to avenge the game which they feel was stolen last year by the Wildcats.

Frosh Win Silver Bowl Title; Magee Voted Top Player

By Ed Canfield

Villanova's freshman gridiron team successfully concluded its 1954 schedule with a convincing 25-2 victory over Bullis, of Washington, D. C., at the latter's stadium.

In chalking up their fourth victory against a single setback, Joe Roger's Wildcats scored in every period to capture the second annual Silver Bowl game, sponsored by the Silver Spring, Md., Boys' Club.

Bill Magee's passing arm accounted for two touchdowns. The stellar quarterback, who received a "Player of the Day" trophy for his efforts, also intercepted a pair of aerials.

Wildcats Break Ice

The victors struck midway in the opening stanza when Magee fired a 35 yard strike to Dave Intrabartola in the end zone. Chuck "Howdy" Bastian converted. In the second quarter, Don Gallagher with a five yard end sweep into paydirt. Bastian's conversion was wide. The half ended with no further scoring.

In the third period, Magee again demonstrated his passing prowess when he connected with his favorite target, Intrabartola, on the Bullis 15-yard-line. Dave raced the rest of the way for his second TD.

Punt Blocked

The period ended with Villanova holding a 19-0 advantage. Midway in the final quarter, Americo "Amoco" Sapienza's punt was blocked and the ball squirted out of his own end zone for an automatic safety.

In the closing minutes of the game, Sapienza, a fine broken field runner, intercepted a Bullis pass on his 30 and raced 70 yards over the rain-soaked, soggy turf for the final tally of the game.

With such an impressive showing in every game this year, the present freshman team should contribute greatly to the success of next year's varsity.

Severance Drills Wildcat Quintet As Opener Nears

Preparing to face one of the toughest schedules in the country, Villanova's basketball team has been working diligently these past few weeks preparatory to the season's opener against West Chester on December 4th.

All of last years abundant talent, including Bob Schafer, the All-American candidate, has returned. Also back are Jack Devine, last year's captain and rebounding ace, and lanky Jim Smith, who came off the freshman team last January to greatly aid the varsity in its remaining contests.

Veteran Juniors

John Cirino and Tom Foley, both tall and aggressive, will give the team the needed height and experience under the boards. Two other veteran, Larry Tierney and Marty Milligan, are essential in Villanova's front court game.

Sophs Promising

Sophomores, and many of them, will definitely be a great asset to the squad. Bob Powers, Al Griffith, and Jack Weissman have an excellent chance to break into the line-up before the season gets underway. All were leading contributors on last year's great freshman team, and will be invaluable on both the bench and the hardwoods.

Last year's captain, Jack Devine, has this to say about the team: "We are way deeper in all positions this year, and we still have Bobby Schafer.". A sophomore, Al Griffith, fighting hard for a starting assignment, said: "We have a great team with lots of spirit and we should be tops. I think we have a team the school can be proud of."

SPORTS CHATTER

150-Pound Football

By Joe Heaps

When Coaches Lou Cassella and Steve Smolzinski called the first practice for 150-pound football, fifty-eight candidates showed up. Lou and Steve had two weeks in which to form a team to play the five game schedule. During these two weeks fundamentals had to be learned, conditioning of the players had to take place, the various positions on the team had to be assigned, offensive and defensive alignments had to be chosen, plays had to be learned. It was a task that would have tried the most experienced of coaches. Yet, neither Lou nor Steve had any, coaching back ground. Furthermore, there were not enough uniforms for all the players. Many became discouraged and quit. Others who desired to play did not have class schedules that were compatible with practice sessions. By the end of the season, twenty-five players were left, some of whom were handicapped by minor injuries.

Was it any wonder that the team scored only six points during the year and suffered five straight defeats? Could Villanova be expected to beat schools like Princeton and Navy who had fifty-man squads, paid coaches, and a solid organization for 150-pound ball?

No one showed much concern for the team. The total home attendance for two games was between 150 and 200 fans. Little encouragement was given to the members of the team.

SPIRIT REMAINS HIGH

The amazing thing about the season was that the spirit of the players remained high. Despite taking their knocks each week, they eagerly looked forward to the next game. Playing the game solely for the enjoyment of it, they displayed the amateur enthusiasm for which college football is noted.

However, it isn't fair to the players, or to Villanova, to have the school represented in inter-collegiate sports under the present conditions. Villanova should either keep up with 150-pound football programs of the rival schools or drop the sport.

WEAKNESSES IN SET-UP

There are several glaring weaknesses in the present lightweight set-up. First of all, the team should have an experienced coach. Certainly, Lou and Steve put forth a sincere effort in guiding the club, but they could not be expected to coach with the finesse of a veteran. Secondly, the team needs a trainer. At away games, and many times during practices, no trainer was available. Also, more uniforms and better equipment are needed. In the first part of the season, several players had to sit out practices because there were not enough uniforms to go around. Other men could not practice because of afternoon schedules. Athletic schedules should be provided for these players. Lastly, the team should get some encouragement from the student body. This year the support for team was practically non-existent.

Let's give the 150's a break.

LETTER OF THANKS

Here is a letter received by the VILLANOVAN:

Dear Sports Editors,

Steve and I were afforded one of the most pleasant experiences of our years at Villanova when the job of coaching the 150's was given to us. It gave us the opportunity to see football played in its true color. We had men who were obligated to no one but themselves, who despite their discouraging record of three years, religiously devoted their time and effort to daily practice sessions merely for the love of the game. They played to empty stands, received nothing, and asked for nothing.

On behalf of Steve and myself, I want to thank the whole squad for their great spirit and sincere co-operation. You have shown us, in your endeavor, more than any victory ever could.

(Signed) Lou Cassella

Ring chairman Owen Hickey, with committee members Steve Bernocco and Bernie Dunne on the left and right, looks over the new Junior Class rings which have been tried on by members of the Class of 1956 yesterday and again today in final fittings. Dieges and Clust representative George Packer will be in Father McLaughlin's Student Activities Office in Mendel Hall until around 3:30 this afternoon to: have the Juniors who ordered last May and paid their summer deposits try on their rings and check for errors; take new orders from those who did not order last May. Rings will be delivered before the Christmas holidays; the total price is to be paid on delivery.

"Drinking Song" Included in Singers' Works

Dean Harold Gill Reuschlein, director of the Villanova Singers, announced that the choral group will sing at chapel services through the remainder of the school year on alternate Mondays and Tuesdays.

The 70-man organization, which has doubled in size since last year, has begun work on secular music, including "The Drinking Song" from the "Student Prince," Dartmouth's "Winter Song," and "Lullaby" by Brahms.

In preparation for the holidays, a number of Christmas hymns and carols are being readied. In addition to the Annual Faculty Dinner Dance, the Singers are expected to perform at neighboring girls' colleges, including Chestnut Hill and Rosemont.

Marriage Lecture Title Contest Offered By NFCCS

A contest to find an appropriate title for a series of marriage preparation lectures to be held during Lent at LaSalle College has been announced by the La Salle chapter of the National Federation of Catholic College Students.

Prize for the most suitable title is a $5 certificate valid in the winner's campus book store. Deadline for submitting entries is Dec. 10, announced Rev. George McLaughlin, O. S. A., Dean of Student Activities.

The series programmed for the six Sunday evenings of Lent will present eminent speakers who will lecture and answer questions on such topics as "Dating, Courtship and Engagement"; "A Doctor's Viewpoint: Differences of Psychology Between the Sexes"; "Moral Acts of Married Life"; "Economic Matters Before and After Marriage"; "Christianizing Family Life"; "Your Children—Home Training and Sex Instruction."

Contestants may leave entries in the Student Activities Office, 222 Mendel.

Faculty Wives Aid in Juniors' Orphans Benefit

The St. John's Orphans' Party, sponsored by the University's Junior Class, received added impetus last week when the Faculty Wives Club announced that it intends to lend its assistance through donation of gifts.

In return, about a dozen Orphans' Committee members will donate their time at a party for the children of faculty members on Dec. 4. Each of the children will be asked to bring presents, which will be turned over to the Orphanage by the Juniors. Dick Fitzpatrick, Entertainment chairman, has asserted that the program will include selections by the Villanova Singers, plus several skit presentations.

At its last meeting, Nov. 11, the club heard a lecture by Mrs. William M. Sheehan, who presented to the ladies "a clear picture of conditions in Europe through the eyes of an American wife, most observant of these details which do not normally show up in the cold statistics of professional observers."

CAMPUS ORGANIZATION NEWS

DRILL TEAM

Only one senior, Steve Lyons, will march with Villanova's crack NROTC drill team prior to the Philadelphia Eagles-Washington Redskins football game Sunday in Connie Mack Stadium.

Although Drillmaster Walt Gould said he has not made the final selections for the team, he announced that Lyons would be the lone fourth year man to march.

Gould estimated five or six freshmen would be included on the team, which is dominated by sophomores. Twenty-four men will perform, the drillmaster added.

Gould also announced that Junior Bill Doyle has been drilling the team in its early morning workouts to gain experience so that if for some reason Gould could not lead the team, an experienced drillmaster will be ready to take over.

ASSEMBLY

A student assembly will be held in the Field House next Tuesday, Nov. 30, from 1:30-2:20 p.m., Very Rev. James A. Donnellon, O. S. A., Villanova president, announced last week.

Father Donnellon said he and Rev. Edward M. Dwyer, O. S. A., University Dean, will address the student body.

No classes will meet during the assembly period, the Father President stated.

LKD

Members of Lambda Kappa Delta, science fraternity, will hold a communion breakfast Dec. 5, Preident Tom Gumina announced last week. Mass and Holy Communion at 10 a.m. in C&F Auditorium, followed by breakfast, will be the order of events, Gumina said.

The president last week said that final plans for the breakfast speaker had not been made.

A.I.E.E.—I.R.E.

Forty-eight members of Villanova's Electrical engineering society turned out for a field trip to the Burroughs Research Laboratories in Paoli, Wednesday, Nov. 17. Highlight of the A. I. E. E.—I. R. E. excursion was a demonstration of the computer company's newest "giant brain."

The engineers were welcomed by Dr. Merritt Williamson, director of research for the Burroughs Corporation's world-wide installations. The budding electronic wizards were then conducted on a tour of the ultra-modern facilities at the lab, which was completed this year.

Main feature of the visit was the demonstration of Burroughs' new E101 desk-size computer, which represents the latest development in the electronic computer industry.

James Garland, Robert Gabasino and Arthur Flores show earnestness and anticipation as they represent the Law School in a four-way Moot Court competition with Pittsburgh, Penn and Temple last week.

Law Students Down Penn, Temple, Lose To Pitt

With wins over the University of Pennsylvania and Temple University Law Schools, Villanova's three-man team earned the right to represent this district, along with the University of Pittsburgh, in the National Moot Court Competition in New York City two weeks hence.

Winning teams from districts all over the country will meet there to decide the national winner.

Robert Garbarino, Arthur Flores, and James Garland comprised the Villanova side, with the former two doing the arguing before the court. The victory of the second-year men against the two local schools preceded a loss in the finals on Saturday to Pittsburgh. The other schools were represented by third-year students.

Team Praised

The bench for the final competition against Pittsburgh was presided over by the Hon. Horace Stern, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. In his remarks before the decision he cited Villanova's team for its "amazing" performance for a school which has been in existence only fifteen months, against such seasoned opponents.

In the wins against Pennsylvania and Temple, Garbarino was especially commended by the presiding judges of the three-men bench for his presentation. Friday afternoon's session had Hon. John W. Lord, Jr., Judge of the U. S. Circuit Court, at its head, and the evening period was presided over by the Hon. Herbert Goodrich, Judge of the U. S. Court of Circuit Appeals, Third Circuit, and formerly Dean, University of Pennsylvania Law School.

Mr. O'Toole Advises

Mr. Thomas O'Toole, Associate Professor of Law at Villanova, was faculty advisor for the team.

After the argument, the sponsoring Philadelphia Bar Association was host at a luncheon for the entrants at which Chancellor Rhodes of the Philadelphia Bar, and Judge Biggs, Presiding Judge, U. S. Court of Circuit Appeals, Third Circuit, were the main speakers.

Attorney Tells DPM:

Opportunity, Connections Available To Politician

The time a lawyer spends working in politics will get him laughs—besides giving him the opportunity to know judges and to make connections which will gain him legal work.

These were some of the points outlined by Mr. John Geisz, former assistant United States attorney, in a talk to Delta Pi Mu members last Wednesday night.

Geisz, a practicing attorney for 11 years, reminded the 70 arts fraternity members present that by becoming acquainted with judges, lawyers may put themselves in line for appointments to legal positions and legal work.

The Democratic leader of the 22nd ward in Philadelphia. Mr. Geisz is a member of the Democratic County Committee. He is a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania Law School and the Wharton School.

Although politics may give the lawyer connections, Mr. Geisz admitted that political activity may cause some citizens to regard the lawyer as a "shady" character.

In the business meeting which followed the talk, President John DeRemigis extended deadline for paying of dues until Dec. 1.

Cheerleader, Coeds

Garrett's program included a constitution which he had drawn up; expansion of the cheerleading staff to nine members — a man for each letter of the school name; a student to dress as a wildcat to cavort in front of the Villanova stands; improvement of the cheers.

Sur Roars Again

In some quarters, Villanova's football policy has been derided for the club's taking four trips into the deep Southland, but the extended tours have had a refreshing effect upon alumni.

Athletic Secretary Bill Ryan reports that on the trip to Mobile, Aala., for the Mississippi Southern game, an impromptu reunion was held in the Battle House Hotel when about a dozen Villanova alumni and friends, including Ens. Bob Sur '54, a pre-flight trainee at Pensacola, joined in a spirited singing session, Ryan said.

The group came up from Pensacola.

Physics, Math Groups to Hear Prof. Monahan

Soon mid-semester grades will be subjected to parental observation, and some Villanova students will be asking themselves why they did not pull better marks.

To answer this question, Dr. Edward J. Monahan, of the philosophy department, will address a combined meeting of the Physics Club and Mu Alpha Theta, Math Society, Dec. 2 at 10:30 a. m. in 215 Mendel.

In his talk, "Study Habits—A Short Cut to Success in College," Dr. Monahan said he will present practical aspects of study, with a view to making study pay off more handsomely.

Math Society President Frank Orlando, in recognizing the need for the talk, said correct study habits were "fundamentally essential" for all college students.

According to Dave Vachon, Physics Club President, this talk is the first in a series of popular lectures on science and related subjects which the club is sponsoring.

Vachon also cleared up a misunderstanding about eligibility for membership in the Physics Club. He said that not only physics majors but any student may join the organization.

'Pillbox' Guard Will Enforce Vehicle System

An around-the-clock watch will begin "soon" at the Ithan Avenue entrance to prevent all but authorized vehicles from entering the grounds.

In making the announcement, Rev. Edward B. McKee, O.S.A., University Vice-President, said that only drivers who could show the guard the green identification card issued by the Vice-President's Office would be allowed on the campus. Delivery trucks will also be admitted.

"Leary Hall' Readying

The building where the guard will stay is nearly complete, and Father McKee said he hoped to have the watchman posted sometime this week. Constructed by Joseph R. Farrell Co.—builders of Sullivan and Dougherty Halls — the guard house has been tabbed "Leary Hall." Thomas Leary, the superintendent of the Student Union building construction, guided the guard house construction.

The vice-president added that prohibition of cars from the campus might bring a sense of security and peace to pedestrain-students who often have to dodge vehicles speeding along the narrow campus thoroughfares.

Authorized Parking

Cars admitted to the grounds must be parked in authorized places, Father McKee added. He said he hoped to have spaces assigned to individual drivers.

Drivers who are not permitted to enter the chained barrier may take a right turn and cross a newly-laid out road where they may re-enter Ithan Avenue.

Father McKee noted that the permits will be issued through his office and will expire at the end of each academic year.

In his interview, Father McKee also passed on a warning from the Pennsylvania Railroad, threatening to fine student drivers who continue to leave cars in the railroad's two parking lots.

Pat Haley, left, and Pete Cassidy, orphans' collection co-chairmen, prompt healthy smiles from several "Johnnies" at St. John's Orphanage, while telling the kids of the annual party and outing coming up this Thursday and Saturday, respectively. Anyone interested in signing up to take out an orphan Saturday is urged to see the orphans' projects chairmen, the class officers, or sign their names on lists for that purpose in the Chaplain's Office and Pie Shoppe. Those going Saturday are asked to be outside the chow hall at 9:30 Saturday. Bus transportation will be provided for those without cars.

Be a Saturday Santa Claus:

Villanovans Fete 'Johnnies' At Annual Party & Outing

The University's Junior Class, having completed half of its four-part orphans' benefit program, looks once again to the generosity of all Villanova men this coming week-end, when the annual outing for the youngsters of St. John's Orphanage will be held.

Day after tomorrow the Juniors alone go about the execution of the yearly Orphanage party, featuring refreshments, gifts, Santa Claus, and entertainment for some 400 children at the West Philadelphia home.

Charity Ball Success

These final two events follow on the heels of a very successful completion of the other porjects—the classroom collections and the Charity Ball, held at the Field House Friday evening. A total of $461.02 was obtained through the religion section collections, and 639 Charity Ball tickets, at a dollar a ticket, were bought up by the student body.

JUNIORS, NOTE:

With final fittings having been completed before the holidays, the new Class of 1956 rings will be delivered by Dieges and Clust before Christmas vacation, chairman Owen Hickey has announced. The exact date of delivery will be adequately publicized when it is ascertained, said Hickey, but since it will definitely be prior to the 17th of December, Juniors are urged to have the balance of the price ready as soon as possible.

Orphans projects co-chairmen Mike Horan and Bernie Steinfelt request that all men interested in taking out an orphan Saturday sign their names on the lists provided for that purpose in the Pie Shoppe and the Chaplain's Office, or give their names on a sheet of paper to the committee members or class officers. Bus and automobile transportation will be provided Saturday; all those who sign up are requested to be outside the cafeteria at 9:30. The system to be utilized Saturday is: The orphans will be assigned to Villanovans upon the students' arrival at the Orphanage around 10 a. m.; then comes movies at the Commodore theatre, free of charge, then lunch at Horn and Hardart's, for $1.50 for student and youngster combined. Past this expense, the student is on his own regarding gift-buying, refreshment and entertainment for his "Johnny".

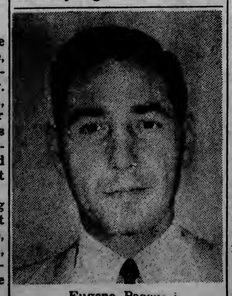
Inaugural Banquet Spurs Expansion Drive Kick-off

The fund-raising campaign to finance Villanova's multi-million dollar development program was kicked off Thursday night at a Board of Associates dinner in the Field House.

A group of over 350 men, composed of faculty members, university administrators, newsmen and prominent business and professional leaders, heard Hon. James A. Farley, recently named as general campaign chairman, call for active support of the development foundation by the Board of Associates and other businessmen among the guests.

Farley Chief Speaker



Mr. Farley, a former postmaster-general and long a friend of Villanova, delivered the major address of the evening, reminding businessmen of their vital stake to help strengthen private higher-education institutions such as Villanova.

Pointing out the indispensability of Villanova as a spiritual bulwark, Mr. Farley said, "We businessmen have a responsibility for supporting Villanova and institutions like her . . . for their contribution to the spiritual defenses of the United States and the whole of Western civilization."

Traces Villanova's History

Preceding Mr. Farley were Rev. Francis X. N. McGuire, O. S. A., director of the development foundation, and Very Rev. James A. Donnellon, O. S. A., University president. Father McGuire traced the institution's history, emphasizing the tremendous enrollment rise and physical expansion in recent years.

Father Donnellon, conveying the good wishes of the absent Very Rev. Henry E. Greenlee, O. S. A., rector provincial, pledged the support of the faculty and administration to the development campaign.

Cuts, Honor Plan Topics Of Council

The regular bi-weekly meeting of the Student Council was held last night in C&F Auditorium. After the opening prayer and roll call, Council was opened to the discussion of "old" business.

Dick Hepburn and Bob Fredericks made a report on the progress of their committee looking into the honor system situation. The committee had held a meeting Nov. 29 to incorporate its finding and come up with a definite proposal.

Plan for Tests

Dick Segrave-Daly reported on his findings into the test scheduling problem and presented a plan which he feels will at least partially alleviate this situation.

The problem of seating the Physics Club again came up for discussion, having been reported back from the Fraternities and Societies Committee.

Council also heard a report from Bill Quinn and his committee which was charged with looking into the idea of granting unlimited cuts to "dean's list" students as a reward to them and an inducement to the other students.

After discussion of a few new items and several announcements, the meeting adjourned.

Sunday Library

At the previous meeting Nov. 22, Council had heard a report from Jim Mink, who announced that the plan to open the Library on Sundays had been tentatively approved and would be brought up at the next meeting of the Faculty-Library Committee.

Stricken Suddenly In Class:

University Offers Prayers For Law Student Pascucci

Mass was celebrated this morning in the University chapel for Eugene A. Pascucci, 26, first-year Law School student who died suddenly of a heart attack last Tuesday during class.

Law school students and members of the faculty were present in a group at the Mass.

Pascucci was fatally stricken about 9:25 Tuesday morning and died within fifteen minutes. He did not regain consciousness. Rev. Daniel P. Falvey, O. S. A., Librarian, was summoned upstairs to the classroom immediately after the attack, and administered the last rites.

Services in Pottstown

Funeral services were held Saturday in Pottstown, the student's home. Law students composed many spiritual bouquets and sent several perpetual mass cards, along with a floral wreath, to the funeral. Through the Student Bar Association's Executive Board, rides to Pottstown for the services were arranged for the students.

The former Ursinus College athlete (football four years and wrestling team two) slumped in his seat while the class, conducted by Dean Harold G. Reuschlein, was in progress. Dean Reuschlein immediately summoned the Radnor Fire department rescue squad, with their ambulance and inhalator, a nurse from the School of Nursing, and Dr. Alfred Tron-

Listen, Seniors...

We trust that those seniors who did not attend the class dances were jolted out of their complacecy last week by Father McLaughlin's announcement of the staggering debt which the class has contracted.

It has been too much the practice of many seniors to take no part in class meetings, to give no support to class functions, and then to blame the class officers if attendance fell below par.

Father McLaughlin stated to the class that he does not feel that the present is the time to pass on the responsibility or lack of it of the class officers for the Senior Weekend fiasco.

Although we do not wishto take issue with Father McLaughlin, who has wisely remained above class disputes, we do not agree. To statethat the class has failed without assigning responsibility is simply to condemn the class officer wthout a hearing.

For our part, we feel that Bud Ford and his colleagues did as good a job as possible under very difficult circumstances. It was not their fault that other institutions scheduled dances to conflict with the Villanova dances. Most certainly, it was not their fault that so few seniors bothered to attend the class meetings and then refused to support the decisions taken in those meetings.

What do the class malcontents feel should have been done? Should no action have been taken until they decided to attend a class meeting in sufficient strength to give it the benefit of their advice? They seem to forget that hotel reservations and band contracts cannot be made overnight.

Those who feel they have been "left out" should make it a point to attend the class meeting this Thursday and having done this, to support wholeheartedly the decisions which are taken to bring the class out of the difficulties they themselves have brought about. E. D.

Lest We Forget...

"You know not the time nor the place." Lest we forget the full impact of these warning words of Sacred Scripture, God has seen fit to send us here at Villanova a very timely reminder.

The instrument chosen by the hand of God to bring this reminder to us was Eugene Pasucci, a 26-year-old law student, who suffered a fatal heart attack in class one week ago today. Here was a student like ourselves. One minute he was studying the law in order that he might see justice accorded to all men in the courts of the land; the next minute, he himself stood before the Court of the final Judge waiting for justice to be accorded him. His trial upon earth was ended now. The good deeds of his life were his defense, his case for eternal happiness.

So too with us. One day we also shall have to stand before that great tribunal and its Supreme Judge. The good deeds of our lives and the state of our souls at death will be the deciding factors in that final sentence of Heaven or Hell. Lest we forget, let us prepare for that time and place.

Perpetual Motion Hopes Will Never Be Realized

By Dave Vachon

Ever hear of the ship that was designed to run on the difference in temperature levels of the ocean water layers? Such a ship was actually built in France during the nineteenth century. "This is great!" you say. "Imagine the possibilities. No more question of using fuels, of atomic power. Just run the ship on the heat contained in the water beneath it."

A Fine Idea

Sounds like a good idea, doesn't it? But there is one fly in the ointment. Such a ship would create its own energy. Even if we started the warmer water flowing through the engine, the engine would have to draw on its own energy output to make itself work. Thus we run up against the stone wall known as perpetual motion. What we have just described is perpetual motion of the first kind. In it the machinery creates its own operating energy. It drives itself.

A perpetual motion machine never has been built. And after all these years of effort we can conclude that one never will be built. This conclusion is one basis for what scientists call the second law of thermodynamics. There are to other types of perpetual motion which this law holds to be impossible. What are they?

Picture an engine without an exhaust. Ever see one? No, and you never will, for two heat reservoirs, large bodies of matter at a uniformly constant temperature, are necessary for an engine to operate in a cycle, which it must do to work.

There is yet another type of perpetual motion. This may be illustrated by a wheel, the outer rim of which is attached by pivot sticks of uniform length at a uniform distance from each other. These are mounted in such a fashion that as the wheel spins, each stick has a vertical orientation on the way up, and a radial orientation on the way down. The effect is that on the way down the sticks exert a greater turning force, or torque, than they exert on the way up. Thus once the wheel is started rotating it should never stop except—except for friction. Thus we have the third type of perpetual motion, one which assumes no friction.

They Won't Work

As we have pointed out, none of these systems will work. The laws they violate do not admit of exception. So if anyone ever tries to sell you a machine that runs on its own power, don't buy it brother. It's a dud.

(We will welcome any suggested topics for future discussion in this physical science series.)

Beta Gamma Men Favor Nat'l Topic

By Mark McCormick

Currently, there is a great deal of hullaballo concerning this year's national intercollegiate debate topic: "Resolved that the United States should extend diplomatic recognition to the Communist government of China."

Authorities at our military academies have charged that national policy has been definitely determined in this matter and that therefore it is not a fit subject for controversy. Villanova's debaters learned this early this fall when West Point suggested a "Discussion" on any topic of general interest excepting the national debate topic, which the Villanova men favored discussing.

Beta Gamma Debating Society is finally and definitely going to debate this question.

The mere fact that our government is following a particular national policy at one time is no guarantee that it will continue that policy. History attests to the accuracy of this observation.

Change Possible

On this particular subject, there is special reason for contending that an eventual change is POSSIBLE. Overwhelming historical precedent dictates recognition by our government of a foreign government on a merely de facto basis. In the past the fact that government exists, no matter what its system, has been sufficient basis for recognition. The present case is one notable exception. Opponents of accepting the dicates of precedent can point to the other notable exception, the case of Soviet Russia which was not recognized until 1933.

But even in this case NATIONAL POLICY WAS CHANGED.

Those who argue that recognition does not signify approval, and certainly there are some valid reasons for this position, can certainly not be considered supporters of an immoral governmental system.

Some colleges have stated that they are abandoning this year's debate question because it is not controversial enough; there is "only one side to the question," i.e. non-recognition. This point of view is absurd..

Even if it could be shown that majority of evidence is weighted on one side of this proposition, this would be no reason for rejecting it as subject for debate. It is peculiar to debating that such elements as ability to recognize major issues, presentation, ability at refutation and rebuttal, organization, and debating technique in general play a large role in determining the decision that is given in a particular contest.

But more important than this is the incontrovertible fact that the airing of both sides of an issue necessarily performs the function of enlightenment. It enables the individual to make his own decision. Free trade in ideas, freedom of speech, is an inherent American constitutional ideal. Here is an occasion to definitely prove that this is so.

If it is true that this question is one-sided, why would those who favor this side object to the presentation and evaluation of the facts of the matter?

Their position is untenable for these many reasons.

If You're Looking, Here's Our Ending

(Editor's Note: Due to an oversight in proofreading, an integral portion of an article entitled "Now Let's Answer It . . ." was omitted from the last issue of the VILLANOVAN. The article was a rebuttal of a letter that attempted to refute an original article opposing coeducation. The concluding statements of the rebuttal are therefore presented now, for the sake of unity and clarification.)

Villanova is an institution which is well qualified to meet the need for professional nursing education insofar as it is a superior institution scholastically. And it has never been our contention that Villanova should not be called upon, at least temporarily, to meet this need.

We are still waiting for intelligent refutation of that thesis. It remains our conviction that our arguments are capable of being weighted, but that they cannot be denied.

Campus Comment...

Sixty energetic residents of Father Burns' third floor Alumni were seen bouncing along on an apparent early morning contemplative constitutional at 6:00 a.m. last Tuesday. Some observers suspected that it was some sort of pre-Navy drill forced march, but we are assured that it was nothing more than an educational tour of our scenic campus. It is further reported that all participants were ever-loving, nature-loving volunteers.

OUR DYNAMIC JUNIOR CLASS is trying to make this Christmas a joyous occasion that the St. John's orphans will not soon forget. This enthusiastic effort merits the unreserved support of every Villanova student. Take out an orphan this Saturday. Practice Christian charity, have a good time, and give a fine little man a happy day.

RECENT MIDTERM EXAMS took their usual toll, and one prefect let his would-be scholastic heroes know that he is worried about their failure to come through the battle unscathed. His forceful edicts are deserving of wider publication and application. Among them were orders that: ". . . Bull sessions be kept down to a dull college roar. Before going to another's room be sure you do not need the time for study; also remember that perhaps the poor slob upon whom you intend to inflict your views on life and your dynamic personality may need the time himself . . . If I happen to hear a radio or record player it will be used for a period of no less than one week as a dust collector on my bookcase . . . I will be around from time to time to make sure that you are using your books for their given purpose and not just to hold up the short leg of the bed . . ."

SUFFERING INTRAMURAL BASKETBALL FANS are reported to be taking up a collection to buy an ecomony-size bottle of airwick in order that Alumni Gym may have a sweet smelling holiday season.

Take a Hint

Frantic and hungry noon-time Pie Shop diners complain that busy card players deprive them of a place to sit on their back pockets in order they may eat comfortably.

IT HAS BEEN a sad reflection on our student body that many fine books have been borrowed from our library on an unfortunately permanent basis. Most surprising and most distressing it the information that mong these pilfered volumes are two copies of Maritain's "Preface to Metaphysics" and another treasured tome entitled "Life of Luther." These thieves are defeating their purpose; they are gaining knowledge but disregarding their souls.

Here Is An Active Life . . .

By Bob Ford

Newspaper reporter, advertising manager, military policeman, General Staffer in Washington, OPS public information officer, sales manager of a radio station, and, of late, assistant professor of marketing at Villanova—these jobs hint at the varied and interesting career of Mr. Frederick M. Burgess, Marketing Club moderator.

Beginnings

Mr. Burgess began life inauspiciously enough, but, after co-majoring in economics and English at Haverford, where he graduated in 1928, he was to accept the first of a long series of jobs as a reporter on the New Rochelle (N. Y.) News. When the depression forced the paper out of business, he became publicity manager for an advertising company which also was destined to close up shop.

In 1940, when people were coming to a realization of the imminence of war, Mr. Burgess became Private Burgess of the Military Police. When war began he received his commission and taught for the first time, becoming a senior instructor equivalent to a college's department chairman. He was promoted to captain when he transferred to the General Staff.

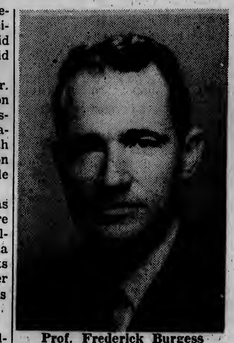
Indiana Teacher

With him when he was senior instructor was a dean of Indiana University who invited Mr. Burgess to Indiana as an instructor. While there he completed work on his masters in marketing. While in Indiana he served as sales manager of WTTS in Bloomington.

Mr. Burgess returned east shortly thereafter and joined the advertising staff of duPont Cellophane Company. Subsequently he held the same position with American Cyanamid and was sales promotion field manager for Columbia Mills.

During the Korean War, Mr. Burgess was public information officer for the Philadelphia district of the Office of Price Stabilization. In conjunction with this, he moderated the television program, "You and Your Uncle Sam."

In 1953 Mr. Burgess was chairman of publicity for Fire Prevention Week in Philadelphia. That year Philadelphia won international award for its fire prevention program after being adjudged best in this country.



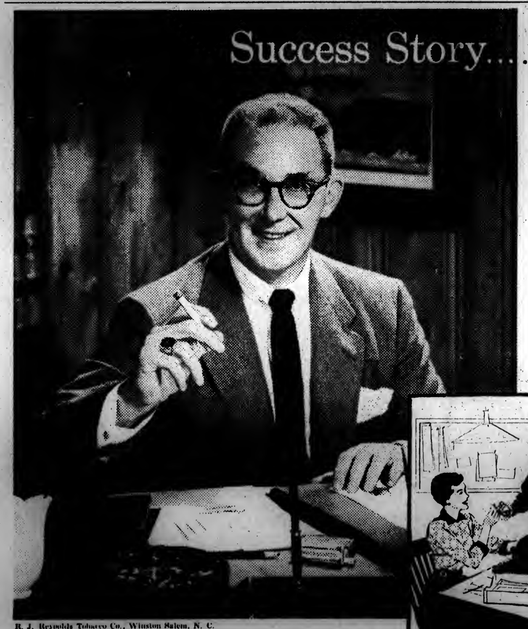
Arrival in 1953

Mr. Burgess arrived at Villanova in the spring of 1953 to replace Hugh W. Johnson III. At the same time he was named faculty moderator of the Marketing Club, a position which Mr. Johnson had held. Two days after his appointment to the faculty he contracted, of all things, the mumps.

Still Busy

In addition to his responsibilities as professor and moderator, Mr. Burgess finds time to teach evening school at Drexel, and work on his doctorate at the University of Pennsylvania. Between classes he is a collection agent for Signal-U Service Cmpany. He has also done work for several Philadelphia research agencies.

Mr. Burgess is married and has two sons who "help" their dad with his avocation, building hi-fi sets. Biggest drawback in this venture, he admits, is the expense. He has installed a small set which includes tape recordings and speakers through his house.



Prof. Frederick Burgess

He announced that the Marketing Club will visit New York where they will study operations of the Cotton exchange. In previous years the organization had visited Philadelphia. George MacElwee, a Villanova alumnus and an employee of the Philadelphia branch of Merrill, Lynch, Pierce, Finner, and Beane, will show a film on the operation of the Grain Exchange. A continuous performance wil be offered with showings at 10:30, 11:30 and 12:30 on Dec. 14 at Commerece and Finance auditorium.

FRENCH CLUB—

Mrs. Lugarch, of Gwynedd-Mercy College, will speak to a meeting of the French Club at 7:30 p.m. Monday in the Blue Room of the Field House.

Student Union Building Renamed Dougherty Hall

Villanova's rising Student Union Building has been renamed Dougherty Hall, Very Rev. James A. Donnellon, O. S. A., University President, announced last week.

The building is being named for Very Rev. Joseph M. Dougherty, O. S. A., who died suddenly Sept. 13 while serving in his fourth year as Prior Provincial of the Augustinian Fathers of the Province of St. Thomas.

The name was changed from University Hall, because the Board of Trustees wanted to honor the memory of the man who was a motivating force in the erection of the $2.5 million structure, Father Donnellon said.

Explaining it was Villanova's policy to name buildings for deceased university officials, the Father President said that Father Dougherty was deeply interested in Villanova, and the trustees thought it would be appropriate to rename the eagerly awaited student union building.

DES Induction Requirements Are Outlined

Villanova's third group of candidates for induction into Delta Epsilon Sigma, National Catholic Honor Society, will be elected by the University next spring, announced Rev. Robert M. Sullivan, O. S. A., Dean of the School of Arts and Sciences.

The primary basis for election is quality of scholarship. To be eligible for induction a student must be a senior in the School of Arts and Sciences, have completed at least half of his undergraduate work at Villanova and have a cumlative grade point average of 3.0 or more through his junior year.

Four on Committee

The Committee of Elections will be composed of four faculty members of the School of Arts and Sciences. On this year's committee will be Rev. Edward F. Jenkins, O. S. A., Ph. D.; Rev. John J. McShea, O. S. A., M. A.; Dr. John A. McClain, and Dr. John I. McEnerney.

The committee is divided evenly between the arts and sciences as well as between lay and religious faculty members, Father Sullivan added.

Most of the work in selecting prospective members of the society has already been accomplished by the stringent eligibility requirements. To date there are only 15 men in the school who can qualify, said Father Sullivan.

Eight Finalists

This number will be cut down even farther to eight, or ten per cent of the school's seniors, by the Committee of Elections. The elect eight will be decided upon the comparative merits of a paper they will submit to the committee on an assigned reading.

Whoever the final eight are, they will, in the words of James P. McGranery, former attorney general of the United States: "Bear upon themselves in an eminent degree the impress of Catholic higher education through the liberal arts."

ICG Holds Joint Meeting, Plans WVIL Radio Program

Intercollegate Conference on Government, Villanova chapter, held a joint meeting with the Rosemont ICG at Rosemont's Tea House. Primary topic of the meeting was a radio program to be presented over WVIL Thursday at 8:30 p.m.

The topic will be "The Investigatory Powers of Government, Their Scope and Limitations." Mr. Henry Rofinot, of the history department, will preside over a round table discussion among Rosemont and Villanova students.

Knowledge of parliamentary procedure was furnished by Villanova Chairman Don Seaton.

A joint funds-raising party to take place in the near future produced a committee to make final arrangements. Co-chairmen are Rosemary Casey of Rosemont and Buck Martin of Villanova.

Next meeting of the Villanova ICG will be Thursday at 10:30 a. m. in 104 C&F. All students interested in parliamentary procedure and operation of legislative assemblies have been invited.

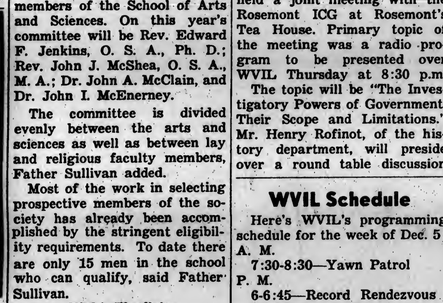
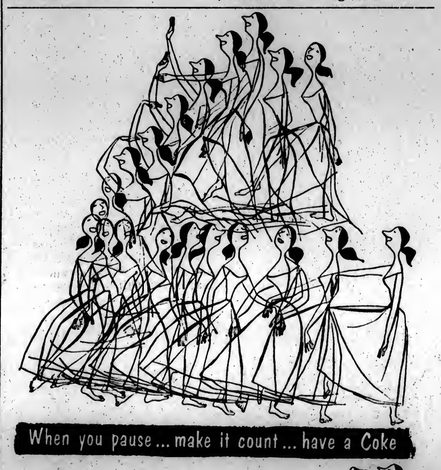
Dr. Monahan Addresses Math, Physics Clubs

Dr. Edward J. Monahan of the University's philosophy department spoke last Thursday on "Study Habits—Short-Cut to Success in College" before a joint meeting of the Physics Club and Mu Alpha Theta in the Mendel amphitheater.



First of Series

In the first of a series of timely lectures planned jointly by the two organizations and intended for layman appeal, the doctor emphasized that, with college students, it is "A case not so much of too little, but of too late." Dr. Monahan pointed out that the two-fold aims of college study, knowledge for knowledge's sake and knowledge gathered in preparation for tests, would be better attained by day-to-day study rather than by cramming the night before a test.



Presupposed in discussing study habits are adequate student interest and ability. Other assumptions are sufficient study, good course material and fair testing methods.

Utmost Importance

Of utmost importance is keeping abreast of the classes, which follow a logical pattern generally. Other methods suggested are: (1) good use of the text; (2) discerning use of outside reading; (3) read with a pencil, that is, take notes as you read; (4) use lecture discriminatingly: "Attention for more than five minutes is impossible if the person is not taking notes." (5) Coordinate lecture notes with readings; (6) group discussions are a big aid.

'Cats Host To Loyola Tomorrow

St. Francis, Maurice Stokes Play Saturday At Palestra

By Paul Clarkson

Tomorrow night at the Field House, the Wildcats will be host to Loyola College of Baltimore. Loyola is a very fast, young team with able sophomore reserves. Last year the Jesuit school from Maryland ended its season high in the Mason-Dixon Conference standings.

Big Charlie McCullough, six feet eight inches tall, will be the Mainliners chief problem. He has just completed a two year stretch in the Army, where he gained considerable experience playing service ball. McCullough, agile for his size, is a very good pivot man. To help McCullough, Loyola has hard-driving Bob Benzing, and a good play - maker in junior Gene Grimes. Both possess good shooting potential. Sophomores fill out the remainder of the squad. One of the most promising is Francis "Cookie" Fava, a diminutive take charge guy, with a good shooting eye.

Stokes, Schafer Scoring Duel

On December 11 at the Palestra, our veteran studded five, led by captain Jack Devine, will meet little St. Francis College from Loretto, Pa. The "Frankies" will be led by Maurice Stokes, the greatest player in the school's history. Stokes is a six foot six inch dynamo weighing 210 lbs., who last year brought his school into focus as a basketball power. Picked on numerous pre-season All-American squads, he seems a good bet to better his 23.1 average of last year and keep his school in the company of the better Eastern teams. A scoring duel between Stokes and Villanova's Bob Schafer, fourth highest scorer in 1953-54, is anticipated.

Tall Holdovers

Helping Stokes to better last year's record of 21-5 will be four better-than-average players. They are Frank Puschouver 6' 1", Bob Watro 6' 2", Walt Milinski 6' 1" and tall 6' 4" Bill Saller. These four, considering last year's experience, plus Stokes make a formidable foe for any team in the nation. It was these five men that enabled St. Francis to get an N.I.T. bid, and almost humble mighty Duquesne.

The Frankies use a give-and-go offense with a sudden switch into an all-court press at any time during the game. The squad ranks with the best Devine-Schafter and Co. meet all year. This is most amazing since St. Francis has an enrollment of only 425. They are coached by Dr. William Hughes, a dentist, who because of office hours holds practice sessions from 8:00 to 10:30 P.M. each evening.

Geisz Announces 900 Participate In Basketball

Now that the football season is over, and the play-offs have been held, Ed Geisz's "wheel of sports" is once more free to start rolling again. Nowadays the big sport all the student athletes are turning to is basketball, in which there are more participants this year than ever before in intramural history. Altogether there are sixty-six different teams of fifteen men each which comprise the various leagues. Although not every team has fifteen men on it, Mr. Geisz estimated that about nine hundred students will participate in the basketball intramural league this year. From this number it is easy to understand why Mr. Geisz needs twenty referees and Alumni gym from 4:30 to 10:30 four days a week.

Commission Organized

So great is the number of teams and individuals involved this year that Mr. Geisz had to set up a Basketball Commission to help him out. However, the main purpose of this commission, of which Jim Moran is head, is to settle any dispute or protests that might arise during the season.

As for the games themselves not much can be said of them for the season is just begining. However, on the evening of Dec. 1 the Jersey Giants ran up a rather phenomenal score when they beat the Brewers by the score of 93 to 67. The reason this is so surprising is that the game consists of only thirty minutes during which there are no time outs. As one can see this is a bit extraordinary, but then so is the size of the league which Mr. Geisz and his capable assistants have so well organized.

Frosh Open Season With Victory Over Camden Catholic

By Bob Mulcahy

The Villanova Freshmen defeated an outclassed Camden Catholic High School team 79-59 in the season's opener for both squads at the Field House last Saturday.

The game was never close as the Wildcats jumped out to an 8-0 lead before Camden found the range. Then successive field goals by Jack Kelly and Tom Brennan quickly moved the Mainliners out of reach into what proved to be an insurmountable margin.

Three field goals by Frank Singscheim in the second offset the three field goals scored by the whole Camden team. The home team left the court with a 36-20 half-time lead.

Bright spot in the visitor's attack was the play of guard Ralph Bantivoglio who scored half of his team's first half points and was individual high scorer for both teams with a total of 23 points for the afternoon.

The meeting of Jack Kelly and Al Cook featured a 26 point third quarter which iced the game for Villanova. The scoring parade for the Wildcats was led by Brennan, Cook, Kel-

Soph Trio Displays Promise In Rout Of West Chester

West Chester First Prey Of Wildcats

Taking up where the football team left off, Villanova's basketball club in their opener feasted on Ram meat. This time the Rams from West Chester State Teachers College were soundly trounced by the vastly improved Wildcat five, 82-44, last Saturday night at the Palestra. The undermanned Teachers made it a game for the first 10 minutes but after that the 'Cats took charge and were never headed.

Schafer Tops Scorers

Bobby Schafer was up to his old tricks again, pouring 23 points through the hoop in 26 minutes of competition. Jack Devine, captain-elect for the second straight year, did his usual job as boardman, snaring 13 rebounds and also managing to notch 14 points. Veterans Larry Tierney, Jim Smith and John Cirino pitched in to make things look bright in the curtain raiser.

The debut of Bobbq Powers, Al Griffith and Jack Weissman brought smiles to the faces of Wildcat rooters. All three showed that they will help greatly in the tough contests which are ahead. Griffith suffered a side injjury in the final minutes but was able to return to action.

Jack Devine

The scoreboard, after the first 10 minutes of play, showed the Wildcats ahead by only 4 points. Then, Schafer, Devine, Weissman and Powers went to work and gave the mainliners a 40-24 lead at halftime. The intermission did little for the Rams and the Blue and White continued to lay it on. Al Severance inserted much of his bench during the second half and the score continued to climb. The closing minutes found the Teachers fouling often in an effort to keep the 'Cats from hitting from the floor. However, this just added to the injury as most of the fouls were converted.

Tomorrow night, Villanova plays the Greyhounds of Loyola at the Field House. Saturday night finds Senior Maury Stokes bidding adieu to Palestra fans when he leads the St. Francis Terriers against the Severancemen.

COACH HONORED

Villanova basketball coach Alex Severance has been chosen as one of the thirty-five outstanding basketball mentors who will rate the nation's leading cage quintets for the United Press. Ratings will begin Dec. 7, and will appear every Tuesday.

Five coaches are selected from each section of the country. Severance, in his nineteenth season at Villanova, represents the Philadelphia district as a member of the Eastern Board. This is the second year that Al has served in this capacity.

President Bud Ford urges all seniors to attend an important class meeting, scheduled for C&F Auditorium at 10:30 a. m. Thursday.

So great is the number of teams and individuals involved this year that Mr. Geisz had to set up a Basketball Commission to help him out. However, the main purpose of this commission, of which Jim Moran is head, is to settle any dispute or protests that might arise during the season.

As for the games themselves not much can be said of them for the season is just begining. However, on the evening of Dec. 1 the Jersey Giants ran up a rather phenomenal score when they beat the Brewers by the score of 93 to 67. The reason this is so surprising is that the game consists of only thirty minutes during which there are no time outs. As one can see this is a bit extraordinary, but then so is the size of the league which Mr. Geisz and his capable assistants have so well organized.

Frosh Open Season With Victory Over Camden Catholic

By Bob Mulcahy

The Villanova Freshmen defeated an outclassed Camden Catholic High School team 79-59 in the season's opener for both squads at the Field House last Saturday.

The game was never close as the Wildcats jumped out to an 8-0 lead before Camden found the range. Then successive field goals by Jack Kelly and Tom Brennan quickly moved the Mainliners out of reach into what proved to be an insurmountable margin.

Three field goals by Frank Singscheim in the second offset the three field goals scored by the whole Camden team. The home team left the court with a 36-20 half-time lead.

Bright spot in the visitor's attack was the play of guard Ralph Bantivoglio who scored half of his team's first half points and was individual high scorer for both teams with a total of 23 points for the afternoon.

The meeting of Jack Kelly and Al Cook featured a 26 point third quarter which iced the game for Villanova. The scoring parade for the Wildcats was led by Brennan, Cook, Kel-

West Chester First Prey Of Wildcats

Taking up where the football team left off, Villanova's basketball club in their opener feasted on Ram meat. This time the Rams from West Chester State Teachers College were soundly trounced by the vastly improved Wildcat five, 82-44, last Saturday night at the Palestra. The undermanned Teachers made it a game for the first 10 minutes but after that the 'Cats took charge and were never headed.

Schafer Tops Scorers

Bobby Schafer was up to his old tricks again, pouring 23 points through the hoop in 26 minutes of competition. Jack Devine, captain-elect for the second straight year, did his usual job as boardman, snaring 13 rebounds and also managing to notch 14 points. Veterans Larry Tierney, Jim Smith and John Cirino pitched in to make things look bright in the curtain raiser.

The debut of Bobbq Powers, Al Griffith and Jack Weissman brought smiles to the faces of Wildcat rooters. All three showed that they will help greatly in the tough contests which are ahead. Griffith suffered a side injjury in the final minutes but was able to return to action.

Jack Devine

The scoreboard, after the first 10 minutes of play, showed the Wildcats ahead by only 4 points. Then, Schafer, Devine, Weissman and Powers went to work and gave the mainliners a 40-24 lead at halftime. The intermission did little for the Rams and the Blue and White continued to lay it on. Al Severance inserted much of his bench during the second half and the score continued to climb. The closing minutes found the Teachers fouling often in an effort to keep the 'Cats from hitting from the floor. However, this just added to the injury as most of the fouls were converted.

Tomorrow night, Villanova plays the Greyhounds of Loyola at the Field House. Saturday night finds Senior Maury Stokes bidding adieu to Palestra fans when he leads the St. Francis Terriers against the Severancemen.

COACH HONORED

Villanova basketball coach Alex Severance has been chosen as one of the thirty-five outstanding basketball mentors who will rate the nation's leading cage quintets for the United Press. Ratings will begin Dec. 7, and will appear every Tuesday.

Five coaches are selected from each section of the country: Severance, in his nineteenth season at Villanova, represents the Philadelphia district as a member of the Eastern Board. This is the second year that Al has served in this capacity.

President Bud Ford urges all seniors to attend an important class meeting, scheduled for C&F Auditorium at 10:30 a. m. Thursday.

Sports Chatter

Intra-City Competition

By Norm Feldpush

An announcement by Dr. Gaylord P. Harnwell, president of University of Pennsylvania, could prove to be the most startling local sports item of the year. This concerns the round-robin series to crown a true city basketball champion from among the five major collegiate basketball powers in the Philadelphia area: LaSalle College, Pennsylvania; St. Joseph's College; Temple University; and Villanova University.

This renewal of long-severed relations brings to a close the localized "feud" which has plagued the sports scene in Philadelphia, resulting from disagreements and gradual separation over the years. The present superficial city series at Convention Hall, which involves LaSalle, St. Joe., and Temple, will be replaced by thirty doubleheaders at the Palestra. Games are tentatively scheduled for Wednesday, Friday and Saturday nights, beginning with the 1955-56 season. No team will appear more than fourteen times.

A trophy will be awarded the annual winner, with permanent possession being obtained by a three-time winner. Proceeds are to be equally shared for the contracted five year period. The agreement will extend beyond that time if fan interest demands.

The "Big Five" plan is another milestone along the path of a shifting sports economy, which has been characterized by attendance drops, professional baseball franchise transfers, and collegiate football abandonments. "Cut-throat" competition from simultaneous doubleheaders at the Palestra and Convention Hall has been eliminated, when it began to loom as a course to financial misfortune.

This undertaking is warranted, if for no other reason, by Philadelphia's basketball products over the last six seasons. Nationally acclaimed stars such as Paul Arizin, Ernie Beck, Larry Foust, Tom Gola, Larry Hennessy, Bill Mlkvy, and Bob Schafer can equal or surpass in any phase of playing skill, those representing other basketball centers of the United States. Games featuring these All-Americans would have attracted crowds far beyond the proportions which can be jammed into either of the court arenas.

While a movement has now begun with this noteworthy step, there are still possibilities for further organization. Rev. Edward B. McKee, Moderator of Athletics, views these circumstances as a stimulation of student and alumni interest. He feels that "the situation should be further extended to include baseball, track, and football, with a Philadelphia Metropolitan champion being crowned in each of these sports." Philadelphia would then be established as the primary athletic stronghold on the Eastern Coast.

Father McKee hopes that the new found rivalries will be regarded as friendly ones by the student bodies of the five schools. "The students should be encouraged to cheer for all the local teams, when opposing outside competition."

Western Pennsylvania should not be neglected in a cooperative agreement, as a similar condition exists in the Pittsburgh area. Among the independent basketball schools are: Duquesne; Geneva; Penn State; Pittsburgh; St. Francis (Loretto); and Westminster. If these institutions were to use the Pitt University's field house facilities, and band together, a western champion might play the eastern champion for an official state title.

The educators of the "Big Five" deserve praise for their efforts. However, there is more to be accomplished in organizing athletics, not only on the major sport and college level, but also in minor athletics played by smaller colleges in Greater Philadelphia.

Letter Praises Players . . .

Recently a letter was received by Athletic Secretary Bill Ryan from the Naeter Brothers at whose hotel the football team stayed after the Mississippi Southern game. The players stayed at the Battle House Hotel in Mobile, Alabama.

The letter:

Dear Bill Ryan:

We were so elated to note that your football team had swooped down and cleaned the celebrated Fordham team completely out.

After meeting you and seeing your boys at the Battle House in Mobile we decided that even though the other team cleaned you out completely we were satisfied that no football team has ever had a nicer looking and more gentlemanly lot of boys. We hope we may run across you again sometime and that you will have even better luck next year. You must come to see us if you ever get in our neighborhood. We are sending this letter with a Golden Anniversary booklet that will give you an idea of the town we have spent a half century in.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) Naeter Brothers

Fordham Victory Closes Poor Season; Scott Stars

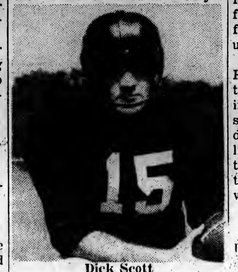
By Bob Strayton

At long last it happened! Before an assemblage of some 9,699 faithful, Villanova's previously winless Wildcats took on and defeated the hornless Fordham Rams in a skirmish held at the Polo Grounds, in New York, on Saturday, November 27.

The final score of the ball game was a satisfying 41-0, more than twice as many points as Villanova had scored in any other game during the season.

For the Wildcats, the Fordham conquest was more than just preventing a victoryless season. It proved, to fans and players alike, that the coaching staff of Frank Reagan and Co., reputedly one of the nation's best, had finally evolved into a potent, game-winning mechanism.

Schafer for two .....



Scott Excels

Probably the most indispensable ballplayer, as far as Villanova was concerned, was senior Dick Scott. Scotty, an off-and-on passer the majority of the season, led the attack with his adept left-handed aerials. Out of twenty attempted passes, Scott hit with 15 for a total of 161 yards.

At the same time as Scott was putting on his aerial circus, ends Mike Mayock and Don McComb were dong a bit of barnstorming of their own. On two occasions, Mayock and McComb blocked fourth down punts by Andy Nacrelli, with touchdowns resulting from both endeavors.

Quick Score

It was Villanova's ball game from the start. With only eight minutes gone by in the first period, Scott commandeered a passing and running attack which resulted in a 52-yd.

drive down to the Rams' 7. From there, Scott threw to McComb, who was all by himself in the end zone. Helm converted to make the score 7-0.

Again in the second stanza, the Wildcats made another scoring bid. A Fordham fumble gave Villanova the ball deep in the Rams territory, Ed Ortelli carried on a series of plays which put the ball on the Fordham one-foot line. Fordham then made their best showing of the day, and held the 'Cats from scoring. On four plays from scrimmage, the Rams could do nothing, and, on fourth down, Nacrelli went into the end zone to punt. Before he could get the kick away, McComb rushed hard and blocked the ball, which was recovered in the end zone by Mayock for a touchdown. The conversion attempt was wide of the mark, and the score stood at 13-0 as the half ended.

Big Third Quarter

The third period proved to be much the same as the preceding chapters of the game. Fordham took the kick-off and did nothing. Again Nacrelli dropped back to kick, this time from the 24 yd. line. But before he could get it off, Mayock was upon him and blocked the kick. He followed the erratically bouncing ball into the end zone where he juggled it for a recovery, and another Villanova score. Helm made the placement.

Ciarrochi Goes 64 Yds.

Before the third period ended, Villanova added another TD, when Al Ciarrochi, the speedy half-back, took a hand-off from Scott and made his way for 64 yards down to the Fordham seven before he was tripped up by Dick Algatt, right guard for the Rams. Ed Ortelli carried from there for the Wildcats fourth tally. Jack Helm's adept foot put the ball through the uprights to make the score 27-0.

When the final quarter began, Fordham was still helpless in the offensive department. During the game, the Rams only scoring threat came when they drove down to Villanova's 21 yd. line, only to lose possession of the ball immediately. After that, the Rose Hill aggregation was finished for the day.

Aerial Finish

To finish things up, John Lammers came into the ball game to run the team for the Wildcats. He succeeded in bringing the ball down to the ly, and Singscheim, all of whom hit double figures. High scorer for the victors was 6'5" Tom Brennan, former Chaminade High School star, who poured 21 points through the hoop.

The rebounding strength of the 'Cats was evidenced by the fact that Jack Kelly, a Catholic High School All American from Cleveland, and Brennan captured 18 rebounds between them.

In the second half coach Robert "Maje" McDonnell cleared the bench revealing some strong reserve strength.

Prospects for this season are very bright for the freshman cagers. The club will be formed around Kelly, Brennan, Cook, and Singscheim each of whom made an "All" team of some kind in high school. The fifth starting berth is shaping into a battle between Jimmy Hunt and Connie Newman both graduates of near-by West Catholic High School.

Leading reserves figting to unseat some of the starters are Henry Nichols, Niagara Falls resident who starred at Bishop Duffy High School, Ralph DiFronzo, Johny Neal, high scorer from Roxbury High School in New Jersey, Mike Faragalli, Lower Merion athlete, and the Severance boys John and Alex from Berwyn.

This years squad is trying to match or better the 17-1 record of last years freshman team.

Each child brought a present to the party, which (around 50 in all) were turned over to the Junior Class to be included in the gifts to be given to the orphans of St. John's at the annual party Thursday. About a dozen Juniors entertained at the party, including Mike Horan, Jim Hippler, Burns McLindon, Bernie Steinfelt, Steve Bernocco, Tom Casey, Owen Hickey, Pete Cassidy, Ford, and others.

Face Academic Challenge, Fr. Dwyer Tells Assembly

Villanova's first student assembly of the academic year was told last Tuesday that more than 85 per cent of the University's students are equipped to follow the curriculum they have chosen.

But Rev. Edward M. Dwyer, O.S.A., University Dean, advised students to separate themselves from Villanova if they see they cannot successfully complete their work. He said it is more pleasant if the student takes the initiative and does not wait for the University to drop him.

Although Very Rev. James A. Donnellon, O.S.A., University President, was scheduled to join Father Dwyer on the speaker's platform, Father President did not attend the assembly. Father Dwyer explained that Father Donnellon was meeting with the father of Eugene Pascucci, the law student who died that morning.

During his address, Father Dwyer described certain types of students he has observed at Villanova:

(1) the student who has decided to run away from all work;

(2) the student who considers himself not fit academically for a certain course (the Dean dismissed this excuse with his estimate that more than 85 per cent of Villanova's students are prepared for the course they pursuing).

Charity Ball chairman Don Alton would like to express his, and his committee's appreciation for the fine response shown the dance, both in the channels of ticket sales and attendance. It was estimated that some 540 couples attended, enjoying the music of the Criterions and a Christmas atmosphere.

The student body's generosity was also praised by collection co-chairmen Pat Haley, Pete Cassidy and Mike Potenza.

Wives' Gifts

In return for the gifts that the Faculy Wives' organization donated to the class for distribution to the orphans Thursday at the party, some 15 juniors entertained at that group's party for the faculty children in Alumni gym Saturday.

19. On the first play, Lammers faded to pass, was chased, but did a fine job of eluding tacklers until he saw end Mike Boruch free in the end zone. The pass was good, and the point was added by Lammers, making it a 34-0 affair.

Before the final gun, however, Villanova's pent-up scoring desires added another 7 points to the score. With 30 seconds remaining on the clock, and with the western goal post torn down by jubilant fans, John Ferroulo, replacing Lammers, connected with a 30 yard aerial to Johnny Bauer, who sprinted the rest of the distance for the final Villanova marker. Because of unforeseen circumstances—there was no goal post—the teams moved to the other end of the field where Bauer added the final placement.

CAMPUS ORGANIZATION NEWS

A seven-volume set of books, "Shakespearian Survey," a gift from Delta Pi Mu Arts Fraternity, will soon be placed in the reference room of the Library. Announcement of the donation was made at a fraternity meeting Thursday morning.

Dr. John I. McEnerney, fraternity moderator and associate professor of classics, said the fraternity hopes to encourage other literary gifts to the Library by other student organizations on the Villanova campus.

Sometime ago, Dr. McEnerney mentioned the possibility of the donation to Rev. Daniel P. Falvey, O.S.A., librarian. At first, the librarian thought a volume of Greek or Latin would be appropriate, since these fields hold an attraction for the members of DPM.

However, Dr. McEnerney said he believed works of more general interest would be of more value to the expanding library. After all, explained the DPM moderator, just about every student has some opportunity during his college career to study Shakespeare.

Father Falvey noted that Rev. Robert M. Sullivan, O.S.A., Dean of the School of Arts and Sciences, and members of the English faculty, consider the gift a valuable addition to the Library.

The librarian reported that the volume is the second of a newy-founded annual survey of Shakespearian study and production sponsored jjointly by the University of Birmingham (Eng.) and the Shakespeare Birthplace Trust.

Gift bookplates will be placed in each book, noting the DPM donation, according to Father Falvey .The set, which contains ten main articles and ten full page illustrations, also includes a page of Shakespeare's signature.

Seniors Meet Thurs., 10:30

With the promise of a "great plan" to clear up the senior class' financial situation, President Bud Ford issued a plea last week for a "much better" attendance at Thursday's meeting at 10:30 a.m. in C&F Auditorium.

Ford said the class was considering "three or four" plans to erase the debt incurred by the financially unsuccessful Senior Weekend of Nov. 19 and 20.

Some 120 seniors attended the meeting Thursday morning, Ford estimated. However, he said this was only about one third of the class population.

He said he hoped the entire class would turn out for Thursday's meeting when a vote will be taken on Ford's plan, which must first be approved by the administration.

A senior who was present at what he described as a "stormy" meeting reported that the four plans considered by the class to earn money to clear up the debt were:

1. an automobile raffle
2. a variety show
3. donation of breakage deposits ($30 fee charged each year of all students)
4. collection of $3 from each member of the senior class when he picks up his matriculation card for the second semester.

SENIORS' MEETING

President Bud Ford wishes to remind all Seniors that an important class meeting will be held Thursday at 10:30 in the C&F Auditorium.

Topping the agenda of the meeting will be a vote on the most practical plan to raise money to clean up the class' debt.

Ford hopes more seniors would turn out for Thursday's meeting than showed up last week.

President's Yule Message

Very soon we shall celebrate another Christmas, another birthday of Our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Very soon the liturgy of the Church will dramatize the message first chanted by the Angels with all its joyful emphasis upon adoration of the Christ Child and its special plea that peace be granted to men of good will. Because of the present disturbed condition of the world, this message should be of special significance to all of us. Certainly that peace which Christ sought to establish has practically vanished from the face of the earth.

Because Christmas is primarily a religious festival, it is logically a time of prayer. It is the day for honoring Christ a little more effectively, for asking the wisdom to learn His lessons a little more completely. It is the day that challenges us to merit the blessings promised so generously but so exclusively to men of good will, to men of honorable aspirations and decency of life.

For all of us, of course, Christmas has its own particular meanings. The feast will necessarily suggest our parents first and then recollections of that rapture which only childhood innocence can properly understand. It is my sincere hope that you and yours will realize the happiest possible fulfillment of all your wishes. May the Christmas of 1954 be the best and the most blessed of all. As you kneel before the crib of the new born child, please utter a short prayer for the administration and student body of Villanova University.

Letters to Be Awarded:

Rip Miller Guest Speaker At Grid Dinner Tomorrow

Rip Miller, assistant director of athletics at the United States Naval Academy, will be the principal speaker at the 33rd annual football banquet on Dec. 15 at the Broadwood Hotel. The dinner is being sponsored by the Villanova Club of Philadelphia.

Mr. Miller, who was one of the "Seven Mules" on Notre Dame's well known football squads of 1922-23, has been a member of the Navy athletic staff since 1926. During his long career at the Academy, he served for 19 years as line coach of the Middies and he was also head coach in 1931-32-33.

Mr. Miller has been assistant director of athletics at Annapolis since 1948.

Head Coach Frank Reagan, his assistants and this year's football squad will be honored at the annual affair. The nine seniors who played their last game for the Blue and White against Fordham will receive special awards for their contributions to Villanova football.

Other awards will be given to a few of the outstanding alumni. One deserving alumnus will receive the annual "Loyalty to Villanova," award, said Mr. James Haughton, publicity chairman for the banquet.

Mr. Frank Solis is general chairman of the affair.

Friends of Library Drive Announced

A drive to obtain special members for the Friends of the Library was announced last week by Rev. Daniel P. Falvey, O.S.A., librarian. The drive will begin in mid-January, and in the spring an award will be made to one special member.

This award will consist of: a round trip, cabin class, from New York to Ireland for a two weeks' stay, hotel reservations, use of an automoblie for two weeks, expenses paid.

Father Falvey noted that the student selling the largest number of special memberships will be awarded $100.

Father Daley Heads Drive

Rev. John J. Daley, O.S.A., associate professor of modern languages, has been appointed coordinator of the drive by Very Rev. James A. Donnellon, O.S.A., Villanova President.

Purpose of the drive is to obtain air conditioning, said Father Falvey. The librarian commented that on some days in the hottest weather, the temperature in the main reading room has soared to 97 degrees.

Irish Exibit in March

This campaign will not interfere with the current Development Campaign, according to Father Falvey, because the two appeals are aimed at two different types of contributors.

Meanwhile, Father Falvey reported that the Irish Embassy has agreed to cooperate in an Irish Exibit planned by the Library in March, including books, manuscripts, art, ecclesiastical products and glassware. A prominent speaker, to be named later, will open the exhibit, Father Falvey added.

Father Daniel P. Falvey, O.S.A.

Why Christmas?

Once again the Christmas season is upon us. We know this from being crushed by hordes of men in red suits and beards patrolling the city streets, from hearing the latest "cute" Christmas mambos blaring at us from every radio, from hearing dozens of reminders to get our Christmas shopping done as early as possible, and from seeing that Rudolph the Red-nosed Reindeer has returned to the first page of the second section of the "Inquirer."

In the midst of these seasonal manifestations, it is all too easy to forget that, pleasant as they are, they are not part of the true Christmas spirit. Christmas still, to a true Christian, means Christ.

We are not speaking here merely of the commercialization of Christmas. Most of us resent the more blatant examples of this, but even the most fervent Catholic is in danger of getting caught in the whirl of vacation work, purchase of presents, sending of Christmas cards, parties, visits of old friends, and the myriad of other distractions that are part of the pre-Christmas season, and consequently just not finding time to reflect on the real significance of Christmas.

All of this happens simply because our society has been eliminating religion from one after another of its branches. The net result of this process of secularization has been that there is just nothing to remind a person of what Christmas is all about.

To get the full value of Christmas we should pause in the middle of writing our Christmas cards or of buying our gifts or of giving a contribution to some street-corner Santa and ask ourselves the question "Why am I doing this?"

The answer, of course, should be obvious. We are doing it because Christ was born on Christmas centuries ago. But, unless we pause to consider that fact, we may well only remember during the sermon on Christmas morning what all that scurrying we had been doing in recent weeks was about.

Without such thoughts, Christmas to us would be merely another holiday, something like the Fourth of July or Halloween, that we celebrate because it is the conventional thing to do, not because we give any deep thought to what the holiday is for.

With such an attitude the time and energy devoted to Christmas would be wasted. We are filled with Christmas spirit, with a desire to do something for others, with the urge to give presents to those who are closest to us.

Yet, without the religious motives for them, these actions are purposeless. The desire to help others is very commendable, but, apart from its religious aspects, there is no reason why it should be associated with Christmas than with which the Fourth of July.

If we pause to consider the reason for which we celebrate this feast, however, we remember that we are commemorating Christ's great solicitude for man, that on this day caused Him to become man Himself, this Christmas spirit becomes full of meaning. To us, who have an idea of the purpose of it all, Christmas can be fuller and happier than to him to whom Christmas is just another public holiday.

The editor and staff of the VILLANOVAN join in wishing to every student, teacher, and friend of Villanova just such a full and happy Christmas, to be followed by a happy and prosperous New Year.

Man's Hope For Peace Not Met By Communism

By Tom Mentzer

"Peace on Earth to men of good will." Some nineteen hundred and fifty-four years have passed, since that glorious cry first rung out over the plains of Judea. As spoken by the angels then, this joyous message brought a newly-enkindled hope to the hearts of men. It hearlded the birth of a Savior, a God-man Who was to raise the world from the depths of degradation to the heights of happiness.

In just a few days, a large part of the civilized world will commemorate the birthday of this Savior of mankind. Once again that glorious message of the first Christmas day will resound over the plains of the Earth. That the men of some civilized lands might not hear the hopeful din of this angelic cry is very unfortunate. Yet it is a reality, a reality that gives living testimony to the fact that peace and good will do not yet reign over the whole world. For what the Savior had and has done to encourage peace on earth, certain groups of men have attempted to undo.

Such a group is the Communist Party. Its birth, like the Savior's, was hailed by a cry of "peace". In the hearts of poverty-stricken millions, its message of temporal goods for all struck a chord of hope. But this was a hope doomed to despair, as history well proves.

All For "Peace"

In its very beginning, the Communist Party set itself to the task of ordaining means for the accomplishment of this "peace". The methods which it decided upon are somewhat imitative though at the same time vastly different from those chosen by Christ, the Savior. For as He choose love, truth, and honor as the means of converting men without lifting a sword, so the Communist Party chose hate, lies, and deceit along with the sword to win adherents. In place of His priests teaching from the catechism, the Communists, particularly in China, have trained false priests to teach in catachetical fashion from Marxist pamphlets. "Brainwashing" is a Communist answer to the soul-cleansing features of the Sacrament of Penance. Peace gained through these insidious means is not peace; it is tyranny.

Let's Face Reality

Accordingly, that centuries old cry of "Peace on Earth, to men of good will", will assume a youthful vigor on this Christmas Day. Many are the hearts that yearn for that ray of hope which these heavenly words convey. And if you, the Catholics of the free world, join your voices with those of the angels in echoing this hopeful message, then no barrier-not even the Iron Curtain-may keep God-fearing men from hearing it. But don't stop there. As you take the Body and Blood of the Almighty Christ into your hearts on Christmas morning, ask His aid not only in penetrating this Iron Curtain, but in demolishing it. This is not an idealistic turning away from reality. It is facing reality. After all, if men have not been able to conquer this evil of Communism, who can conquer it, but God?

Holiday Is Occasion For Student Musing

By Jim Wrzesinki

In the life of the student nothing is more hectic than that final week of school just before a long holiday. Especially is this true of the Christmas recess. The sight of roasted turkey, the odor of sweet potatoes and the tang of cranberry sauce have barely left the scene when the strains of "Silent Night", wafting on the breezes of December day, bring forth the first realization that Christmas is near. The gayly-decorated stores, the busy streets transformed into wreath-wrapped highways all leading to that magic land of make-believe, the frequent reminders of just so many shopping days till Christmas—all serve to heighten the pitch of the festivities. To capture some of this excitement we asked several Villanovans this week what their thoughts were as the Christmas season approached.

Spiritual Meaning

Bud Ford, President of the Class of 1955—"This Christmas promises to be one of much significance to me. As a senior I will be experiencing my last Christmas as a Villanovan. I can say sincerely that these four years have been the happiest and most fruitful of my life. On Christ's brithday this year I will give thanks to God for the wonderful opportunity that He has bestowed upon me. It is my fervent wish that all the members of the Class of 1955 will join with me in this prayer of Thanksgiving."

Edio Lewis, Class of 1955—"When Christmas time is brought to mind, it makes me think of vacation time. It means a break in the everyday routine of classes and the school work that goes with it. It means home cooking and easy living for two weeks."

Gene Rzodiewicz, Class of 1957—"As I leave for home I'll naturally look forward to spending the holidays with my family. I'll see plenty of displays and advertising. I'll hear commercials on the radio. All of these will suggest gifts for someone on Christmas Day. Our secular society seems to place too much emphasis on worldly goods and gifts while neglecting the real meaning of Christmas Day, the celebration of the birthday of our Blessed Lord.

Our Purpose

Leaving Villanova for a few days of rest reminds me that here is an institution that is striving to place Christ in our everyday life. Let us do just that! Due to the commercialism of today regarding Christmas we should strive to retain the real meaning of that wonderful day. Let's all put Christ back into Christmas."

Joe Maggiore, Class of 1955—"Once more the Christmas season approaches and again the usual ritual of Christmas rush starts. This includes the purchasing of gifts, sending cards and other details which always seem to be remembered at the last moment. Thoughts also enter my mind of the post office; walking in the bitter cold delivering mail which every year floods the post office.

Last Memories

But this year will be a little different, not because of any changes in the events, but because this year will be the last one at home that I can be certain of. It will be the last time that I will be present at Evening Chapel when the Rosemont Glee Club plays its annual visit to sing their joyful Carols. It will also be be the last time I will be wishing a Merry Christmas to all my fellow classmates and the instructors of our daily classes. Yes, this year will mean a little more than the others, for this Christmas will undoubtedly live the longest in my mind as a vivid memory of pleasant days gone by."

Campus Comment...

THE MOST RELIABLE of sources provides information leading us to believe that when two Irishmen meet, there is no such thing as social formality. About a week and a half ago, the night of Villanova's expansion drive dinner, an able young Villanova athlete was helping park guest's cars. One man handed over his car announcing pleasantly, "I'm Farley from New York." The unassuming trackman replied cheerfully, "How do you do . . . I'm Delaney from Ireland." Of course, the distinguished guest was Honorable James A. Farley, Villanova development campaign head, and "Villanova's answer to Grover Whalen" was Ronald Delaney of Dublin and our freshman class. Mr. Farley probably NOW knows at least fifty thousand and one people by their first names . . .

IN SPITE of the dropping of the unprofitable Villanova Forum Program, several campus organizations have proved to be possessed of a resourcefulness that is enabling our student body to hear able speakers on important topics. Such organizations as the Physics Club, Delta Pi Mu, and our engineering associations have recognized that there is a great deal of scholarly talent among our own faculty and elsewhere in the Villanova "family." These speakers are giving generously of their time and ideas, and they CAN'T be doing it for money. International Relations Society has succeeded in attracting foreign spokesmen that have brilliantly enlightened sheltered students in this inland institution . . .

REDOUBTABLE VILLANOVAN editor Edwin Daly has been privately and somewhat mysteriously invited to become a charter member of an "American Society of Girl Watchers", which defines itself as an "organization of refined gentlemen dedicated to discreet, but relentless, girl watching". This noted Villanova international observer informs us that he has taken the proposal under advisement.—After all, dues are one dollar . . .

TAKING OUT a Johnnie from St. John's Orphnage last Saturday literally demanded a sacrifice of some valuable life-sustaining red blood from one earnest and enterprising Villanova junior. The junior traded one pint of this fluid for fifteen dollars; he dealt with the John S. Sharpe Foundation in this transaction . . .

ONE OF THE MOST PATHETIC and heart-rending tales that are being subversively scattered among the unformed intellects of informed Villanovans concerns the plight of three unhappy ink drops. It seems that they were sad because "'their mother was in the pen and they didn't know how long the sentence was going to be." This is the end.

Producer, Patrons Make Movies Morally Harmful

By Pat Nolan

Remember in your grade-school days, when as a guide to good behavior, your parents cautioned you with the maxim, "See no evil; hear no evil; speak no evil," and then, perhaps, showed you the three little figures depicting this advice. Today, it certainly seems, the motion picture industry could well afford to pause in the midst of its complex operations and pay some attention, if only a little, to this simple advice. At first, the motion picture attested to the inventive genius of man, but now, in some instances unfortunately, it testifies, not only to man's genius but also to his corruptness. This corruption is quite evident in the emphasis Hollywood offerings currently place on dishonesty, crime, and sex.

Certainly, it is obvious that this emphasis cannot influence good, but rather, if it is to influence at all, the influence must be evil. As the conduct of children can benefit by the simple maxim above, by this same maxim also, the quality of motion pictures can improve. Though desiring to reflect on all films portraying immorality, we shall concentrate on the condemned film's excessive immorality. The existence of condemned films may be traced in two things: to the producers of the films and to the public who receive them.

Empty Heads

It is interesting to notice the difference in the moral quality between such films as "Shane" and "The Moon Is Blue". Morally speaking, the former receives commendation, the latter, condemnation. Why the difference? This is why! The latter film is produced for the single purpose of yielding full pockets for empty heads. What else but "empty-headed" can producers be labeled who so willingly make themselves the responsible agents for the possible nation-wide evil effects of their films?

It is not every motion picture producer, however, who forfeits integrity to gain money. It is to the few who produce regardless of the consequences that censure is aimed. Employing offensive dialogue and suggestive scenes, these producers design to reap a profit from their condemned film no matter how low morals may drop. Meant to gratify patrons, such films often debase them. Advancement of defenses, such as, "These films are merely the reflection of reality", cannot excuse them. They take their evil toll. With so much moral reasoning against condemned films and so little in defense of them, it becomes harshly irritating to witness the periodic consistency of these shows that feed on filth.

Patrons Guilty

It is not at the feet of producers alone, however, be they of Hollywood or of hit-and-run film organizations, that complete blame is to be laid. Patrons, also, are deserving of partial guilt for these movies which scar the industry. It is from the unthinking millions who perisist in attending the morally corrupt shows that the practice receives its impetus. They dispose themselves to pay their dollar; these shows are produced to grab that dollar. And what is more, these pictures shall continue to be produced so long as box office tickets receive a fast turnover.

This is the situation that slaps the face of the morally-principled. How our grade school caution could alter this condition if only applied! How we, the public, would benefit by its application. While these films endure, let not our being and becoming drop to depths in order to raise vice to heights. Let these producers of the condemned film squirm for want of our box-office dollar. We would be to naive to expect the ending of all immoral films, but, we have the right, at least, to expect the cessation of the condemned film.

Junior Attends New York Industrial Congress Meet

A dean's list junior in the C&F school was one of three college students to represent Pennsylvania at the 59th annual Congress of American Industry in New York.

Henry Whalen, sponsored by the Pennsylvania Manufacturers' Association and the Manufacturers' Association of Delaware County, was the only student from the Philadelphia area at the week-long gathering.

Describing his stay in New York as "fabulous," Whalen said all convention sessions were held in the Waldorf-Astoria, the scene of the closing banquet.

In commenting on the convention's work, Whalen emphasized that the National Association of Manufacturers, the organization sponsoring the congress, is not a puppet of "big business." Whalen said small businesses are being encouraged to join the NAM.

Whalen is a member of the Junior Class Steering Committee and the day-student C&F Student Council representative.

Malvern Brings Expansion Drive To Completion

Having brought its large expansion program to completion with the dedication of three new buildings, Malvern Preparatory School joins other expanding Augustinian schools.

On Dec. 8, the chapel was dedicated to Our Mother of Good Counsel at Malvern. Very Rev. Joseph Hickey, O. S. A., presided at the exercises. Very Rev. James A. Donnellon, O. S. A., attended the ceremony, which was followed by a luncheon.

The Gymnasium, commemorating the late Very Rev. Joseph M. Dougherty, O. S. A., Provincial of the Augustinian province of St. Thomas of Villanova, was dedicated on Oct. 7. The Gym contains three basketball courts, the largest being as large as collegiate rules allow.

To cope with the numerous assemblies for plays, lectures, and meetings, the auditorium erected in memory of the late Very Rev. Nicholas Vasey, O. S. A., past provincial, has been dedicated.

Sunday, there was an open house held from 2 to 5, which was attended by Malvern alumni, friends, and guests.

JUNIOR RINGS

The new Class of 1956 Dieges and Clust rings will be ready for delivery beginning tomorrow morning at 11:30 in Father McLaughlin's Student Activities Office in Mendel Hall. The balance of the original price (minus the $10 summer deposit), must be paid upon receipt of the ring. Prices are posted about the campus and also in this issue of the VILLANOVAN. Times Wednesday are 11:30 to 4:30 in the afternoon and 7 to 8:30 p.m. in the evening. You are urged to pick up your ring Wednesday.

students. He presented some definite arguments in favor of it, and the proposal will be voted on at the next meeting.

Turned Down

Chairman Dick Winfield told Council that his request to Rev. Edward B. McKee, O.S.A., University Vice-President, asking for more than one off campus activity per year for each active organization was refused.

Chairman Winfield also informed Council that Father McKee has promised administration cooperation in trying to solidify a plan giving the Council some disciplinary powers.

Under the proposed plan, Council would be empowered to suspend disciplined students from activities for a certain length of time, on the recommendation of the Dean of Men, Father McKee.

May Transfer Quiz?

Dick Segrave-Daly reported on his partial solution to the multiplicity of tests problem. Council decided to make it a student right to request instructors to transfer a test date if the student already had two or more tests scheduled for that date.

Details of the proposal will be outlined by Segrave-Daly at the next meeting.

The following motions were discussed and passed:

A recommendation that a committee be formed to investigate the 150-pound football situation. Dick Peer and Neil Cronin compose the committee.

Lower Admission

A motion to try to lower the price of admission to basketball doubleheaders at the Palestra. Council members complained that while the 50 cent admission is reasonable, they felt it was unfair to charge dates the full price of $2.60.

Look to Future

Rev. George McLaughlin, O.S.A., Dean of Student Activities, said he felt that Council would be farsighted in using this matter as a common denominator in building relations with the four other area schools who will take part in the intracity championships scheduled to begin next season.

Winfield told Council he would look into the situation and try to contact other student government presidents on the matter.

Segrave-Daly moved that a committee be appointed to investigate the overcrowded conditions in the Pie Shop during lunchtime. Forming the committee are Tom Mentzer, Downing and Frank Adams.

Father Charles McFadden, O. S. A., addresses members of PKP during his talk on "Communism—A Religion," at the group's Communion breakfast at the Viking Inn last week.

Seniors Attend Asian Conference In Baltimore

Two Villanova seniors, Edwin Daly and Dick Segrave-Daly, were in Baltimore Friday and Saturday for the second intercollegiate conference on Southeast Asia, sponsored by the Conference on Regional Studies of Johns Hopkins University.

The delegates were sponsored by Villanova's International Relations Society.

Segrave-Daly is Student Council representative of the IRS, while Daly, VILLANOVAN editor-in-chief, serves as activities director.

The two-day session was featured by panel discussions, seminars and a banquet luncheon.

Villanova Faces Nation's Best In Holiday Festival

By Bob Mulcahy

Stepping out with the country's best, Villanova travels to the "Big City" during the Christmas vacation, where they will play, for the first time, in the widely known Holiday Festival at Madison Square Garden. The dates for the Festival are Dec. 27, 29, 31.

Among the teams entered in this "tournament of tournaments" are: LaSalle, Tom Gola's team, and not a little known in basketball circuits; Duquesne, which many people have heard of in the past few years; Dayton, probably the most underrated team in basketball, and ranking tenth in the nation at that; Niagara, a perennial upset-victory ball team, which thrives on Garden competition; and probably the best West Coast ball team in a long time, UCLA. Others invited to participate in the action are Syracuse, who did well against Fordham this year, and St. John's, a real dark-horse, capable of almost anything.

Of course, our own potent machine will also be in there taking its toll of aggressors also. With that array of hardwood champions, it would be quite hard to predict an outcome to this obviously great affair; great, at least, in the minds of all basketball followers. For there will be represented the very best that the country has to offer this season.

LaSalle, for example, has a 6'5" Senior by the name of Tom Gola, who is expected by not just a few people to glide to All-American honors. Besides Gola, the whole team which won the NCAA title last year also will be playing.

Tucker, Johnson Absent

Duquesne, weakened sorely by the loss of Jim Tucker, Fletch Johnson and Si Green, still has Dick Ricketts to make things tough on the opposition. It will be against the Iron Dukes that Villanova plays its inaugural contest in the Festival.

Dayton, probably the most latently lethal team entered in the tourney, has a blinding array of stars, and all of them are tall. It would be a fairly safe prognostication to say that the Flyers might come out with top honors on Dec. 31. Two of their bigger men, seven foot Bill Uhl and 6'9" John Horan are adept courtmen, the latter a preseason pick for All-American honors. Others noted for their basketball ability are Jack Salee, only 6'2", and Chris Harris, a short 6'.

Niagara a Threat

The Purple Eagles from Niagara, coached by Taps Gallagher, one of the geniuses of the game, are always hungry, and are noted for their surprise upsets, particularly in Garden play. Two of their outstanding men, Charlie Hoxie and Ed Fleming, are both veterans of the game, and together form one of the most efficient rebounding combinations in the country. Both Hoxie and Fleming are also sharp-shooters, mainly hitting with un-stoppable jump shots.

UCLA, the West Coast invitation, is touted as one of the nation's best also. Probably it is the best team to emerge from

Inexperience and Shortage of Men Swim Problems

By Cisco Ronez

After a rather dismal beginning consequent to the twelve year lapse which they suffered, Villanova's Varsity swimming team began practice last week in an effort to better their 2-7 slate compiled last year.

There are however, a few deficiencies on this year's tank team which must be overcome. Perhaps the most important problem which faces coach Ed Geisz is the lack of depth in any of the events. Another important problem is the inexperience of the mermen in Varsity competition. The team is comprised mostly of sophomores; only two experienced swimmers returned from last year's team.

Some Promising Sophs

Among the more promising talent joining the team this year are: Don Couig, a sophomore, and co-captain of last season's freshman squad, who, aside from showing much versatility in competition, also holds the Villanova University record for the 200 yd. backstroke, finishing the distance in 2:23.2. minutes; Don Devlin, the other frosh co-captain last year, who is also highly regarded by Geisz; Den Rinkacs, a freestyler; and Bob Duffy, another Soph.

Other swimmers are Leroy Sykes, Jim Donnelly, and George Allen, all of whom are first year men. Competing for Villanova in diving will be Jim Judge and Walt Ulrich, also new to the spring board this year.

Only Two Veterans

The two "old men" of the squad are both juniors. George Sinnott, mainly a distance man last year, is returning to bolster the team, as is Pat Kean, who was relied upon heavily in the diving events last year. Kean has given up diving in place of swimming competition.

However poor the chances of this year's team may seem in face of the problems which they must overcome, there does seem to be one thing in favor of this year's inexperienced team. In contrast to last year's mermen, who practiced whenever they had time, Coach Geisz, this season, has set up definite hours for conditioning his team. In that way, he can check on the progress which his team is making, and also aid them in their styles.

Line-up For Events

A tentative line-up of swimmers for the specific events during a meet are: Den Rinkacs and Bob Duffy, 100 yd. freestyle; Don Couig and Lee Carson, 200 yd. backstroke; 300 yd. medley relay, Couig, Leroy Sykes, and Don Devlin; Jim Donnelly, 220 freestyle; Rinkacs and Duffy, 50 freestyle; Couig, 200 individual medley; George Allen, 200 orthodox breaststroke; Donnelly, 440 freestyle; and Pat Kean, Duffy, Devlin, Rinkacs, and Dick Harris, 400 yd. freestyle relay.

Promising young freshmen brighten the outlook for future swimming teams. Some of the better frosh tanksmen include: Bob McMullen, Mike Klesius, Lou Pinto, Lou Schoner, John Flynn and Jim Kennedy.

150-lb. Football Dropped; Lack of Facilities Cited

By Tom Smith

Until the necessary and proper facilities are available for "proper and safe playing of the sport," Villanova will not be represented by a 150-pound football team.

This action was announced last week by the Board of Athletic Control.

Reasons Given

Following are the reasons given by the Board for the discontinuence of fthe game:

"(1) Lack of necessary and proper facilities in the Field House. There isn't sufficient space for lockers and proper medica lattention at one and the same time for varsity and freshman football squads, varsity and freshman track, varsity and freshman basketball, along with 150 pound.

(2) Insufficient time for training and practice sessions. Because of limited amount of classroom space available on campus at the present time, it has become increasingly impossible to permit all students mentioned on above teams to be given morning and early afternoon classes. Pre-med and engineering students were particularly affected.

(3) There were several occasions in the past few season

Schafer, Devine Pace Team, Play Overpowers Maurice

Loyola (of Baltimore) and St. Francis (of Loretto) became victims number two and three of the current Villanova winning streak as they bowed to the Wildcats last week. The fact that each game resulted in a Villanova win, though, was about the only similarity between the two games.

Last Wednesday in the Field House Villanova played just as well as necessary to defeat the visiting Greyhounds 81-67. It was a close contest for a quarter, but the shooting and rebounding of Jack Devine and Jack Weissman and the accurate work at the foul line by Jim slowly gave the home team a comfortable 12-point edge after three quarters. Bobby Schafer, reluctant to shoot early in the game, scored fourteen of the Wildcats last sixteen points to stymie any Loyola hope for a rally. The blonde bomber was the only starter to play the last period. Schafer, with 24 points, and Devine, with 23, led the scorers.

Great Rally

Pressed for the first time this season ,the Severance quintet played championship ball for the last 11 minutes to overcome the Stokes-led St. Francis five. With the heat on, Bobby Schafer was his usual brilliant self, and led the comeback that turned an apparent defeat into a hard-earned win. Included among Dutch's 37 tallies were two consecutive long set shots in the crucial rally.

Down by 17 points with only ten and a half minutes to go, Villanova staged one of the greatest rallies ever seen in the Palestra. Smith dropped three foul shots, Stokes picking up his fourth personal to account for two of the charity tosses. Maurice, about whom the St. Francis attack revolves, sat out the next five minutes. By the time he got back in the Wildcats had cut the lead to three. Even with Stokes again in action, the Frankies could not stop the Villanova surge. No more than three points separated the teams during the last four minutes. A clutch basket by Jack Weissman ,and double foul conversions by Schafer, Smith, and Weissman sent the stunned crowd home happy.

All-Stars to Face Inter-School Foes; Bowling Begins

By Ben Klemanowicz

Now that the basketball season is under way, Ed Geisz can focus his attention on his other winter intramurals, and the always difficult problem of selecting the traditional intramural All-Star team. This team will be chosen by Jim Moran and his Basketball Commission, and will consist of the top fifteen players in the intramural leagues. Besides the customary game with the freshman team, games with St. Joe's La Salle, Penn, and some local Bryn Mawr teams have been scheduled. These additional games should make the honor of being on the All-Star team a much more coveted prize.

Zips Win

A team that is a good bet to place men on the All-Star is the Zips, who, led by John Thompson and John Graziano, successfully opened their season with a 58-33 victory over the Mongrels. However the competition will be tough, and the Zips will have to keep up this pace if they want to stay in the running.

Besides the basketball leagues, Ed Geisz has organized both a wrestling and a weight lifting league. These phases of intramurals take place in the field house nearly every afternoon.

Bowling League

Another new activity that is now in operation is the bowling league, which has been established by Phi Kappa Pi fraternity. This league consists of twelve teams. One squad consists only of professors, with all the rest made up of fraternity members. However, if anyone is interested in bowling in the afternoons, he should see either Tom Ulrich or Jim Wrzesinski. Up to now the Slide-Rulers, consisting of Larry Marhoefer, Vince Bresan, Val Brasher, and Ron Howell are leading the league with their recent victory over the B' wlegs.

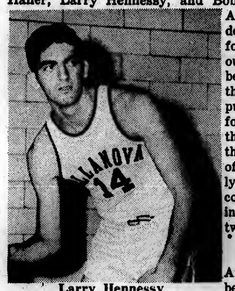
Letter To The Editor

By Joe Heaps

The following letter was received by the sports department of the VILLANOVAN:



To the Editors:

In the past three years, great strides have been taken to place Villanova on top of the collegiate sports world. Bud Dudley, Bill Ryan, and perhaps the greatest football coaching staff in the country have been brought in to bring the Wildcats into national prominence.

Villanova may continue to bring energetic and talented man into its front office, and continue to put outstanding athletes on the playing fields. But no matter how great the future talent, one great problem remains—and that problem is based on the fact that collegiate sports today is first and foremost a battle of publicity.

ONLY ARIZIN FETED

During the last five years, Villanova has produced numerous outstanding athletes, notably Gene Filipski, Paul Arizin, Bob Haner, Larry Hennessy, and Bob Schafer. Of all these, only Arizin gained the recognition he deserved. It was Arizin's good fortune, however, not only to outplay the great Alex Groza before packed press boxes in the NCAA playoffs, but also to put on the greatest scoring performance ever witnessed up to that time, 85 points. Winner of the Helms Foundation Player of the Year award, Paul quickly justified his selection by becoming the Number One scorer in the pro ranks within a scant two years.

Larry Hennessy

Unanswered Questions

However, after the age of Arizin, many questions have been left unanswered concerning the fortunes of the above players and numerous others. Here are just a few:

How is it that Larry Hennessy, whose 29.2 point average is the third highest in basketball history, whose 67 points still stands as the Sugar Bowl record, whose 703 points was the highest total ever compiled by a sophomore—the man whom Ed Hickey of St. Louis called the greatest individual player of the year—member of the East-West squad and the Globetrotter tour—was unable to make anything better than one second-team All-American—and that with his name misspelled?

How is it that Gene Filipski, heralded by Army as a successor to Glenn Davis after singlehandedly beating Penn, 28-13 in his sophomore year—the same Filipski who later at Villanova was voted the outstanding player in the senior bowl game and was named co-captain of the East team in the Shrine game—leading ground-gainer in the nation for six consecutive weeks—one of Paul Brown's first draft choices as a junior—was able to gain recognition by only one poll as a first team All-American—and weeks before his post-season bowl triumphs gained a pitiful second team berth on the All-Pennsylvania team?

SCHAFER RECORDS

How is it that Bob Schafer, second highest scorer in the nation last year and the fourth highest point-getter is history with, 836 points, who scored 43 and 30 against N. C. State, 25 and 36 against Fordham, 34 against L.S.U. in the Sugar Bowl, and holds the Palestra with a 46 point spree against Baldwin Wallace—the same publicity director's dream who shoots fouls from the corner and who was called basketball greatest shot by Everett Case of State and Johnny Bach of Fordham—the player who has already eclipsed the scoring feats of Paul Arizin at just the start of his senior year—has for his major distinction an honorable mention berth on Sport Magazine extensive list—and also, of course, misspelled?

How is it that seven Villanova football players were drafted by the pros from the 1953 squad and yet only one of these, Filipski, was named among the thirty-three top players in Pennsylvania? And why did not one Villanovan made the first three teams this year, although such top powers as Juniata, Shippensburgh, Lockhaven St. and P.M.C. were represented, with P.M.C. contributing both a Senior and a Freshman.

How is it that Bob Haner, whom Michigan State's Biggie Munn named as the best blocking back in the nation—who was the third leading scorer in the country,—responsible for the deciding points in the Shrine game—was missing from the All-East team—and also only was second on the AP's State list to might West Chester's fullback . . How is it that Jack Devine, 15th leading rebounder in the nation, not only lost out to the likes of Marvin Shaw of CCNY on the All-East team, but was rated as only seventh man in Philadelphia? How is it that Villanova's basketball team, winner of twenty games last year, with everyone back but the manager, reinforced by the members of last year's successful freshman team, failed to make the UP pre-season poll, which included the top 46 teams in the country? . . . And how is it that from the time of Arizin's 85 point record-maker to the present era, Villanova has continued to be an orphan to Penn, Temple and La Salle in Philadelphia newspaper circles? . . .

Is it that these men are not as outstanding in their athletic prowess as their records would indicate—or is it simply that no one knows them? What will become of the future greats, the Braggs, the Jenkins? Sports is a battle of publicity.

Smith's Prowess Asset To Varsity

By Darryl Ditenfest

Perhaps the expression "old college try" is trite and long worn-out, but it seems to be a phrase that suits Jimmy Smith to perfection. For Smitty, as all Smith's are universally referred to, is one of those ball players who gives his all every time he dons his uniform.

Jimmy came to Villanova in February of 1953, after transferring from Loyola of Los Angeles. He was ineligible to play basketball at the time, because of an NCAA ruling prohibiting transfer athletes for a year.

Last year, playing as a freshman for the first two months of the season, Jim couldn't be stopped by the opposition. He was a leading factor in the freshmen's fine record, before he moved up to the Varsity in February.

Startles Opposition

In his first game, and all those following, Smitty evidently didn't realize that he had moved from Freshmen to Varsity, because he kept playing outstanding basketball. An account of the Villanova-Boston College game, Jim's fourth Varsity encounter up to that time, said: "As in the three previous games last week, it was Jimmy Smith who made the big difference in the game." What the author of that article meant, actually, was the fact that Smitty, supposedly a new, and "green," sophomore, had averaged fourteen points a game, besides accounting for many rebounds and stylish court work.

A graduate of West Catholic High School in Philadelphia, Jim, oddly enough, did not achieve the recognition which is his. During his first three years at West Catholic, he played only jayvee ball. It was only through the efforts of one of the Brothers that he was not cut from the Varsity when he was a Senior.

Attended Summer Camp

Things changed, however, in the next few years. During that time, Jimmy added a few inches to his lanky frame, and polished up on his basketball while attending summer camp upstate in Stroudsburg. The name of the camp, incidentally, is Wyomissing. The truth is though, that Jimmy was not missing, nor were his teammates who also were counsellors at the at the same camp. When they returned from their summer vacation last year, senior counsellor Schafer, Devine, Foley, and Smity proved only to well that the question, Wyomissing, didn't pertain to them. The final record last year is merely past history.

Excels This Season

Little need be said about Jimmy's ability thus far this season. In the three home games to date, Villanova followers have admirably regarded number 24, as he went about his toils on the hardwoods. Hitting double figures consistently is just one of the things that Jimmy does well. Ball-snatching from the opposition is another one of his favorite pastimes, and Jimmy usually capitalizes on it.

Frosh Down Loyola; Kelly Scores 30 In First Defeat

By Bob Mulcahy

In two games last week, Villanova's freshman basketball team split, defeating the Loyola Frosh 77-54 ,and losing to a well - balanced West Catholic High five, 70-69.

Villanova jumped out to a 8-0 lead before Henneman hit on a set shot for Loyola. However, the Frosh came right back on a jump shot and two foul shots by Frank Singsheim, to take a commanding lead.

Brennan Drops Three

From this point, the Mainliners were never headed, although Loyola bounced back from a 31-18 deficit at half time to pull within six points. Tom Brennan hit for three field goals in three minutes to help Villanova pull out to a 56-37 third quarter advantage.

Individual standouts for the home forces were Singsheim and Brennan, while Goodhues and McGuire excelled for the visitors from Baltimore.

From the spectators viewpoint, the West Catholic game was a thriller all the way. The tremendous last ditch rally by Villanova almost pulled the game out of the fire. The lead changed hands frequently. A second quarter scoring spree by Jack Kelly helped the Mainliners to stay close despite their poor rebounding.

West Increases Lead

West Catholic, which possessed a 35-31 lead at the intermission, came out fast, and increased their lead to 43-35 on the accurate shooting of Joe Spratt and Jim McNichol.

Outstanding for Villanova was Jack Kelly, who garnered 30 points and captured 15 rebounds to cap his best performance of the young season.

REGIONAL CONFERENCE—

Struggling students, fundamentals for efficient student organizations, and Villanova Student Council's plan to limit number of tests a student may take in one day came in for discussion during a meeting of the Regional Student Government Commission the National Federation of Catholic Students.

Meeting in the Naval Science Building Library, the 35 representatives of seven area colleges informally discussed the Student Council proposal, but made no recommendations.

Chairman Dick Winfield, of Villanova's Council, outlined for delegates the fundamentals for efficient organizations: leaders chosen in well-ordered elections; initiative shown by leaders; promotion of activity; ability of leaders

NFCCS Plans Mardi Gras Atmosphere For Jan. Dance

New Orleans' world-famed Mardi Gras, with its gay atmosphere, will provide the spark for the National Federation of Catholic College Students' Mardi Gras Bal lin the Field House Jan. 14 from 9 to 1.

Decorations Co-Chairman Bob Schiller announced plans for the affair and added that a queen will be selected to reign over the dance. However, he would not describe specifically how she would be chosen.

Schiller would only say that Her Majesty will be selected in the tradition of the Twelfth Revelers, one of the crews which march in the pre-Lenten festival in the Southern city.

General chairman for the dance is Paul Donahue. Other committee heads are: Decorations Co-Chairman Frank Collins; tickets, Ed Fletcher; publicity, Jim Greenlee; refreshments, Ed Buritsch.

Music will be supplied by the Villanovans. Tickets, priced at $1.50, will go on sale after vacation.

Villanova Wins Right to New York Estate

Villanova last week won the right to accept a million dollar estate willed it by a late member of the university's advisory council.

The grant by the late Eugene L. Garey, prominent New York City attorney, had been challenged by three half-brothers and three-half sisters. They said a clause in the university's charter provided that the school "can take any estate, by gift or otherwise, provided the annual income of same does not exceed $5000."

Villanova's counsel told the Westchester County court that general laws of Pennsylvania, adopted in 1915, 1929 and 1933, had removed any limitations on giftfs to religious institutions. In addition, the university had amended its charter last August to eliminate the limitations clause.

Surrogate Charles Griffiths then ruled in favor of Villanova.

Mr. Garey's will left his estate in trust to his widow, who receives the income for life. At her death the state passes on to Villanova.

Mr. Garey, who was 61 when he died May 20, 1953, received an honorary degree of Doctor of Laws from Villanova in 1948.

architectural details of the building, which is designed for efficient handling of students.

Structural Phase

Mr. John M. Schuyler, Class of '29, discussed the structural phase of the work and Mr. John T. Edwards lectured on the mechanical and electrical considerations of the new hall. Mr. Patrick Henry, of H. E. Frazer and Co. told of the electrical contracting work.

Dougherty Hall's mechanical layout was presented by Mr. Henry Dagit, and Mr. John P. Murdoch and Mr. John Seelaus reviewed the air conditioning and refrigeration installations. Mr. Charles Dagit instructed the interested audience in the method of writing up specifications for a building the size of Dougherty Hall.

Important Details

The panel discussion which followed brought out some of the details most important to the students present. Such factors as dining hall size and facilities, the student activities offices, and entrances and exits were explained.

Mr. John J. Gallen, head of the Civil Engineering department, concluding the meeting, thanked the participants and audience for an entertaining and instructive meeting. Refreshments and informal discussion brought the evening to a close.

A.S.C.E. President Maggiore, Jim Wrzesinski, A.I.E.E.-I.R.E. leader and A.S.M.E. President Bob Erskine followed a precedent set last year when the groups invited the Dagit and Farrell firms to discuss the construction of the now occupied Sullivan Hall.

Over twenty teams representing districts all over the country will take part in the arguments. Villanova University and the University of Pittsburgh have their Law Schools as representatives of this district. Both were selected after competing against the Law Schools of Temple and several teams from the University of Pennsylvania. Villanova beat both Temple and the Penn "A" team in the district round.

The national tourney is an elimination affair. Villanova School of Law, only in its second year of existence ,is the only school solely represented by second year men.

Garbarino, top man in the class last year ,received a B. B. A. from St. Bonaventure's prior to his two year hitch with the Marines. Flores, second man, graduated from Siena College with a B. A., and Garland, third in standing, received his B. B. A. degree from Loyo'a of Baltimore.

Steering Committee

The members of the Class of 1956 Steering Committee are requested to attend an important meeting this evening at 5:30 in 215 Mendel Hall.

Smith

Reflecting on the season to date, Smitty had this to say about the team: "Since the West Chester opener, I think that the team has improved with every game. The Soph's, every one of them, have helped a lot. One thing for sure though, we sure miss Marty Milligan. His ankle injury certainly doesn't add to the strength of the club; I hope that he can make the trip to the Garden over Christmas, because he's too valuable to be sitting it out. With the team at full strength, we have a good chance to end up with one of the top records in the country."

With that statement, Jim seems to sum up the feelings of the whole team, of which he is so integral a part.

when the only time the 150 pound team managed to get together as a group was for a scheduled game. Such conditions can lead to serious injuries.

(4) Violations of league rules which were in part due to the above conditions."

Stated the Athletic Board: "In fairness to the boys here at Villanova and the (Eastern Intercollegiate 150 pound) League itself, it was thought best to discontinue the sport for the time being."

A high administrative source which asked to remain unidentified, would not elaborate on the violations of league rules which is listed as one of the reasons for dropping the wide open sport from the sports curriculum.

Participation by Wildcat clubs in the Eastern Intercollegiate 150 pound League has been of an off-and-on nature. After roll-to a league championship in 1949, with only a loss to Navy marring a clean record, Villanova discontinued the game in 1951.

At the time, the league had tentatively decided not to operate because of the unsettled draft situation. However, the rest of the league members, besides Villanova, decided to play a regular card.

Villanova athletic officials announced then that the sport would be resumed in 1952, but because appropriations for 1952-53 athletic program had already been filed, the Wildcats would not be able to operate on the short notice given by the league.

Since the 150 pound club was reinstated in 1952, the team has gone for 14 consecutive games without tasting victory..

Concert Band Rehearsals Begin; Schiller Conducts

Villanova's Concert Band, fortified with at least six new arrangements, has begun rehearsals for its concert season, which begins in February after the first semester lay off.

Student Conductor Bob Schiller said the band will carry between 40 and 45 men when it opens its season with a concert at St. John's Orphanage.

Schiller said the new arrangements ordered by Rev. Joseph J. Burns, O. S. A., band moderator, are: "Student Prince Overture," "King and I," "Dry Bones" (novelty), "At the Gremlin Ball," "Gillette Cavalcade March," and "Guadalcanal March."

Belle Masque, Villanova's dramatic society, will discuss plans for a dinner dance sometime in February during a meeting in 101 C&F today at 7:30 west of the Rockies in a long time.

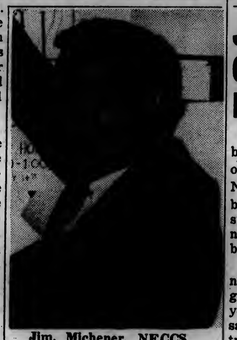
The upstate terror this year, Syracuse, should also prove worthy of the tournament. It was beaten in a close decision by the Rams from Fordham last week, which is no shameful defeat.

And last but certainly not least are St. John's Redmen. Dusty De Stefano's charges are supposed to be loaded this year—big, fast, and adept. Marty Satalino and Pete Carroll should lead the Redmen in their scalping raids.

Villanova Prospects



And, against this vast talent, what does Villanova, Ned Irish's favorite, have to offer? Well, there is an unjustly obscure sharpshooter named Bob Schafer, who tallied some 836 points last year, and seems determined to repeat that effort again this season. Jack Devine, the Wildcat captain, one of the best rebounders on the team, should go a bit wild, as should Jimmy Smith, all-around troublemaker, and defensive hawk Larry Tierney. Marty Milligan, if his ankle heals, and Tom Foley, the remaining veterans, should prove themselves also.

Mardi Gras Theme Set For Annual NFCCS Dance

If patrons at the Mardi Gras Ball don't start jumping as if they were on Basin Street, it won't be the fault of the National Federation of Catholic College Students.

For the dance Friday night from 9 to 1 in the Field House, the NFCCS is providing plenty of the atmosphere that has made the famed pre-Lenten celebration in historic New Orleans a must for tourists from all over the world.

Jim, Michener, NFCCS Regional Treasurer

Ball Chairman Paul Donohue and Decorations co-chairmen Bob Schiller and Frank Collins won't divulge detailed plans for the physical setting, but they did mention a three-tiered musical float.

Her Majesty Reigns

Besides holding the band, the float will help to carry out the Mardi Gras theme. Feature attraction of the ball will be the crowning of a queen in true Mardi Gras style.

Providing music for the dancers will be the Villanovans, a campus aggregation which has built quite a reputation by furnishing danceable music for college fraternity dances in the Philadelphia area.

The five-piece band is under the direction of the talented Schiller, who also designed the Mardi Gras decorations and planned the Field House setting for the ball. A resident of Malverne, L. I., Schiller is also student conductor of the concert band.

Tickets in Pie Shoppe

Other music makers with the Villanovans are Pat Briody, Mike Guida, Jack Gilfillan and Jim McCarthy.

Tickets at 1.50 per couple are on sale in the Pie Shoppe or from any member of NFCCS, according to Ticket Chairman Ed Fletcher.

Remaining chairmen of the ball are Jim Greenlee and Bob Fallon, posters; Leo Burk and Ed Buritsch, refreshments.

Junior Affair Set At Palumbo's Night Club:

Dinner Dance Site Settled

With the top social week of their college careers already less than 15 weeks away, Junior Week committee chairmen have set to work to expand plans whose foundations were laid early in the first semester.

The chairmen, governing events that will extend from Sunday evening, May 1, through Saturday night, May 7, met with Father Calpin and the class officers last week, as well as their respective committee members, and all show progress in their projects for the big week.

Downtown Location

The most outstanding deal-closing was affected by Dinner Dance chairman Dick Fitzpatrick, treasurer Jerry Guerrisi and his assistants, Bob McDonnell and Jim Hippler, who reported that Palumbo's, a night-club in downtown Philadelphia, has been agreed to and obtained as the location for the annual affair closing Junior Week.

The deal was closed after an extremely exhaustive study that had to overcome the problem—the first time such a situation has existed—of the class' size, which prohibited the signing of any local hotel accomodations except at the Broadwood, which was taken over three months ago, and the Bellevue - Stratford, which would have required a per-man price of around $14.

Impressive Club

Here's the situation at Palumbo's, a very beautiful and very impressive club, in the words of chairman Fitzpatrick:

"Palumbo's will close its doors to the public for the night and we will be treated as a private party. The price will be a flat $10, which not only includes the usual band entertainment (Tony Desmond has already been signed for the dance) but also a floor show provided by the club, plus three small combos that will play during dinner and afterwards, in addition to Desmond."

The reason that another musical group will be playing at the same time as Desmond is this: Palumbo's, while large enough to accomodate all of the nearly 95% of the class that has indicated it is going, will have to seat some 300 couples in its lower dining hall, and some 500 or more in the upstairs hall. There is an elevating stage that rises and descends between the two levels; while one group is eating and listening to a combo's music, the floor show will be presented to the other group; then vice-versa.

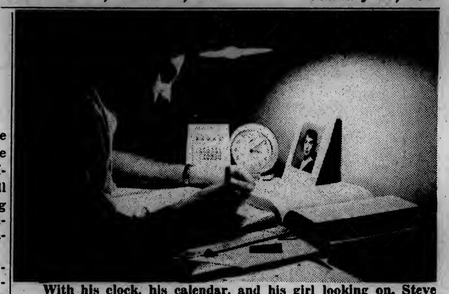
January Issue Of ENGINEER Due Next Week

The finishing touches have been put on the January issue of the VILLANOVA ENGINEER, and the magazine will be distributed to engineering students early next week, announced Editor Dick Spangenberg.



Since 1955 is the Golden Anniversary of the School of Engineering, the first issue of the year will be in the form of a salute. Various articles will trace the history and development of the departments within the school (Civil, Electrical, Chemical, and Mechanical). A brief sketch is also given of the individual faculty members and their backgrounds. The various laboratories and their equipment is discussed, along with the curriculum followed in the different branches.

Outstanding Graduates

A short biography of an outstanding graduate of each of the four departments will be presented, as well as a short message from each of these men.

In parallel with the development of engineering at Villanova, a story has been written by Jack Gerrard on the progress of the automobile during the past fifty years. It illustrates the important part that every branch of engineering has played in this phenomenal growth.

The Return To Reality: Exams Thirteen Days Off

What a disillusioning school calendar! While you're still trying to catch up on the old sack time and throw down a few real square meals to round into shape for the sleepless semester layoff, the administration slips in a most distressing routine-rattler . . . semester exams.

And so the typical Villanovan, as weary as he can be from partying and socializing during a gay yuletide season, must touch his toes to the ground with a thud.

There's work to be done . . . those spanking clean texts—carefully placed on desk bookshelves one bright September day (or was it late October?—the bookstore lines were pretty long), must be pulled into the daylight, dusted of and hastily opened . . .

Open Door Policy

Temporary substitutes must be hunted for textbook-doorstops while the Villanovan plunges into the frenzied period of panic, anticipating those horrible measuring instruments of his scholastic prowess—or lack of same . . .

And maybe a couple of texts, which came in plenty handy as elevators for shortened legs of desks and chairs, will have to be pushed into the offensive as "E-Day" looms such a short 13 days ahead . . . remember how the last 13 24-hour periods of the Christmas season of revelry passed as swiftly as Ron Delany breezing down the home-stretch? . . .

Aah, yes, it's the season of the academic (there's only one other like it) year when the pin ball machines in the Pie Shoppe start drawing unemployment compensation . . . when you can't start a bull session with the promise a hot tale about last summer's swabbie cruise . . .

"Gone With the Registrar"

But as fair Scarlet sighed, "there's a brighter day tomorrow" (maybe you will have to wait till the end of January) . . . and then the holiday routine begins again . . . with a few minutes off to think up a few novel angles to distract the family elders when Father Burke's little bombshell—all dressed up in a white envelope—lands in the family mail box . . .

Better grab up a few home cooked meals while you're there, though it may be your last trip to the fireside until along about the sixth of April . . .

Only perplexing thing about the whole situation: you can't peddle mail during this lay off.

SENIORS' SHOW

To clear up the senior class debt, President Bud Ford has announced a combined concert by the Villanova Singers and a dance. The program is tentatively scheduled for sometime early in the second semester.

Ford said the action was taken at a pre-Christmas meeting, attended by some 90 seniors.

Whether or not the class sponsors a Fathers' Day in the spring depends on the success of the concert-dance, Ford hinted.

Ford said each senior would be asked to pick up three tickets at registration for the second semester, Feb. 7 through 9. The seniors would then resell the $1 tickets or use them.

Dancing would follow the concert by the Singers, Ford said, in describing the night's program.

A Welcome Addition . . .

Even though not everyone on campus may agree, the presence of "Leary Hall" at the entrance to Villanova is a welcome addition to the campus scene.

Now it is possible for pedestrians on their way from one building to another to keep to the road without being forced into the mud by a succession of drivers more interested in getting to class on time than in keeping their fellow Villanovans alive.

It is by the grace of God that this university was spared serious, even fatal on-campus accidents during the years before the erection of the new guard house. Many times we witnessed accidents in which the escape of pedestrians was narrow, indeed.

Despite the fact that the university authorities have taken every sep now within their powers to protect the lives of Villanovans, some of our students still determined to get themselves killed while at school.

Those who were here two years ago may remember that a Villanova freshman was killed by a speeding car while he was crossing Lancaster Pike at the Ithan Avenue intersection. They may also remember that at the time Father Kemme announced that this had been the seventeenth fatality at that particular crossing. It might be added that an extremely high percentage of the dead were Villanova students.

Yet Villanovans, unimpressed by this grisly record, continue to cross against the light. Apparently their attitude is "Well, it may have happened in those other cases, but it certainly can't happen to me." Unfortunately, that just isn't so.

Those lights on Lancaster Avenue were only erected after the number of deaths had reached a total so high that the township authorities had to put them up to satisfy an aroused public opinion.

Those lights are there because Villanovans died. Don't make their deaths completely vain by adding yourself to the list of Villanova pedestrian fatalities. It's much too long already.

An Unwelcome Tag . . .

It seems that there is nothing so effective in bringing out the entire membership of a club or organization or activity as the posted announcement that lists dates and times for yearbook picture-taking.

No matter how well-advertised it may be, the appearance of a prominent speaker, the advent of a major club project, on the need for a full turnout in any field always seems to go unnoticed by a goodly number of Villanovans, who, as a result of their consistent inability to turn up when needed, at least until time when yearbook shots are taken, have acquired the very significant tag of "joiner".

Certainly, there is nothing wrong, in fact, everything commendable, in showing up for yearbook pictures, as Frank Gunther will attest, but the entrance of lads who have played hide-and-seek all year long when called upon always has a galling effect on their more faithful colleagues. We know who these fellows are—the ones who are impressionable enough to believe that quantity means quality, that diversity involves excellence, that signing up for this or that makes for the summum bonum of the well-rounded extra-curricular artist.

In other words, shy away from the "joiner" category; it may mean a longer individual history under the senior portraits, but it hardly induces a great deal of respect from one's fellows, and usually results in semi-effectiveness and shallowness.

Let us be realistic—anyone can sign a membership list at the beginning of the year; many do, and are never seen again.

Don't be included.

Latin America Needs Aid But U. S. Ignoring Problem

By Ed Daly

During the last war, Sir Winston Churchill was often quoted as advocating an attack on Germany through the Balkans, which he called "the soft underbelly of Europe."

In the event of another war, some Russian leaders might easily argue for an attack on the United States through the "soft underbelly" of the New World, Latin America.

Worry About Europe

Here in the United States, statesmen have been concerned with the problem of checking communism in the most distant parts of Europe and Asia, and enormous funds to accomplish this purpose have been spent in Western Europe, in Korea and Indo-China, in Iran, Greece, and Turkey, but the sums spent in Latin America for that or any other purpose have been small indeed.

Yet the danger of Communism in that part of the world is very serious. At first glance, this may appear ridiculous. Latin America is Catholic, and, of course, Catholics can't be communists. Unfortunately, however, the problem is not quite that simple.

To begin with, the Church in Latin America is desperately understaffed. Besides, the people are desperately poor and ignorant, and the influence of Christian social doctrine is slight among large sections of the population.

Ruling Class, Problem

In addition to that, the Church in some Latin countries is associated in the minds of many with the ruling classes. Whether this association is valid or not is not the point; the point is that many people believe it and will therefore not listen to the Church when it speaks on social matters.

Numerically, the Communists are a very small group in most of Latin America. There are many communists in Brazil, Chile, Mexico, Guatemala, Cuba, and the colonial areas of the Caribbean, however, and the progress they have made in those parts has been frightening.

Most Americans began to realize that communism could be a peril in Latin America when the Red-influenced Arbenz regime in Guatemala began to act flagrantly against its opponents. Yet Red influence in that country had begun under Arbenz's predecessor, Arevalo, years before.

Greater Worry

Fortunately for this country, the Arbenz administration was overthrown. So was another government that the American public failed to worry about, let one that was potentially more dangerous to the United States—the pro-communist regime of Chedi Jagan in aluminum-rich British Guiana.

The overthrow of two red-tinged governments does not end the communist menace in Latin America. Communists maintain control of the most important labor unions in that part of the world—the nitrate miners of Chile, the bauxite miners of British Guiana, the Trade Unions Congress of Jamaica, and many of the big Mexican and Brazilian unions.

In view of the traditional instability of Latin American governments, this poses a real threat. It does not take much to provide a revolution in many Latin countries. Although the situation in that regard has improved in recent years, the existence of so powerful a force as the communist-controlled unions is dangerous in the extreme.

Still We Sleep

In spite of this situation, the American people and government slumbers on. When a visiting congressman criticized the policy of slight aid to Latin America, the United States Ambassador to Brazil cancelled an official invitation to him. To be sure, the ambassador has since been replaced, but it is doubtful that is the reason.

There is still no indication that aid to Latin America will increase. Apparently our government still feels that our southern neighbors are safe from communism. It is to be hoped that this is true for if South America is lost victory in Greece will be of little avail.

Strictly Opinion . . .

By Frank Hartmann

At this time, when Villanova is launching its ambitious expansion program, I would like to take the liberty of pointing out to Villanova some of the errors of other schools in obtaining Alumni support and future Alumni support. Surely no institution of higher learning can expect to expand greatly or even to exist usefully without the active and vigorous assistance of an interested alumni.

If we compare the figures for the endowment of non-Catholic colleges and Catholic colleges, we will not notice a large discrepancy. Surely, many will say, this is due to the fact that the alumni of the average non-Catholic college is larger and wealthier than our own alumni. This undoubtely is true, but further investigation will show that their endowments are larger than those of the average non-Catholic college. This is not due to the size and wealth cited above but rather because their alumni is more interested in their alma mater than the alumni of a Catholic college. I am laying this difficulty largely at the feet of the administrators of Catholic colleges.

When Georgetown University decided to drop college football a few years ago, the alumni wasn't informed of the fact until the public was, having not even been consulted about the problem. Do you think that Yale, Michigan, or Stanford would contemplate such an important undertaking without polling its alumni? Certainly not. The Catholic college administrators took it upon themselves to make the decision. Herein lie a major difficulty between the alumni and administration of a Catholic college. The alumni feels too often that it is needed only for the financial end, with the administration making all the decisions.

Stubborn Administration

Now we come to the second major stumbling block in alumni-administration relationship. Many students trying to suggest changes in the Catholic college have run into the attitude of the administration, "We have to spend our lives here, you are here for only four years, why should a change be made in your behalf." The faculty too often tends to think that it constitutes the college rather than that the student body does. A student is too often made to feel that he is merely putting time in rather than being a functional part of the institution itself.

These impressions were not gained from idle glancing around, but were broached by a prominent active alumnus of one of America's outstanding Catholic Universities as a helping hand to Villanova. Neither he or I say that Villanova has these faults, but those it doesn't have should be avoided, and ones it will admit to should be remedied.

Campus Comment...

Disheartening news from India discloses that the doctor-patient ratio is 1 to 100,000 whereas in the United States it is about 1 to 800. The average Indian lives 27 years, but of course modern Indians don't even live; they "coexist." . . .

Tommy Roddy, sopohomore pre-med, was severely jolted by a Sunday evening dining hall experience. He left his portion of the bi-monthly roast chicken treat for just a moment to hang up his coat. When he returned, he was shocked to see that his chicken had finished the potatoes and was halfway through the ice cream. Tom slipped the rest of the precious ice cream in his pocket and escaped just in time . . .

Apparently only the more brilliant Civil Engineers were put to work on the newest marvel of campus construction. That bridge over the disjointed sidewalk in front of the Chemical Engineering building is certainly modernistic . . . They were clever in leaving room for warm weather expansion, and they used a material that will float . . .

Congratulations are in order to the Navy's new Commander I. M. Rowell, Villanova's erudite NROTC porfessor of navigation. Just keep your eyes on the stars, and you too can get ahead . . .

Meet Villanova's Violinist:

By Jim Wrzesinki

Unusual Past Of Math Major Revealed

We have in our midst a student who has already experienced a degree of fame that few of us may ever hope to reach. Even while the rest of us were playing marbles and roller skating, he was meeting presidents and dignitaries and being acclaimed as a "boy prodigy."

His public life of honor began before he was eight years old. While attending Philadelphia's Resurrection Grammar School, Ted Kuligowski won a gold star playing "Mary Had a Little Lamb" on the violin.

FDR's Birthday

At the age of eight, he played and sang "God Bless America" and "Happy Birthday To You" for the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt at a Philadelphia March of Dimes program in 1941. This began a long series of public appearances in bond-selling rallies and benefits all through the Second World War.

His patriotic songs and "light classical" pieces were heard by such eminent persons as the late Cardinal Dougherty, the late Wendell Willkie, Irving Berlin, the King of Greece, the President of Lithuania, Marian Anderson, and countless senators, congressmen, and mayors. These sweet melodies and his bright soprano voice were also heard by thousands of soldiers and citizens who came to the many rallies and benefits in cities as far away as Boston, Baltimore, and Chicago.

It was reported that over eleven million dollars in war bonds were sold through rallies in which Kuligowski performed.

White House Visit

In 1944, President Roosevelt summoned young Ted to his traditional March of Dimes "Command Performance" birthday dinner at the White House. This time Ted played "My Country 'tis of Thee" and "Artillery Song" for the president.

FDR presented the eleven-year-old violinist with a special citation and an honorary Captain's commission in the United States Army. At the war's end the Veteran's of Foreign Wars gave him a Citizenship Medal and made him an honorary member of their organization in honor of his wartime activities.

Vets and Children

Ted began to play for returned and wounded veterans and for crippled children. He still managed to get around a great deal. After finishing the last five years of his grammar school education at St. William's, he won a music scholarship to LaSalle College High School. He performed on children's "Heigh-do-ho" and "Magic Lady" musical talent programs. A young singer named Eddie Fisher appeared on at least one of these shows with him.

It wasn't long before Ted's voice changed, and he stopped singing, perhaps for good reason. But he has continued to play the violin, (and oh yes, the piccolo and the flute on the side). His interests and ambitions changed also however, and he entered Villanova in Sept. 1950 to study electrical engineering. He also joined the NROTC as a contract student.

Changed Interests

Although his musical interest and activity have become secondary to his scholastic ambitions, he has found time to continue his entertaining. Since coming to Villanova, he has made appearances at public banquets honoring former President Truman, Connie Mack, and Clark Griffith. Most recently, November 13, he played his violin at a dinner celebrating the birthdays of the two grand old men of baseball.

In the full scrapbook which his Lithuanian-American mother has been faithfully keeping for all these years are included pictures of Ted with such figures of note as Alben Barkley, Mr. Truman, Mr. Mack, Mrs. FDR, and Bishop Fulton Sheen. His mother has also assembled the many articles and news notes concerning her active and famous son. They add up to a glowing tribute to Villanova's violinist.

Classical Music

Also while at Villanova, Ted played with the Bryn Mawr College Symphony Orchestra, notable local music organization. This seems to overrule Ted's probably over-modest contention that his talent is of an inferior nature and in a non-classical area of music.

After two years in electrical engineering, Ted switched to the study of math. He will receive his Bachelor of Science degree in June. His plans of course involve at least two years of service as an officer in Uncle Sam's Navy. His ambitions involve a desire for some kind of technical work relating to electronics.

The very fact that he has been so quiet about his accomplishments is indication enough of his unassuming nature. Those among us who know him best will be quick to assert that here is a Catholic gentleman who will star in his one important performance, life itself.

Ted has worked at some kind of job for most of the time that he has been at Villanova. In the spring of 1954 he was working as chauffeur for polio-stricken Connie Brown, whom he escorted to hear Bishop Fulton J. Sheen at a Rosemont College Retreat. The personable Bishop was happy to pose with our modern-day Good Samaritan.

It has been Ted's custom to present to the celebrities that he entertains beautiful, hand-jigsawed wooden plaques. Ted's Polish-American Father, commercial artist, makes these plaques as a hobby. This picture, autographed by President Roosevelt, was presented to FDR by the then "Corporal" Teddy Kuligowski on Easter Monday, 1941.

Villanova Given Research Grant By Bethlehem Steel

Villanova is one of 30 educational institutions to receive grants from the Bethlehem Steel Company, under the company's Program of Financial Assistance to Colleges and Universities.

The payments totalling $321,000 are in addition to other amounts the company has paid to colleges for research requested by Bethlehem or of direct benefit to the steel industry, said E. G. Grace, Bethlehem chairman, in making the announcement.

No Strings Attached

No limitations on the manner the money is to be used are placed on the grants, Mr. Grace added. They may be applied to scholarships, facilities or any other purpose "that in the judgment of the college will best meet its needs."

Commenting on his reasons for establishing the program in 1953, Mr. Grace said: "The financial status of most privately-endowed colleges and universities has deteriorated to the extent that many of them . . . are in serious difficulties."

Mr. Grace reminded that privately - endowed institutions must be preserved because industry must have graduates of these institutions to train and develop and to carry the responsibilities in years ahead.

Under its program of financial assistance to colleges on the principle of value received, Bethlehem pays $3,000 to any privately - endowed educational institution on account of each of the graduates who is selected by Bethlehem for its college graduate training course.

Education Costly

"Through such payments Bethlehem gives recognition to the fact that four years of education costs a college more than it receives from a student in tuition and other fees, and that his education makes the college graduate a valuable asset in the conduct of Bethlehem's business," Mr. Grace said.

Colleges, besides Villanova, which have received financial aid under the plan are: Boston University, Brown, Bucknell, University of Buffalo, California Institute of Technology, Carnegie Tech, Cornell, Dartmouth, Drexel, Duke, Fordham, Gonzaga, Johns Hopkins, Lafayette, Lehigh, MIT, Moravian College, Northeastern, Pitt, Princeton, RPI, Seattle University, Southern California, Stanford, Syracuse, Trinity, Tufts, Wesleyan and Whittier.

Moot Court Team Loser To Kentucky

Villanova's Moot Court team, co-representatives with the University of Pittsburgh of this district in the National Moot Court competition in New York during the Christmas holidays, was eliminated by the University of Kentucky Law School in the opening round of the tourney.

Columbia's Law School team was the eventual winner of the three-day long competition.

Only University to be solely represented by second-year students in the New York finals, Villanova had previously beaten Temple and the University of Pennsylvania's "A" team in the tournament held in Philadelphia to pick the district winner. Also eliminated here in the pre-final rounds were Rutgers, Seton Hall, and the University of Pennsylvania's "B" team.

Representing Villanova in the arguments were Robert Garbarino and Arthur Flores, who ranked first and second respectively in the class standings at the end of the first year.

TV SCHOLARSHIP

The National Academy of Broadcasting in Washington, D. C. is offering a valable scholarship to college and university trained students wishing to prepare for a career in broadcasting.

According to Miss Alice Keith, President of the Academy, which trains and places its graduates, there is a greater demand now for trained writers and announcers than ever before.

The scholarship, worth $300, pays for one semester's tuition. College graduates with a background in English, speech and languages can obtain a professional certificate upon completion of a semester's study at the Academy.

FINAL EXAMS

Final examinations at the end of the second semester have been rescheduled for May 23 to 31, Rev. Thomas A. Burke, O. S. A., registrar, announced last week.

PRESIDENT'S THANKS

Very Rev. James A. Donnellon, O. S. A., Villanova president, thanks faculty members, students and members of Lamda Kappa Delta Fraternity for their expressions of sympathy on the death of his brother John.

Father Donnellon said his younger brother, who was associate professor of education at Marywood College in Scranton, was buried Christmas Eve. He had been ill about ten days.

Emphasize Truth, Top Debater Says

Deemphasis on winning intercollegiate debates would benefit the debaters more, Villanova's number one debater, senior Mark McCormick stated in an interview last week.

"The way debates are judged now, truth is often sacrificed for the sake of winning," McCormick continued.

The veteran of seven years of debating—four at Villanova and three at Fort Dodge (Iowa) High School—felt that doing away with decisions in debates would return the emphasis of debaters to truth.

Junior Affair

Then, at about 10 o'clock, dancing will begin, with Desmond playing upstairs for a time while one of the combos is entertaining downstairs, and Desmond later descending to the lower level on the stage. There are two large bars in both salons, and a parking lot immediately outside of the club will be made available for Juniors' cars. The club is not difficult to reach, but to aid a bit in directions, the committee will have mimeographed maps distributed prior to the event. Dancing will last until 2 a.m.

Other Projects

Meanwhile, a good deal of progress has been made in arranging the Wednesday night jazz concert, the Mother's Day activities and prom decoration planning; and a full report will be made on these separate projects in next week's issue of the VILLANOVAN.

Success at Faculty Dinner:

VU Singers Drawing Up Tentative Concert Schedule

The Villanova Singers, at their first meeting in 1955, announced a tentative schedule of concerts to be given at the neighboring women's colleges. President Conrad Urban and the organization's officers appointed a special committee to contact Rosemont, Chestnut Hill, Immaculata, Bryn Mawr, and Beaver Colleges in the early part of the second semester. These committeemen include Lou Cassella, George Sinnott, Don Alton, Peter Scott, Charles Brockman, Jack Padova, Pete Selesky, and Joe Valenti.

The program includes a wide variety of good music. Among the selections are the rousing "Drinking Song" from Romberg's "Student Prince", "The Winter Song" by Fredric Field Bullard Medley and a medley of spirited sea chanteys, including "Eight Bells", "Away to Rio" and "Old Man Noah" from the Yale Glee Club Collection.

On the quieter side of the program, the Singers will do Bohm's beautiful "Calm is the Night," "Beautiful Saviour" as arranged by St. Bernard, "Prayer of Thanksgiving," a seventh century piece by Vallerius, and Brahms' "Lullaby." They are also preparing several selections for mixed voices in order to combine with the girls' glee club which they are visiting.

Chapel Singing

In addition to its secular offerings, the organization, operating as a dual glee club—Schola Cantorum, has been performing at the students' evening chapel services, and, according to Father Kemme, faculty moderator, has been very well received.

The Singers' plans include, besides the proposed concert series, a special program for Mothers' Day, several masses, and appearances at the Faculty Wives' party and at the Senior class' Concert-Dance.

Rifle Team, Once Beaten, Enjoying Banner Season

Villanova University and NROTC rifle team is in the midst of a most successful season. They have won nine matches while losing one—to Lehigh by a scant two points.

Inspired by recent significant victories over the National Guard's 111th Infantry, Marines from the Philadelphia Navy Yard Supply Depot, Temple, Penn, St. Joseph's, Valley Forge, LaSalle and Philadelphia College of Pharmacy, the NROTC team has gained first place in the Philadelphia NROTC with a record of four wins and no losses.

Led by Captain John Gilligan and high shooters Passarella, Miller, Trunzo, Gould, Gregg and Moser the team is looking for an all-time high of 1400. So far this year the highest Villanova scorer has been 1938.

The two teams, led by their coach, M-Sgt. J. E. Waryha, USMC, will send representatives to all NRA-sponsored matches at West Chester and Conestoga.

Saturday, the team travels to Drexel for a triangular match with Drexel and Penn.

Devine, Schafer Near Records

N.C. State Victory Only Glimmer as Team Drops Four

By Bob Strayton

Trying to regain their winning ways after suffering three defeats in the past three weeks, Villanova's erratic basketball team met Dayton at the Palestra last Saturday night in a nip-and-tuck battle that ended in a 59-52 Flyer victory.

The game started with Dayton opening to a quick six point lead. Villanova found its eye, however, and soon closed the gap. A long set by Marty Milliggan, and jump shots by Jack Devine and Jim Smith, plus a foul shot by Smitty, made it a 9-7 contest. Dayton's tremendous height just couldn't be stopped by the classy 2-3 zone defense employed by the Wildcats. Uhl, a seven-foot center, tapped in three buckets, and Jack Sallee added with sets from the outside.

Villanova kept pressing its zone, however, and point production remained a minimum. It was a close 25-20 affair as the halftime ended.

Leads Sways

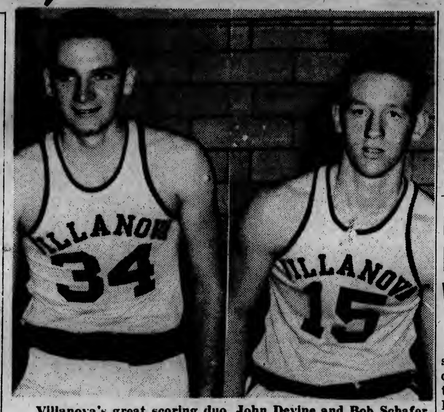
It wasn't until eight minutes had passed in the second half that Villanova could score again. By that time, Dayton had run up a nine point spread. Schafer, suffering from point malnutrition and an illness besides, hit on a long set from the left side to start the Cats on their way again. Within a few minutes, the lead had been cut to one point, and the battle see-sawed from there.

The final moments of the fray finally gave Dayton the game. All-American Johnny Horan, working from the pivot, fed a hook through the nets, to give Dayton a 5 point lead with three minutes to go. In an attempt to regain possession of the ball, the Cats abandoned the zone and worked man to man. It helped little, as the Flyers' Feily and Horan capitalized on the ensuing fouls. With a minute to go, and Dayton ahead 57-46, Villanova's offensive revived, and the Cats cut the lead to seven. It was too late, though, and Dayton won, 59-52.

Other games played during the holiday interlude saw Villanova pick up three defeats, and two victories.

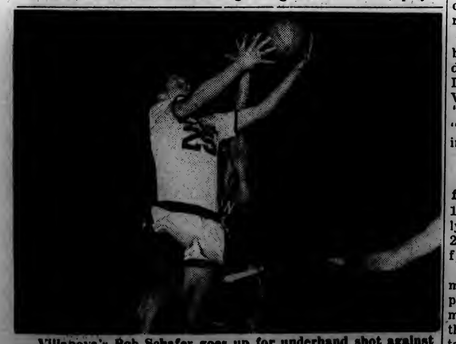
Schafer's Famine Begins

Buffalo's Memorial Auditorium was the scene of the St. Bonaventure game Dec. 17, and also the beginning of Schafer's point-diet. Although he only scored 17 points, Villanova beat Bonnies by an 80-64 count.



The E.C.A.C. Holiday Festival followed the Bonaventure victory. The Cats met top-seeded Duquesne in the opening round of the Garden tournament Dec. 27. It was a close 32-31 game at the half, but Sihugo Green and Villanova personals gave the Dukes the game, 87-68. Then, in the consolation round on Dec. 29, Villanova's "Garden jittery" team faced St. John's, and succumbed to the Redmen by an embarrassing 89-77.

A three-day rest, and a chance to think things over, seemed to inspire the Wildcats. For, when the number two team in the nation, North Carolina State, came into the Palestra on New Year's Day, Villanova was ready for some celebrating.



Diet Ends

It was no contest from the very beginning. Schafer, seemingly over his scoring famine, threw in 33 points, while Devine picked up 13, and Smith 16. By halftime, Villanova was out in front 51-35, but the worst, for State, was yet to come. Playing with a vengeance, the Cats added 40 more tallies to win the game, 91 to 78

Schafer, at the height of both illnesses, could only eke out a meager six points before he retired to the bench early in the game against Richmond, played down in the southland last Wednesday. It was a discouraging contest from the start, and although Villanova picked up 82 points, thanks to a 26 point effort by Devine, the Virginians tallied 92 as the Cats lost their third.

Villanova's great scoring duo, John Devine and Bob Schafer, are poised to break existing Wildcat records in the near future. Bob is merely 54 points shy of the all-time record, currently held by Larry Hennessy.

Villanova's Bob Schafer goes up for underhand shot against Dayton at Palestra Saturday night in 59-52 loss to the Flyers.

Natators Win In First Meet

By Bill Brown

Who said that cats don't take to water? They did last Saturday when Coach Ed Geisz took the Villanova natators to Baltimore for a meet with Loyola College. Opening their second season, the Villanovans literally swam rings around their southern rivals. The 'Cats won eight out of ten events. In the scoring column, Villanova was up 59-25.

The victory tasted much better to the winners because Loyola has been the champion in their league, the Mason-Dixon Conference, for the past two years. Paul Donahue, a junior, defeated Samansky, Loyola's captain and Conference champion, in the 200 yard breaststroke. Captain Pat Keane, Couig, and Sykes plashed to a victory in the 300 yard medley relay in 3.29.

Ulrich Hurt

The services of Wally Ulrich, diver, were lost when Wally broke a toe in pre-meet practice. Loyola then won the event. The southerner's other victory came in the 440-yard freestyle relay.

Two events, the 200-yard backstroke and the 150-yard individual medley, were won by Don Couig. When Don came to Villanova, he was known as the "Freshman Flash." Now, the "Sophomore Sensation" is living up to his billing.

Rinkacs Wins

Other victories were taken for Villanova by Rinkacs in the 100 yard freestyle, by Donnelly in the 440-yard freestyle and 220-yard freestyle, and by Duffy in the 50-yard freestyle.

For the Main Liners now, it's more practice. The team must prep for a meet with Swarthmore tomorrow. They know that the way to sink the Garnet is to sink themselves—in the Field House pool.

New Scoring Marks Possible As Wildcats Oppose Kings

By Joe Heaps

The greatest one-two punch ever to play Villanova basketball—John Devine and Bob Schafer—each have a chance to set scoring records this week when the Severance-men meet Kings College Wednesday night in the Field House and Xavier Saturday at the Palestra.

Originally scheduled for the Field House, the Xavier game has been moved to the Palestra because of the dance to be held in the Field House Friday night.

Captain John appears a cinch to become the fourth man in Villanova court history to score a thousand points. His 17 counters in the Dayton game brought him to within 8 of the coveted figure. Earlier in the year Devine passed former star Joe Lord in point production. Lord was Villanova's highest scorer before Paul Arizin started setting records.

When John gets his eighth point, it will make the first time that the Wildcats have ever had two men on the same team in the thousand bracket.

The other member is, of course, Bob Schafer.

The Blonde Bomber may set the all-time Villanova scoring record in the next two games. He is only 54 points under Larry Hennessy's total of 1737 counters. Bob would be even closer to the record, but an attack of virus has handicapped him for the past several games.

Devine-Schafer Scoring

Devine	F.G.	F.	Pt.
1951-52	38	22	98
1952-53	108	63	279
1953-54	54	50	158
Totals	385	222	992

Schafer	F.G.	F.	Pt.
1951-52	48	33	129
1952-53	108	133	537
1953-54	287	262	836
1954-55	63	55	181
Totals	600	483	1683

For the second time this season Villanova fans will get an opportunity to watch the Wildcats in action on their home floor when Kings visits the Mainline tomorrow night.

The Red and Gold from Wilkes-Barre gave the Wildcats a few anxious moments last year when they met, but a second half rally earned Villanova an 87-68 win. Captain Bernie Panzak, Jim Mital, and little Billy Burke, who scored 22 in the Villanova-Kings game last year, are the mainstays of the upstate quintet.

Saturday night will be an all Villanova affair at the Palestra, as the Xavier Musketeers offer the opposition in the 8:30 game and the Freshmen play St. Joseph's Frosh at 7 p. m.

In the feature game the Blue and White will be seeking to revenge an 81-73 setback handed them by the Musketeers last year at the Palestra.

Last season's high scorer Dave Piontek, team captain Chuck Hofmann, and Lou Vonderbrink lead the Cincinnati five. In their fourth game of the season Xavier gave highgranking Kentucky a rough evening before bowing 73-69.

Boston Scene of First Trial for Villanova Runners

By Joe Kinney

New England track enthusiasts will welcome in the forthcoming indoor season this Saturday evening with the annual Knights of Columbus Games in Boston.

Villanova's representatives, ably tutored by Jim Elliott, will be on display for the first time against some of the best competition in the nation. To insure a successful year, each member of the squad has been diligently practicing for the past several weeks and will be in top condition this weekend.

Sophs Star

Coach Elliott and his assistant, Hal Langton, realize that the Wildcats' showing in their initial encounter will give them a definite idea as to what to expect in future meets. The former revealed that Don Bragg, sophomore pole-vaulter, and Charlie Jenkins, a specialist in the 600-yard run, are two of the Mainliners strongest choices to become victors in any of the events. Alex Breckenridge, Scottish distance speedster and co-captain of the cross-country team, will compete in the two-mile run.

Delaney to Compete

Three stellar freshmen—Ron Delaney, Phil Reavis, and George Sydnor—will seek their first indoor triumphs in a Blue and White uniform.

Reavis, a high jumper, and Sydnor, a 50-yard dash man, are new to Villanova thinclad followers, while Delaney, a 19-year old business student from Ireland, attracted much attention by winning the frosh harrier championship in New York six weeks ago.

Battle for Berths

Elliott is undecided upon four starters in the two relays, but named Jim Moran, Warner Heitman, Al Liggorelli, and Charlie Jenkins as the most likely choices in the mile relay, while John Kopil, George Browne, Bill Rock, Al Peterson, and Alex Breckenridge are presently battling it out for a berth in the two mile relay event.

CIVIL SERVICE

The United States Civil Service Commission has announced that examinations will be administered for Highway Engineer Trainee for Student Trainee positions, the latter covering posts in various fields of science and engineering for college students while the former are limited to college juniors or above who are studying for a degree in civil engineering.

Information on these, or other Civil Service positions, may be obtained from the U. S. Civil Service Commission, Washington 25, D. C.

Intramural Action

Frosh Lose To West Catholic, Fort Dix, St. John's HS Beaten

By Bob Mulcahy

Victories in two out of three contests marked the return of the Villanova Freshman court squad to action after a two week holiday layoff.

Only a defeat by West Catholic marred an otherwise profitable week. The "Kittens" defeated the 365th Infantry Regiment of Fort Dix 82-75 in overtime and St. John's High School, of Manayunk, 55-39.

The most exciting game by far was the game at Fort Dix. Otustanding performances by Captain Jack Kelly, Tom Brennan and Connie Newman sparked the 'Cats to an overtime victory. A foul shot by Kelly with four seconds remaining tied the score at 68 all and forced the game into an extra period. Two foul shots by Henry Nichols and a jump shot by Kelly pushed the "Kittens" into a 72-68 lead. After a field goal by Caders of Fort Dix, Tom Brennan caged a field goal and Connie Newman a pair of fouls to ice the game.

Jump In Front

Villanova jumped out to an 18-10 first quarter on the set shooting of Newman and driving of "Red" Singsheim. The second period was played on even terms and when the clubs left the floor at halftfime the "Kittens' 'held a 30-23 lead.

However, the home team came to life and tied the score at 48-48. From then on the game was nip and tuck the rest of the way with the boys from Fort Dix gaining 68-67 lead which set the stage for Kelly's foul shot. High scorer for the visitors was Kelly with 28 points.

The game with St. John's was a complete rout as evidenced by the fact that the first five played only the first four minutes of the game. At this point the score was 17-0 in favor of the 'Cats and Coach Maje McDonnell substituted the second team which finished out the game.

Never in Game

The loss to West Catholic was the second time the Philadelphia schoolboys have defeated the freshmen this season. However, this was the first game following the vacation and the boys were a little rusty. Also it was the first time Villanova played without Al Cook, who has left school, and Ralph Defronzo who was injured.

West led from the outset and were never headed. Four men hit double figures for them.

Two games are slated for this week. Tomorrow the "Kittens" play Camden Catholic who they previously defeated and St. Joseph's College Frosh in the preliminary game at the Palestra Saturday evening.

Marty Milligan drives toward the basket with John Horan, of Dayton, attempting to cut him off in Flyers-Wildcat game Saturday night at the Palestra.

Co-ed Basketball Opens with Game at Chestmont Hill

Villanva's co-ed basketballers, who have contented themselves with intramural competition previously, faced the Chestnut Hill six on the latter's court last night in what the coaches termed "a practice game."

Coaches John Shea, sophomore arts and Fred Hueber, junior engineer, reported the club was "shaping up" despite the lack of practice time in Alumni Gym.

Starting Lineup

Coach Shea released this starting line up: Pat Yonkin, Betty Ann Curran and Rita Shigo, forwards; Joan Beechwood, Dolores Cofield and Cele De Muro, guards. Pat and Joan are freshmen and the others are sophomores.

Net searing Yonkin, from Allentown, is a female Bob Schafer, according to the coaches. Included in her fairly wide variety of shots is the well known two hand, overhead set shot that has become the Schafer trademark.

Men in Action

After a two weeks respite for the holiday vacation, the intramural program has again commenced operation.

The basketball campaign resumed on Jan. 3 and the league continues to move along without a hitch. At the present time, none of the various league titles have been decided and important games remain which will determine the squads that will compose the championship tournament.

Athletic Director Ed Geisz is happy to announce that the intramural all-star team will be picked this afternoon between 4:30 and 5:30 p m. in Alumni gym. Candidates are asked to please be on time for the tryout.

Intramural All-Stars

The team chosen by the judges will play the annual game with the freshman squad on Thursday afternoon, Feb. 17. There i. an added incentive for making the all-star team this year. Geisz has reported that games with intramural squads from other colleges have been scheduled, Pennsylvania, LaSalle, St. Joseph's,

Philadelphia Club Honors Giordano, Mayock and Hurley

Closing officially the 1954 football season, the Philadelphia Club of Villanova University held its 33rd Annual Football Banquet Dec. 15. The affair was held at the Broadwood Hotel, in Philadelphia.

Honored at the banquet were the eleven members of last year's team, who received gold helmets for their efforts. Other eligible underclassmen who participated were presented with sweaters and Varsity "V" 's.

Special Awards Given

Highlighting the program of the evening, however, was the awarding of special honors to Senior members of the squad. Recipients of these awards were: Most Valuable Player Plaque, John Giordano; Martin J. McLaughlin Award, team captain Mike Mayock; Cyril J. Burke Award for Most Consistent Performer, Dan Hurley.

Another trophy, presented by the Alumni to the most loyal member of the alumni body, was awarded to David F. Farley, Class of 1920. It was named, aptly, the Loyalty Award.

SPORTS CHATTER

Holiday Tournaments

By Norm Feldpush

When Duquesne University's talented Iron Dukes edged La-Salle College to capture theEastern College Athletic Conference Tournamnt on New Year's Eve the holiday festival was considered a success. Excellent crowds had relieved the E.C.A.C. of their financial burdens which was their reason for sponsoring the tournament for the first time in its three year existence.

Fans and Players Profit

These classics are successful in that the fans are afforded the opportunity of seeing intersectional clashes between teams which do not meet during the regular season or do not normally compete in that particular area. The players themselves participate in widely publicized playing palaces as Madison Square Garden, and are able to display their talents and increase their alma mater's prestige by performing for new audiences. Individual and team awards contribute an added incentive to the occasions. With five of the competing quintets ranked among the first twenty in the nation, the fans were assured of seeing the best in basketball in New York.

But, is there another aspect to this latest craze in high-pressured collegiate basketball? The trend for the past several years has been the scheduling of these holiday festivities in every section of the country possessing a fair sized arena. This runaway situation is evident from the following list of classics similar to the New York attraction: Dixie Classic; Southwest Conference; New England Invitation Tournament; Big Seven Classic; Youngstown Invitational; Richmond Festival; Steel Bowl; Hofstra Invitational; Motor City Tournament; North Central Tournament; Gator Bowl; Queen City Tournament; Kentucky Invitational; Xavier HolidayFestival; Sugar Bowl; and the University of Pennsylvania Big Ten-Ivy League Classic.

Future Popularity

This incomplete collection would indicate the uniqueness of holiday competition has ended. Will these promotions maintain their present popularity for years to come, or will they eventually lose favor with the collegiate hard-wood powers? A glance at the less publicized features of these glamour games may provide the answers.

For instance, will the nation's top teams continue to risk their unbeaten records in these meaningless exhibitions, when their hopes of capturing the only significant tournaments, the N.C.A.A. and the N.I.T., will be greatly jeopardized by these early season losses?

Villanova's Perplexing Schedule

A solution to this problem could be found in discounting the tournament results in the overall season's team records. Villanova's own schedule justifies this proposal. Moving into the Garden with a 4-0 record, the Wildcats had the misfortune of meeting Duquesne University in the first round. Here is a team which is on the Mainliners' schedule for two additional regular season games, and now stands as the second best squad in the nation. Is there another team in the country which meets an equally outstanding opponent as often? Which college football squad meets Notre Dame more once in the same season? The answers are obvious.

If the holiday games are omitted from the season's totals, will the contests descend to the role of comedies because of a lackadaisical player attitude? This argument is easily dismissed by the fact that no player wants to make either himself, his teammates, or his school appear inferior at any time.

Villanova's showing in the Garden illustrates the effects of an unsuccessful week-long venture. Si Green's 30 points scored in the second half, with the pressure off, demoralized the Mainliners, and paved the way for St. John's conquest. Two defeats in less than 48 hours, and 19 games of a rugged schedule still remained. In March, when tournament time once again arrives, those two defeats may be felt, unless the circumstances are considered.

The final question, and perhaps the most important, is that of the honor a team is awarded in victory; that upset win over a supposedly invincible opponent, or the last ditch rallies which brought gasps from the stands. However, even a winner must be away from home during the holiday season. Even a winner spends Christmas Eve in a vast, deserted gym.

"Harvey"

"Harvey's" history includes success both on Broadway and on the screen. Tryouts were held last week and results will be announced in a coming VILLANOVAN.

The dinner dance Saturday night will be held in a private dining room at the Eaton Lodge. Rev. Thomas Gilligan, O. S. A., professor of modern languages, will be guest speaker and Jim Borden will serve as toastmaster. A slight note of humor was injected into last week's meeting by a decision over whether mashed or french friend potatoes should be served. Mashed won.

For the Harcum and Penn one-act competitions, Rostrand's romantic-comedy, "The Romances," was chosen. The play is a take-off on the Romeo-Juliet theme. Rostrand is the author of "Cyrano de Bergerac," and like that, "The Romances" is a costume play. The production, which will mark President Cunningham's debut as a director, has ten male and one female role.

This is Leary Hall, which guards campus roads from unauthorized autos from 7 a. m. to 11 p. m. six days weekly.

Football Banquet Speaker:

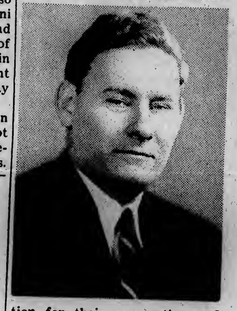
Athletic Publicity Boon To Institution — Dudley

Publicity gained from intercollegiate athletic competition should help Villanova's expansion program, Athletic Director Ambrose Dudley told guests to the 33rd annual football banquet sponsored by the Villanova Club of Philadelphia.

Dudley's remarks supported Villanova's continued rise into big time competition and followed his announcement that the 1954 football campaign was the most successful financially in Villanova history.

Out of Our Class?

The athletic director also snuffed any ideas which alumni and students may have had about Villanova "playing out of its class." He said the Main Line school grants a sufficient number of scholarships to play its present schedules.



But Dudley admitted that in the past the coaches have not exercised enough care in the selection of scholarship athletes. He hinted that this defect would be corrected under the new coaching regime.

Following Dudley on the program was Rip Miller, assistant director of athletics at the United States Naval Academy and one of the "Seven Mules" line at Notre Dame.

Miller pictured football as the American way of life, exemplifying the American free enterprise system.

Perseverance

In his brief talk, Head Coach Frank Reagan thanked alumni and the Villanova administration for their cooperation and promised that "we'll continue trying."

Reagan slyly remarked that his title for a mythical book was "How to win the last game of the season in nine easy lessons." Referring to the club's globetrotting tactics during the past season, Reagan cracked that although they didn't win many football games, they had the opportunity to learn a lot of geography.

Reagan, who mentioned that he had always dreamed of being a coach, lauded the 1954 Wildcats as "the finest group of boys I've ever had the opportunity to associate with."

CAMPUS ORGANIZATION NEWS

I. R. S.

The International Relations Society of Villanova will present Victor Frank at its monthly meeting to be held this eveing at 7 p. m. in room 201, C&F. The subject of the discussion will be the Nuremberg war crimes trials, of which Mr. Frank has made a close study.

Mr. Frank, a graduate of Yale Law School, is a member of the law firm of McCoy, Evans, and Lewis. He has travelled extensively in Europe and Japan as a member of the United States team in the 1948 Olympics.

President Bill Quinn emphasized that everyone is welcome.

Quinn also announced that IRS members will be photographed for the yearbook at 5 p. m. today in Seminar 1, the Library.

AD DRIVE

Starting this week, the Belle Air inaugurates a new ad drive to enable Villanova students to earn money, which may come in handy during the upcoming semester vacation.

All new ads for the book will earn a 20 per cent commission. Renewals will earn a 10 per cent commission. Ted Clarkson, business manager of the yearbook, will be in charge of the campaign, which will continue until March 1.

Already this year the book has a record number of ads. This performance reflects the appeal of the promised newer and larger publication, commented Editor Frank Gunther.

Editor Gunther said handbills will soon be posted giving full details of the drive and the place where ad blanks may be obtained.

BELLE AIR

Editor Frank Gunther reports one-half of the copy for the largest Belle Air in Villanova history, except for the 1942 centennial issue, was handed in by Dec. 20.

The entire senior, underclass and faculty sections are now complete and the next two weeks will be spent photographing the various campus activities.

Final deadline is Feb. 18 and, if all goes well, Gunther predicted the book will be distributed May 15.

The 280-page book is entirely different in its approach from former years, according to Editor-in-chief Gunther. There are still opportunities for underclassmen to work on the book and gain experience for next year.

Anyone desiring to join the staff should contact Gunther (1 Simpson) or one of the other editors.

T&T AUDITIONS

Auditions for Turf and Tinsel's spring show, "Jessica James," will be held at 7:30 p. m. today in the Field House, announces President Joe Blimm.

Any student with talent in dancing, singing or playing a musical instrument is invited to try out for parts in the show, which is under the direction of Mr. Robert Whelan, business manager of athletics.

The show, with a setting in the west, offers several excellent parts, according to Blimm.

Business Manager Bill Reich invites all "the Mario Lanzas and Fred Astaires" around Villanova to show off their talents at the Field House tonight.

JOINT MEET

Three campus organizations—Physics Club, Lambda Kappa Delta and the Villanova chapter of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers—will join hands in a joint meeting at 10:30 a. m. Thursday in 215 Mendel.

Atomic energy will be discussed by three lecturers, one from each organization, and a film will be included in the program, according to Dave Vachon, Physics Club president and moderator of the joint meeting.

Speakers will be Vachon, who will discuss the historical aspect; Tom Gumina, LKD president, who will cover the biological phase; and Dick Schleicher, representing ASME, and speaking about the industrial application of atomic energy.

A film on the Bikini Atomic Bomb tests will be shown, Vachon said. It will be borrowed from the NROTC unit.

Vachon emphasized that all students are welcome to the program, and that he hopes to see all 130 seats filled.

LAW SCHOOL GAME

On the muddy turf of Austin field, the Law School's second-year men beat the first-year class 19-0 in a game of touch football. The second year's passing combinations, pass patterns, and glue-fingered wingmen were too much for the two-platooning freshmen as they gained a triumph in the first annual FROZE BOWL.

Although the challenge was originally made and accepted by the faculty and second-year men, the faculty later withdrew their acceptance.

LAW LIBRARIAN

Dr. Arthur C. Pulling, Law Librarian and Professor of Law in the Villanova School of Law, spoke at the meeting of the Association of American Law Schools in New York City during the Christmas holidays.

Dr. Pulling, who was head of the Law Library at Harvard prior to joining the Villanova faculty, spoke on "Building a Basic Law Library."

PKP

On Thursday, Phi Kappa Pi, engineering fraternity, will hold its pre-initiation meeting. The meeting, important to those wishing to join the fraternity will begin promptly at 7 p. m. in the C&F Auditorium.

Freshmen will be briefed on the requirements for joining, and all members of the fraternity who wish to assume the role of big brother must be present.

Membership is open to all engineers regardless of their major. In the main, the purpose of the Fraternity is the social welfare of the engineer, and in the past the fraternity has been one of the most active on campus.

The extremely successful Owl Hop, numerous smokers and a Communion breakfast have been just some of the activities sponsored by Phi Kappa Pi.

AIR FORCE

A United States Air Force Counselor team will be at Villanova next Tuesday to speak to all seniors interested in earning commissions after graduation.

Interviews will be conducted in the Naval Science Building.

CONCERT BAND

Villanova's Concert Band will make its 1955 debut on Feb. 16 at St. John's Orphanage, Philadelphia.

The band's program will include the "Student Prince Overture," the "King and I Overture," "Finiculi-Finicula," "At the Gremlin Ball," and "Sanctuary of the Heart."

Student Conductor Bob Schiller said the second of the 11 weekly concerts would be held at the Overbrook Seminary. The Concert Band, with Rev. Joseph J. Burns, O. S. A., as moderator, has been in rehearsal since December, and Schiller declares the 35-man aggregation is progressing rapidly.

T&T

All students interested in working on the business staff of Turf and Tinsel's spring show are invited to an organizational meeting tonight at 7:30 in the T&T office (C&F basement).

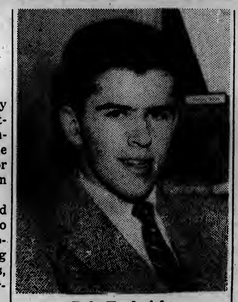
Council Nixes Honor Code; Senior Dance Date Settled

Affair Set Next Month

Feb. 25 is the date picked by the senior class for its concert-dance, President Bud Ford announced last week. Time of the affair, which is scheduled for the Field House, has not been decided.

The program will be divided into two parts, according to Ford. A concert by the Villanova Singers will precede dancing to the music of the Villanovans, who played for the NFCCS Mardi Gras Ball last week end.

Ford explained that each senior, at registration, will be asked to take three $1 tickets. He may either resell the tickets or use them himself.



No Father's Day?

Seniors were reminded by Ford that if the concert-dance is not financially successful, hopes for a class Fathers' Day celebration are faint.

Plans for the spring event cannot be considered, it is reported, until the debt incurred during the senior week end is erased.

The concert-dance was the manner in which the class chose to soak up the red ink.

The fourth annual meeting of the ASO/NASD Philadelphia Federal Credit Union will be held Thursday, January 27, in the Main Conference Room, Building One.

Irish Diplomat Speaker at Library Exhibit

A speech by an Irish diplomat, John Joseph Hearne, will open the Irish Exhibit March 6. The Irish Embassy is cooperating with the Library, which is sponsoring the exhibit.

Rev. Daniel P. Falvey, O.S.A., made the announcement last week.

He said the exhibit would include books, manuscripts arts, ecclesiastical products and glassware.

Cut Problem Postponed

After a stormy discussion, Student Council members voted down a proposed honor system, appointed a second semester holiday, and awarded a Council seat to the Physics Club at a meeting last Monday.

March 18 was approved as the free day, which is traditionally awarded by Council during the second semester.

In other matters, Council:

Decided it was a student's right to request transfer of tests, when the student is faced with more than two tests on a single day. The proposal called for a minimum of 10 days notice to be given for all quarterly examinations.

Passed Bob Frederick's motion regarding proposed rules of organizations desiring admission to Council.

Deferred action on Frederick's motion to have delinquent societies ejected from Council

Accepted the Physics Club and awarded them a one-half vote.

Sophomores to Order Blazers In Near Future

Members of the University's Sophomore Class will be able to purchase blazers during the second semester, President Jack O' Rourke announced last week.

He said that fittings will be held soon after second semester classes begin Feb. 10.

A deposit amount has not been chosen. Negotiations with proposed manufacturers have been going on since administration approval was given to the idea early last week.

O'Rourke said he was notified of the approval by Rev. George McLaughlin, O. S. A., Dean of Student Activities.

Art Odabash, class vice-president, has been appointed chairman of the sopohomore blazer committee. He is assisted by Al Flanagan and Don Kelly.

O'Rourke said Flanagan, Kelly and Rev. Dante Girolami, O. S. A., class moderator, have been conferring with representatives from these manufacturers: Rogers Peet and Brooks Allen, of New York, and Jacob Reed, of Philadelphia.

Further details of the blazer project may be forthcoming at Several Changes Planned:

Ten-Page Villanovan Issue 2nd Semester Possibility

The University's first ten-page weekly is a distinct possibility in the second semester, VILLANOVAN Editor Edwin Daly has announced.

Several factors are still to be considered, but chances are good that the first new-semester issue, now scheduled to appear Feb. 15, will be the initial extra-leaf edition.

Daly and the paper's moderator, Rev. Louis A. Rongione, O. S. A., have been considering the page increase since early in the first semester, and have received support of the question in several leters from student body members.

Father Rongione and Daly believe that a two-page increase will enable the campus publication to keep abreast of the growth and quickened activity in various University departments, and to better represent the organizations and groups of the institution which have news and features to offer.

Delivery Date Changed

The date of delivery to the students, previously Tuesday, would probably be switched to Wednesday, Daly adds. This change would be due to printing and time factors.

Various changes in format and material emphasis will be noticeable in the proposed new issue.

Two pages will be alloted to sports, as is now the case, but extra space will be given to class activities, organizations and clubs, and new feature material.

An entire page will be devoted to a picture spread and a running commentary on a single club, fraternity or any active campus group.

Letters to Editor Welcome

New emphasis will be placed upon fuller, more consistent coverage of all extra-curricular events.

Letters to the editor will be alloted a definite section on the editorial pages ,and it is hoped that the student body will make known its constructive criticisms and feeling on various campus situations in such short, to-the-point correspondence.

With the more ambitious VILLANOVAN will come the need for greater student participation and interest in staff work. Those interested in working for any department of the paper should come to the staff office in C & F on Thursday night, Feb. 10. All deadlines and working nights will remain the same in the proposed new system.

Joint Atomic Energy Symposium Held; Engineers Hear Industrial Lecturer

At a joint meeting Jan. 10, the members of the A.S.M.E., A.I.E.E. - I.R.E. and A.S.C.E. heard Mr. Charles G. Arps, a public relations representative of the Allis Chalmers Manufacturing Co., who spoke on "Communism in Industry."

Mr. Arps, a veteran of both the Second World War and the Korean War, and a graduate of the University of Wisconsin Law School, was introduced by Bob Erskine, chairman of the A.S.M.E. After outlining the principles of Communist philosophy, Mr. Arps discussed the means used by industry to combat Communism within its own ranks. Basically, this defense is made by education of the men to the advantages of democracy. The speaker pointed out that more and more companies are adopting the viewpoint that men are hired for 24 hours and that the employee's problems are likewise the company's. By making the men realize that the company is taking an active interest in their problems, the company is frustrating the aims of the Communists, which are to sow discontent between management and labor.

Tom Gumina

In the question period which followed Mr. Arps thought labor unions were now doing a good job in keeping Communists out of their ranks. He also said that Communists can infiltrate management as well as labor, although it is more difficult.

A Joint Atomic Energy Symposium was held last Thursday at 10:30 a. m. in 215 Mendel. Sponsored by the Physics Club, the L.K.D. pre-med fraternity, and V. U.'s A.S.M.E. society, the meeting covered the important aspects of nuclear energy.

Physics Club president Dave Vachon opened the discussion with a history of atomic theory from the Greeks to Einstein's mass-energy equation. He was followed by a U. S. Navy film describing the Bikini atom tests.

Tom Gumina, president of L.K.D., spoke on the effects of exposure to atomic radiation and also illustrated some of the beneficial uses of the atom in medicine.

Activity Recommended...

The necessity of the Student Council action taken at the last meeting to impose stricter requirements for organizations seeking seats on the Council comes from a very welcome state of affairs.

Veteran Council members have been complaining recently that there are many new organizations on campus that have been founded within the last few years and that either have recently been awarded seats or appeared in the background as potential applicants. They fear the result may find in danger of becoming too large for effective business. Therefore the rule lengthening the period during which an organization must be active prior to admission and establishing a minimum membership requirement for such groups has been adopted.

Whether the danger to Council efficiency was really serious is not what interests us here. What does interest us is the increase of campus activity.

In addition to the basic organizations—the fraternities, publications, radio station, and some of the older societies—there have appeared many more groups interested in more specialized material. Such groups as the International Relations Society, Intercollegiate Conference on Government, Marketing Club, Physics Club, and Mathematics Club, most of which have been founded within the past three years, offer to almost every student an organization devoted to his particuar interest or major.

We welcome the increased number and activity of these groups at Villanova. Their very existence and success give the lie to those who mourn that there is no spirit here. Spirit there is, and its strength comes from the campus activities. While they prosper as they are prospering now, there is no cause for worry about Villanova spirit.

Advantage Unemployed...

It seems that, in spite of its obvious advantages, both materially and intellectually, one of the most important and gratifying facilities on this campus goes unnoticed and unused by a goodly number of Villanova men.

There is little doubt by now, since this subject has been treated oft times in the past, that the facility in question is the library.

A lot of us, at some time or other, have heard one of our compatriots and unabashed lack of contact with Father Falvey's bristling institution; surely in such admission there exists no distinction.

Admittedly, most of us frequent the library, quite often in 11th hour desperation, during exam time, and make use of the facilities for intellectual improvements that it offers. In fact, there seems to be a sort of fascination about the shelves and the books and the quite and the general high-minded atmosphere for most of us, but it usually is only temporary and brought about in the first place by expediency.

Perhaps if we would try to realize that the same benefits are waiting for us during mid-semester letdowns, we could appreciate the library, and what it offers, in a sense of voluntary and (you'd be surprised) pleasant self-improvement. If it's information you're looking for, certainly that's available; even as an escape from enforced study it's a pleasure; and surely, if you're looking for a means to make for a more well-rounded, more well-versed person, it's the place to go.

Try it.

And not just before exams.

Academics and Athletics Lure Students From Afar

By Jim Wrzesinski

One of the wonderful things about Villanova is that one has an opportunity to meet people from so many sectors of the earth and from such different environments.

It is wonderful to have an opportunity to meet them, but one must wonder what makes them come such a long distance to school. That was the topic of this week's discussions and some of the interesting replies were:

Ron Delaney, 1958 C&F, Ireland. "I met Fred Dwyer, Villanova's ambassador to Ireland, in Dublin last summer. He spoke very highly of Villanova and of the advantages of attending school here.

I had many track scholarships offers from other American universities but I finally chose Villanova because of the fact that it is a Catholic University and also because of Freddie's inviting description of the school.

Naturally, I wanted to avail myself of the opportunity of receiving a good American education. Besides, I often heard an old Irish proverb at home, 'Green are the faraway hills,' and I was curious and anxious to have a close look at your hills."

Conrad Urban, 1956, Pre-Med, Chicago, Illinois. "In Chicago I attended an Augustinian high school, St. Rita of Cascia. Naturally, Villanova received extensive publicity from the teachers at St. Rita. In addition to this, at the end of my senior year I was offered a scholarship to Villanova. At first, I was hesitant in accepting the scholarship because of the great distance, but after several persuasive conversations with Rev. John Fitzmaurice, O. S. A., the Director of Studies, I decided to try Villanova for one year.

The reason for my continuing at Villanova is due to several factors. After my freshman year, I found that Villanova offered an excellent pre-medical course. I, also, have met a lot of people among both the faculty and the student body who are really 'the greatest'. They have made my brief sojourn at Villanova enjoyable and have played an important part in my decision to stay at Villanova after my freshman year."

Al Calzadilla, 1955, Civil Engineering, Caracas, Venezuela. "When I first came to this country it was not my intention to come to Villanova. As a matter of fact I never heard of this institution. One of the main reasons for this is that I was coming here for a high school education, and, therefore, entering college was far beyond my outlook for the future.

The first time I heard of Villanova was when it was mentioned by my algebra professor, a Villanova graduate. After much deliberation, I chose Villanova because it seem to fulfill most of my desires for a university. It had a highly ranked engineering school, it was situated in the East, with which I was familiar, and it was a Catholic University.

After spending three and one-half years at Villanova I can say that my academic preparation for my work on the outside has been excellent. In some of the other respects Villanova has its faults, but then, what school doesn't."

Dick Black, 1957, C&F, Portland, Maine. "During the course of the summer of 1953 I had mentioned to my baseball coach that I wanted to go to college. At that time, it actually didn't make much difference to me where I went as long as I could get a chance to go to school a little longer. I had just begun to realize that a college education was really needed to get the kind of job I wanted, and I knew that I couldn't get through school without the financial help of a scholarship.

My coach knew Art Mahan, the baseball coach here at Villanovan. Hearing that he could use a left-hand pitcher, he contacted Mr. Mahan to see what he could do for me. I do not know wha was said between the two but I do know that I came here and have really grown to like it, athletically and scholastically."

Jim Judge, 1957, Arts, Lockport, New York. "I had heard of Villanova from my high school teachers, most of them being Philadelphians, and I had read of the athletic escapades of Filipski, Arizin, Hennessy, etc.

I wanted a course in arts but y t did not, wish to take a language. This I found at Villanova in the Social Science curriculum. One reason for coming 400 miles was to get out and see the rest of the world; sort of a liberal education. The clinching point that sold me on Villanova was its size. It had national prominence, yet it wasn't a school of the proportions in which you are just a number to the administration."

Lawyer Discusses War Crime Trial

By Bill Quinn

The question of the legality of placing officers of the German Wermacht on trial for crimes committed during World War II was the main topic of consideration for the January meeting of the International Relations Society.

Convened last Tuesday night in room 201 of the Commerce and Finance building, the meeting featured a speech given by Mr. Victor Frank, a graduate of Yale School and an outstanding student of the Nuremberg War Crimes Trials. The talk marked the third time that the World Affairs Council of Philadelphia has supplied the speakers for the Society.

Attacks Legality

The young Philadelphia lawyer attacked the legality of the trials on all three counts that the defendants were tried upon, namely, crimes against humanity, crimes of aggression, and conspiring to commit such crimes. "In no definite instance," he stated, "had there previously been laid down provisions for punishing such malefactors."

It was pointed out, in the course of Mr. Frank's speech, that such things as the Kellogg-Briand Pact had declared aggressive war to be illegal as a tool of foreign policy. But he made clear that at no time were stipulations made as to the punishment to be meted out to the transgressors of the "law."

Dangerous Precedent

"It may very well prove to be that we have set an extremely dangerous precedent," stated Mr. Frank. The speaker used an analogy between this country and the Soviet Union in pointing up what the consequences would be if this country should ever be subjected to a "Nuremberg War Crimes Trial."

Following the question and answer period, Pat Keane, Publicity Director of the Society, and Ed Daly, Activities Director, told the assembled members and guests that the February speaker will be Dr. Fritz Nova. Dr. Nova, a political refugee from Nazi Germany and Fascist, Italy, is at present an associate professor of history at Villanova. His topic will be "The Catholic Church and Nazi Germany."

Strictly Opinion...

By Frank Hartmann

The night of last December 7, a few of the residents of Fedigan Hall happened to be in one of their frequent bull sessions, when it was brought up that the events at Pearl Harbor had taken place just thirteen years before. The conversation drifted to what each of us had been doing at that historic hour when World War II broke out.

From there, it took an odd twist, our wondering what the occupants of that Fedigan room had been doing thirteen years ago.

For our own purposes, we came to the conclusion that they had been participating in a session much like the one in which we were engaged. We decided that they were probably just as worried as we are at times when war seems so imminent and we wonder how it will affect us, our family and our friends. Undoubtedly they wondered if they would be able to finish at Villanova. Our generation sometimes thinks that we have been given a pretty rough deal with the world situation being what it is.

Personally, I think that our generation is getting off fairly easily. Most of us are able to obtain a college education, marry and have children. Jobs are fairly plentiful and salaries are at least reasonable. Our standard of living is the highest in history. To us an automobile has become almost indispensable, radio and television are common things, and air travel is becoming more and more within the reach of the average person.

Compare this with the picture of some twenty-five years ago. There were few jobs to be had, and if a job was available it certainly wasn't at a good wage. Few had the advantages of a college education, and those who did still had trouble finding work suited to their talents.

Look back further still to the time of the First World War. If participating as a private, one could expect twenty-one dollars a month. If wounded, medical science couldn't give a person half the chance he would have today.

As we go further back, the medical profession becomes less dependable, the working classes are pushed further down, and the standard of living is lowered.

Villanova Pre-Med Visits Sweden:

Civil Air Patrol Cadet Describes Trip

By Barry M. Kotler

(Herein, sophomore pre-med Barry M. Kotler describes his Civil Air Patrol trip to Sweden as a participant in the International Cadet Exchange last summer. He discusses both the journey and the conclusions that he reached as a result of his travels.—feature ed.)

Each year, the most deserving cadets from each of the 48 states are selected as nominees for the International Cadet Exchange with 14 European and South American countries. Here is the dream of every Civil Air Patrol Cadet.—Who wouldn't work hard for this "opportunity of a lifetime?"

High Honor

Every squadron's goal is superiority in its state or in the United States. A sign of this superiority is the achievement of the higher honor by one of the squadron members. Everyone in the local squadron feels quite proud when one of its boys is selected.

I had heard a great deal about this wonderful program but never thought that I would ever participate in the exchange. It was the suggestion of my unit commander that prompted me to apply for this one program. He suggested that he thought I could meet the requirements.

It seemed very simple. All I had to do was get a few inoculations and a few government papers filled out. I had from a Saturday to Monday morning to complete my application. Never had I experienced such confusion, but the papers were submitted in time.

A few weeks later, I received a notice to appear at Wing Headquarters to take several tests. I did so, and within a few days was notified that I had been selected to represent New Jersey in the program. My orders arrived a short time later, and they stated that I was to report to Andrew's Air force base by July 21.

After orientation at Andrew's, I was taken ,with the rest of the group, to Washington National Airport, where we took off for Europe.

Royally Treated

Upon arrival at Stockholm, Sweden, we were met by the U. S. Attache, several representatives of the Swedish government ,and a group of reporters from various newspapers.

We were taken to one of Stockholm's high-class eating spots, and after an elaborate dinner we were taken to a Swedish Airbase where we made our quarters for the evening.

The next morning, the commanding officer of the base informed us that we would fly from place to place in a C-47 that the Swedish government had placed at our disposal.

Tiring Hike

Our first destination was Ostersund, located in the northeastern section of Sweden. This was the mountainous part of Sweden, and a mountain-hiking expedition was arranged for us. It was a wonderful experience, but—never again!

Then we visited Goteburg, a large tourist town ,and Marstrand, a large island where there was an old castle used by the Swedes in many of their wars against the Danes. Then on to Angelholm, also a tourist place, small but interesting in background. Next we took a twenty minute ferry boat ride to Denmark to Helsingberg, on the east coast. There again we saw many old castles and beautiful scenery. Also we visited Visby, an island off the east coast, and a city rich in ancient background, customs and beliefs.

Stockholm Great

And finally we toured Stockholm, a city with a distinctive atmosphere. It was quite large but can't compare in magnitude with New York. Despite the difference in size, the two cities have a great deal in common. Homes, department stores, shops and whole business districts are similar.

The people of Sweden impressed me more than any of their material national assets. They are united. One man's problem seems to be every man's problem. The people are friendly and kind; they will give aid in any way possible. Friendship is worth more to them than money. They are satisfied with what they have and never go looking for trouble.

Sweden is the land of lakes and mountains, fields and streams, a land neutral and not oppressed. It is a land where hatred is not tolerated.

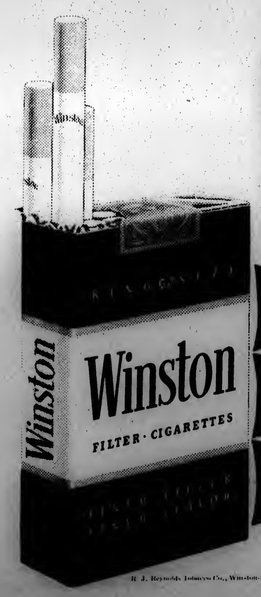
Civil Air Patrol Cadet Kotler looks as if he is ready for almost anything, just before take-off on another leg of his journey.

Scholarship

A $1000 scholarship for one year of professional graduate study leading to a Master of Science degree from New York University has been offered by John Wanamaker Store.

Submission of entries began Jan. 1, and the winner of the second annual scholarship competition will be selected by the Scholarship Award Committee, of Wanamaker's.

Winner of last year's award was Robert A. Byrne, who received a BS degree in economics from Villanova last June. He is now engaged in his studies.



After entering the NYU School of Retailing in the fall 1955 term, the winner attend classes for approximately 30 weeks to gain knowledge of retail store operation from the merchandising ,advertsing, management, personnel and fashion points of view.

For 10 weeks—in October, November and December—the winner will acquire supervised experience, at established rates of pay, in a retail organization in the New York metropolitan area.

College smokers are sure going for Winston!

FINER FILTER!
FINER FLAVOR!
KING SIZE, TOO!

WINSTON

the filter cigarette that really tastes like a cigarette!

■ No wonder Winston's so popular with college smokers! It's got real flavor—full, rich flavor you'll really enjoy. Winston tastes good—like a cigarette should!

Along with finer flavor, Winston also brings you a finer filter. The exclusive Winston filter works so effectively, yet doesn't "thin" the taste or flatten the flavor. Winston lets you draw smoothly, easily—there's no effort to puff!

Try Winston, the filter cigarette that tastes good—like a cigarette should!

Smoke WINSTON the easy-drawing filter cigarette!

Fresh Ideas Wanted:

Nineteen Prizes Offered In Christopher Contest

An opportunity to put your story on 256 TV stations is only one of the rewards offered in the new Christopher Contest, which is open to all college students.

Nineteen prizes, totalling $4000, have been contributed to the contest. A $1000 first prize is offered.

The Christopher set up the story contest to discover college students with fresh ideas to use in writing television scripts. This talent, the Christophers felt, could be polished and provide a future source of TV material, which will be a high quality and provide clean entertainment.

Students interested in the competition may obtain complete details from: Christopher College Student, 18 E. 48th St., New York 17, N. Y.

Contest closes March 31.

SYMPATHY

The staff of the VILLANOVAN expresses its sympathy to James Hommel, freshman arts, on the death of his father; and Edward and Howard Clark, freshman C & F, on the death of their mother.

PKP Initation Date Set as February 14th

Phi Kappa Pi, Villanova's engineering fraternity, will begin its annual initiation week for over 100 pledges on Feb. 14, frat president Tom Ulrich announced.

Ulrich also announced that a meeting will be held in C&F auditorium on Feb. 10 at 7 p.m. Dues must be paid and all frat paddles completed for this meeting, he said. There will be prizes awarded for the pledges and their Big Brothers for the best paddles.

Railroad engineer caps and red bandanas will be required apparel for the pledges during the frat's Hell Week, Feb. 14-17. In addition, identifying signs, T-squares, and rolled pants cuffs will be the PKP "regs."

Big Brothers will be assigned at the Feb. 10 meeting and Ulrich emphasized that all pledges must be present at that time.

Rifle Team Honored

Walt Gould, John Gilligan and Dick Day

Villanova's sharpshooting NROTC rifle team fired itself into second place in the annual Hearst competition among Navy units across the country.

Only a red hot 940 performance by the University of California ROTC surpassed the 935 score posted by the Villanova team, composed of Captain John Gilligan, C. A. Trunzo, Walt Gould, Dick Day and Fred Passarella.

Gilligan, who paced the local unit with a 191, was given an honorable mention in the competition for his performance. A graduate of St. John's High School, in Washington, D. C., the Villanova captain will be commissioned an ensign in the Navy upon graduation in June.

Second and third teams entered by the Villanova unit also made a respectable showing in the 78 team field.

The second team finished ahead of 22 first teams, while the Villanova third team was top ranked among third teams.

Individual scores of the four other first team riflemen: Trunzo and Passarella, 188; Gould, 185; Day, 183.

Capt. Lee A. Kirsten, USMC, of the Villanova unit, explained that the Hearst competition has three divisions; Army, Navy and Air Force .Teams fired on their own ranges and scores were witnessed by Capt. Martin J. Drury, professor of naval science at Villanova. Scores were then compiled by Hearst.

James Nolin, VU Grad, Named To Nat'l Group

James L. Nolin, a first-year student in the Villanova Law School, has been appointed to the National Audio-Visual Committee of the American Law Student Association.

Nolin, a '54 Villanova graduate, was notified yesterday by the national chairman of his selection to the newly-created special committee. The committee was called into being last November to encourage the establishment of extra-curricular film programs in law schools and to encourage the use of the recorded addresses available from the American Judicature Society.

The main purpose at this time, however, will be the expansion and enlargement of a speakers catalog which will be distributed to all members of the Student Bar Association.

The former Villanovan News Editor will head the committee to accomplish this latter purpose in the third judical circuit, comprising the states of Delaware, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey. Prominent jurists and lawyers will be asked to contribute some of their time to aid the legal students in these states.

Dean of Men Lauds Car System

The newly-installed "Leary Hall" traffic regulation system is working effectively, according to Rev. Edward B. McKee, O. S. A., University Vice-President.

But persons who are authorized to drive on campus seem to think they have the right to speed, said Father McKee.

These drivers evidently think that the rule, which has cleared the grounds of all but authorized vehicles and delivery trucks, was enforced to provide drivers with a clear speedway, said Father McKee.

All persons who are privileged to drive cars on campus were requested by Father McKee to exercise precaution along the narrow campus roads.

Representing the A. S. M. E., Dick Schleicher pointed out the progress being made in developing atomic power plants and other nuclear energy installations.

Vachon concluded the symposium, emphasizing the newness and tremendous possibilities of atomic energy.

Eight of the 13 mid-term graduation candidates get together in the library's browsing room. They are, l-r, Eugene McKinney, (standing), Raymond Wheiler, Martin Rogers, Bob Kaiser, Ralph Heinrich, Fred Astore, John Connolly and George Ferguson. Missing are Jim Boyle, Ignatius Lo, John Braca, John Mahan, Joseph Wilkinson, and Francisco Narganes.

Names of 13 candidates who are scheduled to complete requirements for degrees at the end of this semester were released last week by the Registrar's Office.

Eight students from the C & F School, four from the School of Arts and Sciences and two from the Engineering School are included on the list.

The compiete list, with the tentative degree:

James A. Boyle and Ignatius C. H. Lo, bachelor of chemical engineering; Ferdinand Astore, George T. Ferguson, Ralph J. Heinrich and Francis R. Kaiser, bachelor of arts;

John N. Braca, John P. Connelly, John R. Mahan, Eugene J. McKinney, Francisco E. Narganes, Martin H. Rogers, Raymond C. Wheiler and Joseph P. Wilkinson, bachelor of science in economics.

Record Crowd Turns Out For First T & T Audition

A record 123 persons appeared at the Field House last Tuesday night for auditions for "Jessica James." Final auditions will be held, as last week, at 7 p.m. today in the Field House.

According to T n' T's director, George Noake, "Tonight is it."

The job of picking the cast and chorus lines will then be up to Bob Whalen, Noake and George Pequinot. "Parts will be announced in the near future," states Whalen. This information will appear in the VILLANOVAN, as soon as the names are released.

Included in the 123 men who turned out last week were four talented guitar players.

In general, the directors were pleased with the "best turnout in T n' T's history." They hope to see even more talent tonight.

Devine, Schafer, Team Plays Paces Kings, Xavier Wins

By Ben Klemanowicz

The Villanova Wildcats, trying to regain national recognition, jolted Kings College and Xavier University, 97-71, and 96-73 respectively. A recovery of the early season poise and confidence prevailed in the high scoring contests.

By defeating Kings last Wednesday night, the Mainliners extended their winning streak in the fieldhouse to 69. Leading by only one point at halftime, 42-41, the Wildcats found themselves behind in the early moments of the second half. Sparked by Bernie Panzak, the Monarchs had taken a 49-47 lead. This edge, however, was erased quickly as the Wildcats roared back with seventeen points in a row.

Devine Gets 1000th Point

An interesting occurence of the Wildcat victory, was the the scoring of the 1000th point of captain Jack's Devine's basketball career. The 6-4 center of the Wildcats intercepted a pass late in the first half and dribbled the length of the floor to register his 1000th tally. This made Jack the fourth player in Villanova history to accomplish this feat; the others being Paul Arizin, Larry Hennessy, and teammate Bob Schafer. The crowd gave modest Jack a well deserved five minute standing ovation. This, along with the four long sets by Schafer in the final minutes, sent the crowd home in a completely satisfied frame of mind.

Zone Works Again

Once more employing the new 2-3 shifting zone, the Wildcats had little trouble gaining their 7th victory at the expense of highly regarded Xavier University. At the outset of the game, the Musketeers, ranked 17th in last weeks polls, seemed to have found a solution to the bothersome defense. Passing the ball quickly, and taking only the good shots, Xavier hit for a few opening points. However they soon became ineffective from the outside and the Wildcats began to pull away. As a result the Muskateers found themselves 15 points behind as the first half closed, and Villanova had 50 markers, the product of a sizzling 50% shooting percentage.

The opening of the second-half found the interest of the crowd directed toward Bob Schafer, and his efforts to break Larry Hennessy's all-time scoring mark. Having registered

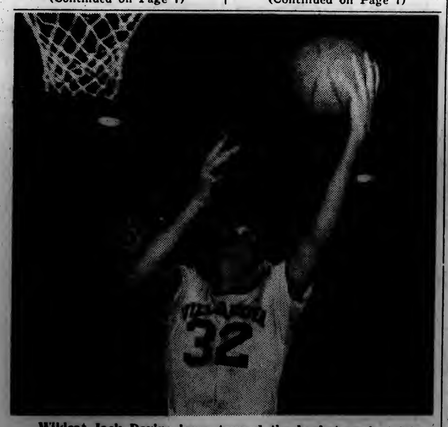
Perfect Records For Ten Teams in Intramural Play

By Jack Kero

Basketball is still in the spotlight in the Intramural Dept. as the season comes to its finish next month. Tryouts for the Intramural All-Star team began last Wednesday, and will be picked from the following ballplayers: Tom Meany, Frank Powers, Gene McDonald, Frank Perna, Frank O'Kenka, Ray Butternut, Pat Nickleson, Jim Brady, Dave Sansome, Tom Morrin, George McCaffrey, Lou Vincie, Doug Slade, Bruce Martin, Ronald Kidd, and Bill McNeil, plus a few others who are not listed.

The team will be cut to ten or twelve players before the first game with the Villanova freshmen team, slated for Feb. 17. Intramural Director Ed Geisz has also scheduled games with other surrounding colleges after their opener with the frosh.

Ten Teams Unbeaten



At present, there are eight teams that are unbeaten in their respective leagues. They are the Angeline A. C., Hearst A. C., Wackers, Zips, Dan Kelly's Forresters, Lungers, Shats, Bellhops, Heads, and Sullivan Hall, who had a very tough time beating the Delurey Scientists, led by Dick Tully, last Tuesday night.

Wrestling made its initiation into the Intramural sports program on Monday, January 17 with a meeting in the Field House. Plans are underway for a round-robin tournament to be held sometime next month and if enough interest is shown, wrestling will become a Varsity sport next year.

Wrestling Begins

There are some excellent wrestlers already working out and according to director Ed Geisz, the tournament should

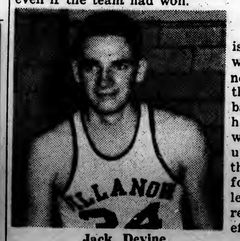
Sports Chatter

Basketball Chit-Chat

By Joe Heaps

Of all the major sports, basketball is the least predictable. There is not one big-time college team with an unblemished record. Most of the top-ranking clubs in the country have three setbacks, with many of them having more. Some of the losses have occurred in games with teams that were supposedly out of the class of the national leaders. The outstanding example of this was the Georgia Tech win over previously undefeated Kentucky.

A pair of games that seem to make no sense were the Notre Dame-Holy Cross games. In the first at the Sugar Bowl tournament, the Irish edged the Crusaders, but two weeks later the New England team routed the Irish by 38 points.



Penn tripped Iowa, Michigan State, and Purdue (all potent Big Ten squads), and then barely squeezed by Harvard and Yale.

Villanova Results

Like these, and other examples of unpredictable results, Villanova has made a couple of contributions to the unusual.

After four victories, the Wildcats met Duquense and St. John's in Madison Square Garden. The team played well for a half against the Iron Dukes, but after that they were listless. Three nights later the Severance-men met the then No. 2 ranking quintet in the country, North Carolina State, and literally ran away with the game. Following this great performance, Villanova lost its next two games to Richmond and Dayton.

After the Dayton game, many students remarked that the team played very fine ball against the tall Flyers. No team looks good when they make only 21 per cent of their shots. However, in some respects, Villanova played well. The 2-3 zone was successful in limiting the attack of the visitors, the Wildcats got more than their share of the defensive rebounds from their taller opponents, and Bill Uhl, the seven-foot Dayton center, was bottled up so thoroughly that he didn't even play in the second half. Of course, this is all overlooked since the team didn't win the game. As a matter of fact, it probably would have been overlooked even if the team had won.

Jack Devine

Unsung Players

Spectator appeal in basketball is centered on the shooting, and without shooting, one cannot win. But there is more to the game than just making the baskets. Defensive play, ballhandling, rebounding, and teamwork are all factors that add up to team success. Often, though, the person responsible for the performance of these less glamourous tasks does not receive sufficient credit for his efforts.

A player who fits into this category is the captain of 1954-55 squad—John Devine. When John scored his thousandth point in the Kings game last Wednesday, he received a standing ovation from the student body. No ovation was ever more justly deserved.

Problem of Fouls

The problem of what to do about fouling in basketball seems to have the rulemakers on the verge of despair. To put the proper penalty on infractions without being unfair to either team has resulted in many proposals and experiments. Last year an extra free throw was allowed if the fouled player missed his first shot. This year a bonus toss is permitted if the player makes his first. Neither idea has been satisfactory according to many coaches and players. Perhaps the correct solution would be the one employed in intramural games in Alumni Hall, where no fouls are called!

Swarthmore 2nd Tankmen Victory; Delaware Ties

Last week, in their second and third meets, Villanova's mermen again proved themselves well as they defeated Swarthmore, 59-24, and tied the Blue Hens of Delaware, 42-42.

The Swarthmore meet, held in the Villanova pool last Wednesday night, was no contest from the very start.

Villanova took the first eight consecutive events, and Swarthmore won only the final 440 relay. In the opening 300 yd. medley, a Wildcat trio of Don Couig, Lee Sykes, and Pat Keane had an easy time winning, and posted a 3:21.6 time for the event.

Donnelly, Duffy Excel

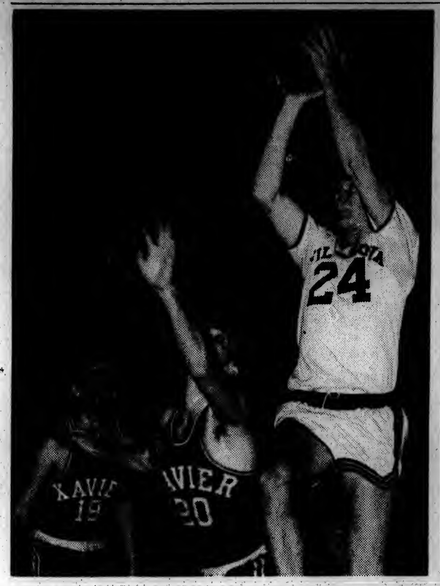
Following the 300, Jim Donnelly and Tony Tomasulo placed first and second respectively for the 220 freestyle; Bob Duffy and Den Rinkacs got a one-two in the 50 yd. freestyle; and Walt Ullrich, performing with a toe injury from the previous meet, received 45 points to take first honors in the diving competition. Don Nalty, a newcomer to the squad, placed third.

Duffy and Rinkacs came through again in the 100 yd. freestyle with a first and second place, and Don Couig, the most consistent swimmer on the team, proved himself once again as he easily won the 200 yd. backstroke. After Couig's victory, Bill Kelly and Matt Lieb placed in the 200 yd. breastroke, and the rest of the meet was just a formality. Jim Donnelly and Tony Tomasulo picked up first and second places respectively in the 440 freestyle.

Delaware Ties

On Saturday, at Taylor Pool in Delaware, a close fought battle ended in a 42-42 tie, when Delaware's tankmen received a first place in the final event to knot the score of the meet.

The opening 300 yd. medley was won by the Blue Hen team of Bruce Stewart, Jack McDeniel, and Bob Brubacker. The time for the medley was 3:22.6. Villanova bounced back in the 220 freestyle when Jim Donnelly recorded a first place and Tony Tomasulo a third. Den Rinkacs came through with a 25:8 time for the 50 yd. distance, and Villanova took the lead.



In the 150 medley, Couig again turned in a winning performance, and edged out Tom Duff in a close contest. The diving events, taken by Delaware, saw Jack Ryder compile 60 points, beating Villanova's Walt Ullrich.

Closely Fought Contest

Bob Duffy won the 100 freestyle in 1:00.3. Couig once again took a first place, in front of Stewart and Lee Carson, Villanova, in his specialty, the 200 backstroke. Delaware's Bob Wagner then swam the 200 breastroke in 2:45.5 to cop first place in that event. Following the breastroke, Jim Donnelly placed first in the 440 yd. freestyle, and Villanova was ahead with but one event to go.

In that final contest, Brubaker, Stewart, Duff, and Apostolo

Bet Starts Charlie Jenkins On Path to Track Stardom

By Bill Brown

Some years ago, beyond the memories of present students, there was a man named Ab Jenkins. This man's name is written in racing annals with those of Oldfield and Chevrolet. There is a present-day Jenkins, first name Charles who seems to be fast on his feet as the other was in a car. Charley Jenkins is a sophomore at Villanova who specializes in winning the 440 and 600 yard runs for Coach Elliott's track team.

Quick to Smile

The first impressions one gets from Charley are a quick, wide smile and an equally fast, and firm handshake. From his easy conversation are evidenced his joy in being alive and also the seriousness he gives to track work.

A bet resulted in his entering the world of the cinders and the spiked shoe. At the time, he was a sophomore at Rindge Technical High School, in Cambridge, Mass.

Thought Track Silly

"I thought track was silly and wanted to play basketball", he admits. Silly or not, however, at the end of that season he had won not only the bet but also his varsity letter.

During his track tenure at Rindge, Charley was undefeated in the 600 yard canter. His winning skein in the quarter-mile lasted for two years in the National Interscholastic Meet in New York City. One of his biggest thrills from his high school days was participating in the Penn Relays.

Morgan State had the post position in Charley's mind, but his coach put the Villanova bee in Jenkins' ear. That, in short, is how he came to reside in Sullivan Hall. He is a student in the C & F school.

Inquirer Games

This far in his career, Charley has been timed at 47.2 in the 440 and, 1:12.2 in the 600. He'll get a chance to better his times when, in the forthcoming Inquirer Games, he meets, among others, Reggie Pearman.

Other than sports, he has a hobby of collecting the pictures of figures in all sports. He indicates that he has a large and worthy scrapbook.

Wants to Teach

Like all of us, Charley is trying to fit his plans around an awkward two years in the armed services. After that, his ambition is to teach and to be a track coach. He has observed as well as performed, and has compiled an ample file on coaching techniques.

'Cat Trackmen Set Marks

By Ed Canfield

Villanova's youthful track team made its 1955 debut Saturday night before 11,659 at the 29th annual Massachusetts Knight of Columbus Games in the Boston Garden. It was a smashing success for the Wildcats, who are regarded as one of the East's most dangerous teams. The shining lights of Jumbo Jim Elliot's contingent were Charlie Jenkins, and the spectacular freshman, Ron Delaney. The swift pair established all-time Boston records. Jenkins, a sophomore from nearby Cambridge, put on a dazzling show before the home folks. He set a blistering 1 minute 10 second pace for the 600 yard run, to become the second fastest all-time runner of the distance.

Jenkin's Strong Finish

His sterling performance gave him retention of the Prout Cup. Charlie's victory was not a breeze. He trailed Fordham's Tom Courtney until the last 100 yards. In the backstretch, he put on a tremendous burst of speed and came flying home nine yards ahead of Lou Jones, champion of the Armed Forces track team.

Bill Rock

Jenkins, less than an hour later, came back to Join Gene Maliff, Warren Heitman, and Al Peterson in setting another meet record. The fleet foursome outdistanced Morgan State and St. John's in a blazing 3.19.6. Elliot also unveiled the lanky Irish freshman, Ron Delaney, and Ireland's half-mile champ won the Cheverus 1,000 in 2.10.2 for another all-time Hub record. He wiped out Roscoe Browne's 1950 Boston record of 2.11.

Reavis, Sydnor Star

Phil Reavis, a freshman earned a tie with three others for the high jump. He cleared the bar at 6 feet, 6 inches. George Sydnor, another frosh who was the Pennsylvania sprint champ last year, almost pulled a tremendous upset. He lost the 50 yard dash by a hair to the Armed Forces Rodney Richard, a product of UCLA.

This Friday night, in their only Philadelphia appearance of the indoor season, Villanova's young speedsters hope to continue their record-breaking feats in the Inquirer Games.

Frosh Show Future Swim Potential

With the opening freshmen meet of the current tank season last Thursday against West Catholic, the Villanova yearlings displayed some very good material for future varsity teams.

The squad, which includes a group of former outstanding high school swimmers, meets Penn Frosh in Hutchinson Pool tomorrow at 2 p.m. Ed Geisz and Dave Rowan, coaches, recently named Lou Schoner and Mike Klesius, co-captains Schoner hails from St. Joe's Prep in Philadelphia and won the Atlantic Coast Championships as a life at Ocean City last summer while the latter is a freestyle standout from Alexandria, Va.

Numerous Freestylers

Other freestylers include John Needem, ex-Malvern Prep star, in the 50-yard event and John Flynn, a speedy splasher from St. Francis Prep (Brooklyn), who competes in the 220 and 440. Lou Pinto, from West Catholic, who captured the Catholic League breastroke title in Philly last year, and Joe Kennedy, from nearby Upper Darby, should prove to be formidable competition for all foes.

In diving, the frosh are capably represented by Mike Rafferty, a specialist in this event.

Defend Relay Titles

After tomorrow's meet, the mermen will prepare for LaSalle on Jan. 22 and Feb. 4 in a home and away series. Later in the season, some seven district colleges will participate in the Philadelphia Metropolitan Intercollegate Swimming Championships in the Mainliners' Pool, of which Villanova's freshmen team will defend the medley and freestyle relay crowns it won last winter.

Rifle Team

Villanova's NROTC rifle team tightened its grip on first place in the Philadelphia ROTC League Saturday with a victory over Drexel. Captain John Gilligan paced the shooters to their fifth win in five starts.

Freshmen Divide Two Games; St. Joe Overtime Victor

An even split of competition highlighted the play of the freshman basketball team last week. The easy defeat of Camden Catholic H. S. for the second time this season was overshadowed by the heartbreaking loss to the St. Joseph's College Frosh 72-70 in overtime.

Lose in Overtime

A driving layup by Ed Carney provided the margin of difference in the overtime as the "Kittens" suffered their third loss of the season. However, it was only anti-climatic to the last three seconds of regulation time. At this point Villanova held a three point lead, but one foul shot by McColgan and a hook shot by John Rotz as the buzzer sounded tied up the game and set the stage for Carney's shot.

minary to the varsity contest against Xavier last Saturday night, was a seesaw affair all the way. An early lead by the 'Cats was erased by the fine shooting of Steve Idzik and Art Giordano. St. Joe's then proceeded to move out into a 25-21 margin with three minutes remaining in the first half.

Then Villanova came to life and reeled off 11 straight points before the half ended. Inspired by this comeback the "Kittens" continued to score consistenly following the intermission, and took the lead which it held until Rotz tied it up.

Kelly, Newman Star

The offensive punch for the 'Cats was provided by Jack Kelly and Connie Newman both of whom scored 19 points. Outstanding was the defensive play of center Tom Brennan.

In their other court appearance last week the freshman defeated Camden Catholic 61-43. The "Green" of Camden provided stubborn opposition for a half but easily succumbed to the second half onslaught of the home forces. Captain Kelly led the scoring parade with 31 markers followed by Brennan with 12. For the visitors Ralph Bantivoglio was again high scorer. A possessor of a good set shot, he scored 17 points in defeat.

A full slate of four games is scheduled for the freshman this week as they attempt to better their season's record of five and three.

17 points in the first half, the Blond Bomber needed 15 more to surpass the mark of 1737 set by Hennessy. He accomplished this with 3:42 minutes remaining in the game. A few moments later he made his 15th free throw for the evening giving him 33 points for the night and 1739 for his basketball career.

However, Bob was not the only one putting in a good night's work. Captain Jack Devine was his usual cool self, throwing in 16 points and setting up many key plays. Jim Smith, breaking loose for the second game in a row, added 23 points to the Wildcats total. Outstanding defensively were Al Griffith and Jack Weissman who stole many loose balls and intercepted numerous passes.

Because of exams and semester vacation, no VILLANOVAN will appear until Feb. 15. Deadline for copy is Feb. 10.

Coyne, Reardon, Borden Cast In Top Harvey Roles

By Clem Birch

As "Harvey" is scheduled to be staged in the Field House, March 23-26, Rev. William Krupa, O. S. A., announced the play's cast last week.

The six male parts will be commanded by experienced Villanovan thespians, who have each been in at least two Belle Masque productions. Bernie Coyne, a senior English major from Baltimore, will hold down the role of Elwood P. Doud, the seventh major part. The first lead, Judge Gaffney, will be handled by Jack Reardon, who appeared as Dennis in "Command Decision". Jim Borden will take the part of Mr. Wilson, second in importance. Cast as Dr. Chumley is Bob Erskine, who drew applause as Kane in the last production, "Command Decision." Mike Clark has been chosen to portray the noticeable Cab Driver. Drew Higgins, who has behind him the experience of the two past successes, will play Dr. Sanderson.

Feminine Touch Returns

For the first time since the fall of 1953, when "Admirable Crichton" bowed at the Field House, the cast will include female parts. Priscilla O'Conner, a freshman nursing student, will enact the part of Ruth Kelly. Dolores Cofield, a sophomore nursing student, will appear in the person of Mrs. Chauvenet. Aunt Veta will be played by Jeanne Ward, a second year student of the Villanova Law School. Miss Ward was president of the Gest & Jester Dramatic Society while attending Rosemont. Cecilia Gleason and Ann Kieler, students at Rosemont, are cast as Myrtle May and Mrs. Chumley in that order.

Outside the campus in intercollegiate competition, Belle Masque members will appear in "Romances", a one act play written by Rostrand. Making his debut for Belle Masque is Stan McGeehan, cast as Precinct. Lucille Bell, a nursing student, will play Sylvette. Walt Doyle, an experienced Belle Masquer, will bow in the part of Bergamin. Paul Gormley appears as Pasquinot. Bernie Finan, a veteran of Turf & Tinsel, has been selected as Straforel.

Villanova Chosen As Law School Admission Hub

Villanova has been designated as a testing center for the nationwide administrations of the Law School Admission Test on Feb. 19, Dean Harold Gill Reuschlein announced today.

Depending upon the law school to which they wish to make application, college seniors, juniors and in some instances sophomores are eligible to take the tests. Each applicant should find out as soon as possible from the law school in which he is interested whether he should take the test and on what date.

The Law School Admission test is prepared and administered four times a year—in November, February, April and August—by Educational Testing Service, Princeton, N. J.

Application blanks and a Bulletin of Information describing registration procedures and containing sample test questions should be obtained four or five weeks in advance of the testing date from the Registrar, Villanova University School of Law, or directly from the Law School Admission Test, Educational Testing Service, 20 Nassau Street, Princeton, N. J.

Applications must be mailed so as to be received at the Princeton Office not later than ten days prior to the testing date chosen, Dean Reuschlein advised.

Scores on the Law School Admission Test are used by many law schools throughout the United States, along with previous scholastic record and other evidences of suitable personal characteristics, as a basis for admission of applicants.

Stage Crew Busy

The play will be presented at Harcum March 10. It will also be staged at Penn, the date to be announced.

Coyne, who has the background of nine plays in his four years at Villanova, compliments Rev. William Krupa, O. S. A., moderator-director, "Who makes each play a big success." Coyne said he was "very glad" to have the lead.

Jim Duffy, a mechanical engineer, who was stage manager for "Command Decision", will head the crew once more for "Harvey". Helping Duffy in the stage work is Jack Lavery, a C&F student. Although the behind-the-scenes men have already begun work on the sets, President Bill Cunningham would like to have anyone interested in this work contact either him or any one of the other two men.

ROOM SYSTEM

Reservation of rooms for the 1955-56 academic year will be conducted early in the second semester, announced Rev. Edward B. McKee, O. S. A., University Vice-president and Dean of Men.

Although Father McKee did not give a definite date for the registration, he said he would meet with all resident students before signing for rooms opens.

A new system for reserving rooms will be explained at this meeting, Father McKee added. He would not make public details of the plan.

Students living off campus in university-approved rooms will also be invited to the meeting, according to the vice-president.

Time and place for the meeting will be posted on bulletin boards and announced in a later issue of the VILLANOVAN.

STORY CONTEST

If you have a true story to tell, you have a chance to win one of 157 cash awards, valued at $40,000.

True Story magazine, in the current issue, lists details of its fifth annual true story contest.

Editors stress that writing skill is not necessary to win as long as the true story is written honestly and sincerely.

a class meeting Thursday at 10:30 a. m., O'Rourke said.

Since the present officers took command of the class last May, talk about sophomores being eligible for blazers has circulated through the class, but it wasn't until last week that any official word was passed down.

This will, therefore, be the first second year class in Villanova history to purchase blazers. In the coming months, then, only Villanova's freshmen will not have the coveted sport jackets.

In future years, students will purchase blazers in their sophomore year.

Class officers hope that the present second year class will be the first sophomore group to sponsor a closed social event.

A.I.E.E.-I.R.E.

Villanova's A.I.E.E.-I.R.E. society will hold its next meeting on Monday, Feb. 14 at 7:30 p.m. in 215 Mendel. President Jim Wrzesinski announced that Henry Wu, Class of '52, will speak on "Electric Wave Filters." He is presently engaged in research work for the Polyphase Corporation on close-tolerance filters used in government guided missiles.

He will discuss the peculiar problems he encountered in the work, and his solutions. Filter models and a transistor analyzer will be used to illustrate the talk.

WVIL Schedule

Here's WVIL's programming schedule for the week of Jan. 17:

10:45-11—Music

Programming operations will cease at 11 this Fri. night to resume after the vacation.

The VILLANOVAN plans to have a full page picture spread depicting WVIL's activities in its Feb. 15 issue.

T&T

The Turf and Tinsel business meeting held last Tuesday was "very successful," according to the business manager, Bill Reich, Nick Mazzoni and Dick Cooke.

The attendance was pleasing and plenty of workers appeared. Work will begin following semester vacation, the managers said.

Anyone interested in joining the staff, who was unable to attend last week's meeting, is invited to attend the next meeting.

Lynx

The LYNX, Villanova's literary magazine, makes its first appearance of the academic year Thursday in the Pie Shoppe and Bookstore, announces Editor Rees James.

Featuring a short story, "A Fine Day for Digging," the magazine will also include four other short stories and four poems. The highlighted short story was written by junior Joe Barrett, a pre-law C & F student, and LYNX poetry editor.

Editor James said he was "disappointed at the lack of contributions by students" for the first issue. He hoped that more students would offer material for the next issue. Deadline for the second issue is around April 1, James added.

James emphasized that poetry,, short stories, essays and other similar material, in good taste, is acceptable. Manuscripts should be submited to James (Delurey Hall).

Moderators of the LYNX are Dr. John Phillipson and Mr. James Mitchell, of the English Department.

Mardi Gras Dance

Paul Donahue, master of ceremonies at the Mardi Gras Ball Friday evening, presents Joan Sacker with the beauty contest's first prize. Five lovelies were chosen for the final drawing.

Subject... Yearbook Schedule

Those who have a direct hand in the production of the 1955 Belle Air yearbook—l-r, Dick Winfield, associate editor, Ray McWilliams and Dan Solari, publishers' representatives, Frank Gunther, editor- and William Quinn, associate editor, go about laying out the publication's final pages. Over half the yearbook's pictures and sections have been completed.

FOREIGN STUDY—

American students have the opportunity of studing aboard in 1955 by making use of the facilities of the Institute of International Education, it was announced by Kenneth Holland, President of the Institute.

Six-week courses will be offered this summer at Oxford, at Stratford-upon-Avon, and at the capital cities of London and Edinburgh.

A limited number of scholarships is avaliable. Award and admission application forms may be secured from the Institute at 1 E. 67th Street, New York, N. Y. Completed applications should be returned to the Institute by March 28, 1955. A limited number of steamship passages on Cunard Ships are reserved for successful candidates.

The courses offered are planned to serve the needs of well-qualified undergraduates in their junior or senior years or of postgraduate students.

Seventy university fellowships and assistantships are being offered by the French government through the Ministries of Foreign Affairs and of Education. The thirty fellowship awards are for students with definite academic projects or study plans. The assistantships afford language teaching experience and an opportunity to become better acquainted with France.

Ryan Out: Girl Successor; Jrs. Sign Buddy Williams

Intermission By Pedicin

Junior Prom Chairman Greg Gehring has announced that Buddy Williams, one of the nation's top bands less than three years ago, and now once again on the way up, has been signed along with intermission band Mike Pedicin and his quintet for the Junior Week affair.

Gehring signed Williams after exhaustive efforts to obtain Les Elgart, and then Buddy Morrow, proved fruitless, for different reasons. After stalling for three months, the music corporation in New York dealing with the class announced that Elgart had upped his price to $2,000, some $800 above the price allotted for the class to spend for a prom band.

No. 2 Choice

With Elgart an impossibility, a class meeting in January decided to get either Buddy Morrow, first choice, Williams and Pedicin, No. 2 preference, or Claude Thornhill, the No. 3 choice. As it developed, Morrow had been signed to play a long-run engagement in New Orleans from late in the month until the 29th, and there was a good chance he would be signed by some Louisiana colleges for that first week in May. In any case, a definite answer could not have been obtained on Morrow for at least another month or even later, since bands are signed for stands in the same location for a certain period, and it was possible that Morrow would be nowhere near Philadelphia during the first week of

First Ten-Page VILLANOVAN Adds Photos, Features

Today's VILLANOVAN is the institution's first regularly-scheduled 10-page weekly. Editor Edwin Daly and the paper's moderator, Rev. Louis A. Rongione, O. S. A., had been considering the page increase since early in the first semester.

They believe that a two-page increase will enable the campus weekly to keep abreast of the growth in various University departments, and better represent the organizations and groups which have news features to offer.

Incidentally, the reason we're a day late is due to printing and time factors. We'll continue to appear in the Pie Shoppe, basement of C & F and in Mendel Hall, but on Wednesday rather than on Tuesdays.

It will be noted that, as usual, two pages are alloted to the bustling campus athletic scene, but extra space is given to class activities, organizations and clubs and bright feature material.

And the full page picture spread on WVIL on page 9 is the first of a weekly feature in the revised format. Other organizations to be pictured are the NROTC unit, Villanova Singers, Student Council and the Band among others.

New Sec'y Appointed

Mrs. Helen Donat has been named to succeed departed Bill Ryan as athletic secretary, but she will confine her activities to those of a secretary.

Very Rev. Patrick J. Dundon, O. S. A., Prior of the Monastery and Chairman of the Board of Athletic Control, made the announcement last week in discussing Ryan's resignation.

Father Dundon said that Ryan wanted "to get into other fields of endeavor." The Prior added that he may have felt he could earn more money elsewhere.

Had "Several Leads"

But Father Dundon said he did not know what Ryan was planning to do, but he remarked that Ryan had mentioned in a letter that he had "several leads."

A campus rumor had Ryan headed for the west, possibly to a position in the public relations department of the brand new Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs, Colo.

The energetic former athletic secretary could not be reached for comment in his Trenton home.

Ryan's successor moved to the Philadelphia area two years ago with her husband and four children—two girls aged 13 and 10 and two boys aged five and three. Mrs. Donat was raised in North Jersey and graduated from high school in Bogota, N. J., near Hackensack.

Father Dundon said members of the athletic department have expressed satisfaction with her work.

Irish "Cultural Olympics" Set Here in March

The first Irish Cultural Olympics ever to be presented in the United States will be held at Villanova University from March 6th to April 1st inclusive under the joint sponsorship of the Friends of Villanova Library and the Irish-American societies in the Delaware Valley.

Ireland's Ambassador John J. Hearne is scheduled to open formally the month-long presentation on Sunday, March 6 at 3 p. m. in the Villanova Library where the Olympics are to be held. He will be introduced by the Very Rev. James A. Donnelon, president of the University.

Wide Range

Every phase of Ireland's cultural life and history is within the scope of the Olympics. Exhibits will range from ancient manuscripts and old religious paintings to a fashion show of modern Irish dress and motion pictures of present Ireland. Irish step dancing and Irish music will vie for interest with rare books and such samples of modern day Irish industry as fine tweeds, laces and linens, Belleek china and waterford crystal. A number of the exhibits have been arranged with the cooperation of the Irish Embassy and groups of individuals in this country and in Ireland.

Each evening will feature a talk by an authority on some one phase of Irish life. Ireland's sports and industry, her theatre and her literature, her saints and scholars, her heroes and her music—all will be discussed.

Irish Travelogue

The wide variety of exhibits and events are designed to appeal to everyone of any age or nationality. A copy of the Book of Kells, for example, will be on exhibition on the evening when an expert on this valued manuscript explains its history. On the lighter side two evenings will be taken up with a travelogue on Ireland in sound and color.

The list of societies participating in this first Irish Cultural Olympics includes Donegal, Kerry, Cavan, Cork, Armagh, Mayo, Galway, Tyrone, Roscommon and Derry. Also taking part are the McSwiney Club, the Irish-

Day Hop and Resident:

Frosh Hold Nominations For Two Council Seats

The University's freshman class will hold its first meeting tomorrow at 10:30 a. m. in C & F Auditorium. Candidates for two seats as representatives on the Student Council will be nominated.

Frank Licopoli, chairman of the Student Council elections committee will be in charge of the meeting. Rev. George McLaughlin, O. S. A., Dean of Student Activities, will explain to the freshmen the requirements for candidates.

Nominees will be checked for scholastic standing, chapel attendance and discipline, Licopoli said.

He added that one day hop and one resident candidate will be nominated.

These nominees will then be screened by the dean's office, the registrar's office and the chaplain's office.

Date of the election of the two representatives will be announced later, Licopoli said.

Senior Tickets

With the annual Father's Day celebration riding on the success of the concert-dance planned for Feb. 25, seniors were reminded last week that they may pick up tickets in three places if they did not procure them during second semester registration.

Tickets for the affair may be picked up from Bud Ford (240 Sullivan), Jim Wrzesinski (Simpson) or Ted Clarkson.

Odabash Fills Blazer Order For Sophs

The University's sophomore class has been promised delivery by April 1 of blazers, which were fitted yesterday and Monday.

President Jack O'Rourke announced that the second year men will receive the jackets from Rogers Peet, of New York, before Easter vacation.

Measurements were taken for the blazers after the class chose the manufacturer and color at a meeting during exam week. The closest race developed between the selected manufacturer and Strawbridge and Clothier, of Philadelphia.

Lighter Shade

The color selected was a somewhat lighter shade of blue than that of the blazers worn by the present juniors.

Sophomores, according to O'Rourke, had the choice of either two or three buttons, but there was no choice of pockets, which will be patch.

At the meeting, Blazer Chairman Art Odabash told the sophomores that the emblem on the left breast pocket would be larger than that on the present junior jackets, but would be primarily the same. A suggestion was made by Odabash that the word "university" be placed under the emblem.

Sophomores put down $5 of the $30 charge as a deposit, when they were measured.

Career Conference

The annual Career Conference will be held tomorrow morning from 9.30 to 12 in the C&F Auditorium, the Placement Office announced.

Speakers at the event, dedicated to a discussion of job opportunities for college graduates, will be C. Edward Murphy, of Bell Telephone of Pennsylvania; Glenn Petty, of Lybrand, Ross Bros. and Montgomery; and Robert Easley of Proctor and Gable. Rev. John A. Klekotka, O.S.A., will preside.

Since all Senior cuts will be excused, all Seniors are required to attend.

SYMPATHY

The VILLANOVAN staff expresses its sympathy to Rev. John Klekotka, O. S. A., former moderator of the newspaper, on the death of his brother.

Congratulations!

Toward the end of last semester, there appeared on campus the Golden Anniversary Issue of the VILLANOVA ENGINEER, commemorating fifty years of Engineering at Villanova.

When the School of Technology was founded at Villanova during the school year of 1904-5, no other Catholic college in the East offered a course in Engineering. The establishment of such a course was a revolutionary step, a move that required courage and foresight.

The passing years have shown the wisdom of that original step. Villanova's Engineering School has grown from a modest undertaking to one of the very best such schools in the nation. It has, by its high standing and excellent reputation, brought fame to Villanova in many quarters where the name of this University would otherwise have been unkown.

Fifty years after its founding, the Engineering School of Villanova is a source of credit to the University and of pride to all Villanovans.

We fully share this pride in our Engineering School. Because of this, we extend our heartiest congratulations to the Engineering faculty and student body and our wish for another fifty years as successful as the first.

Vindication of '55

Will Rogers, at his ingenious best, spread the gospel of the "great big honest majority," proclaiming that the corporate voice is the voice of good. This philosophy unfailingly draws jeers from the cynics in the crowd.

Campus cynics, however, have been caught up short by the recently exploits of the Senior class. For a while on everybody's black list, the seniors are doing a gratifying job of lifting themselves up by their bootstraps.

They are doing it financially—absolving a $900 debt incurred over the November Senior weekend by selling tickets to a Concert Dance. In the same stroke they are resurrecting their reputations.

The interesting note is that Operation Phoenix evolved from a stern warning, then wild disorder, then sane realization of the job at hand, and finally concerted action to do the job. All the seniors saw the disgrace; almost all thought they had better do something about it themselves; a majority decided what to do; and, with an exception here and there, all are doing their part in absolving themselves.

Wrangling and indecision characterized the first stages of the drive, but all rancor was dropped when the decision was made and the money raising was started. This is revealing for a class which has enjoyed little unity until now.

The seniors have gotten a running start by securing overwhelming support of their ticket sales drive. There remains the Concert Dance to be successfully arranged and a Father's Day to be carried off.

Thus far the seniors have vindicated themselves in a striking and thoroughly democratic manner. We wish them continued success.

Internal Trouble May Keep Russia From War

By Ed Daly

Last week's sudden shift of power in the Kremlin made clear to many Americans how much the future of the world may be altered by events taking place behind the scenes in Russia.

Just Beginning

One thing immediately becomes clear to the observer. The struggle for control of the Soviet Union is far from over. At the very least, the followers of the ousted premier must be replaced by "reliable" officials. The fact that Malenkov has been given another responsible position does not alter the fact that he and his faction have now been discredited. After all, there is nothing new in a Russian official being given a lower position than the one he had once occupied before he begins the final trip to prison and death.

Actually there is an indication of factionalism in Russia that may be of far greater significance for the future. The new regime is apparently the result of a coalition of Khruschev's party organization and the generals, apparently led by Zhukov. So long as this coalition holds together, there will probably be comparative stability in the Soviet regime.

Unrest Possible

It is supposing a great deal to expect this alliance to last very long, however. Either the generals may become dissatisfied with Khruschev's dominance and decide to strike for power themselves, or Khruschev may become suspicious of his allies and decide to purge them. Either alternative would mean trouble for Russia serious enough to keep that country out of condition for foreign wars for a few years at least.

Despite Khruschev's reputation as a tough and aggressive leader, there will probaby be no war so long as he holds the real power in Russia.

The reason is quite simple. A war would mean that the authority now vested in the party apparatus would have to be shared with the army to a much greater degree than in peacetime. The army is apparently his ally now, but there is an old Kremlin tradition about never trusting one's ally of today, who might, after all, become one's enemy tomorrow. It seems to me unlikely that Khruschev would be so foolish as to forget this.

The danger point would be reached if the influence of Khruschev and the generals were to become so nearly equal that the military faction could become absolutely supreme in their own sphere. At that time Zhukov and his colleagues might decide to provoke a serious incident in the hope of causing a war and assuring their own control of the government at the same time.

War Remote Possibility

At the moment it does not seem likely that such a situation will arise for some time to come. The army has increased its authority greatly in the recent reshuffling, but there is no indication that it has become independent of civilian authority.

Whether the Soviet army will ever become strong enough at home to risk a war on its own authority is debatable. When that day comes, the free would will have real cause to fear war. In the meantime, it seems improbable that Russia will provoke a major war. Threats, fringe wars, and insults will doubtless continue, perhaps even increase, but a major conflict does not seem to be a part of the Soviet plan.

LIBRARIAN FEATURED—

Miss Margaret Mary Henrich, assistant librarian at Villanova, is featured in the current issue of the Catholic Standard and Times. For the past two years she has been chairman of the Catholic Author Luncheon.

Miss Henrich, in the story, says that she has always loved good books. "I like books and I like people," she adds. "I firmly believe they should meet."

After attending Trinity College, Miss Henrich took her BS in library science from Drexel Tech. She worked in the Penn Library before coming to Villanova around the time the present building was constructed.

Miss Henrich told her interviewer that her library work has always been on the college level, even though she had planned all her life to work with children.

No Present Policy Solution to Crises

By Mark McCormick

It has been argued that this is an age in which men have reason for despair, that this is justifiably an age of fatalistic realism. Current newspaper headlines attest to the gravity of the present situation. If that is not enough, personal experience tells us that this is an age of turmoil and that survival is probably the issue.

The evil actions that history attributes to man have a discouraging cumulative effect. Any grounds for hope are weakened by the record of man. The record includes two recent tragic world wars and expressed threats of a more terrible and tragic conflict. Statesmen have invented euphemistic terms like "containment" and "coexistence" in order that we would not have to accept the present bitter stalemate as a completely static and hopeless situation.

Paradox in Realism

But the mass of men has probably not been fooled. Most men are willing to admit that the situation is desperate. But at the same time, there is a great lack of realism on the part of men when it comes to selecting a possible way out of our crises.

One group seems to think that it is enough to state that war is "obsolete" because it is too terrible a prospect, that it can be abolished by the common consent of men, once their wills are enlightened by the prospect of the terrors of future war. But war has never been pleasant, and it has always been terrible. Mere knowledge of its horror has never been enough to make men remove it from their sphere of activity.

Neutralism, avoidance of positive policy in international politics, is another means that has been resorted to in the hope that peace might be maintained. But this system, by its very lack of policy, can be productive of no international solution. A vacuum invites invasion.

Stalemate Now

And it is not enough to say, as in fact we seem to be saying now, that preparation for war is the best way to prevent war. Here again, cause of war is not eliminated; there is no guarantee that men will "become better."

Because these proposed solutions do not eliminate the cause of war, they are temporary and not completely realistic. Certainly, the correct answer does not lie in any form of escapism. Man should not, as he has done before, think that he can ignore the lessons of history or that he can put on his brakes or shift into reverse. No man who has fled from the future by attempting to relive the past has ever succeeded.

In fact, the only eventual guarantee that the world can be made a better place consists in the hope and possibility that men will become better than they have been and better than they are now. None of our present policies takes this into account and provides that it will be accomplished. Hence, the vague terminology of hopes and plans for peace, hence their unrealism, and hence their failure.

Before our crises can be resolved, individual men must recognize that the purpose of this life is preparation for a better life, guaranteed to good men. This recognition would provide us with a beginning and an end, a beginning in good, positive actions and faith and an end in a better life in an infinitely better place.

Campus Comment...

RUMOR has it that Villanova's NROTC Marine Master Sgt. John E. Warhya plans to present some rip-roaring Saturday matinee programs for prospective Marines and other men of courage. Movies will be top quality Hollywood productions. At the risk of removing the suspense from these realistic dramas, we must assure our readers that the Marines have never lost a battle or a war—at least in Hollywood productions.

TOO OFTEN our two-exam per semester system leads to the same bitter and shocking consequences for the loser as does a sudden-death overtime in basketball. Most of our students have too much at stake to risk scholastic survival on so slim a thread as the final of these tests is likey to become. A semester's accomplishment is supposed to be determined by a total of about four hours of mind-searching and pencil-scratching. It is not enough in so important a matter . . .

Meet One-Time Athlete, Polio Victim, Today's Leader:

By Jim Wrzesinski

Campus Leader Traveled Long Road

This is the story of Frank Gunther. To begin at the beginning, let us go back to March 12, 1932, for on that day in Baltimore, Maryland, Frank Gunther made his entrance into the world. His early years were filled with the usual events experienced by preschool youngsters.

The first appearance of Gunther, the leader, came in the first grade of Cathedral Grammar School in Baltimore. There Frank had the lead in the first grade play singing "You Better Watch Out." His present version has been jazzed up a bit but still retains all the sincerity it had when he sang it then.

Competitive Spirit

All through grammer school Frank retained his position as a leader. His competitive spirit brought itself to the fore even in his neighborhood fights. In the field of sports he was captain of the baseball and football teams. When grammar school came to an end he was voted the student who did the most for Cathedral Grammar School.

Frank then entered Loyola High School. For four years he played left-halfback on his beloved football team. In his senior year his team play and leadership brought him the coveted honor of being elected co-captain. He gained a position on several All-State teams.

During his high-school football career his path crossed those of three great All-Americans, Jack Scarbath of Maryland, Tom Scott of Virginia, and Bob Williams of Notre Dame. Senior Bob Williams was the quarterback on the Loyola football team when left-half Frank Gunther was just a freshman; Tom Scott and Jack Scarbath were part of the opposition faced by Frank. In his junior year Frank journeyed to the High School Sugar Bowl in New Orleans, where a back named Joe Heaps, who later gained fame at Notre Dame, scored three touchdowns to lead Holy Cross to a win over Loyola. But Frank saved his best game for the last. In the last game of his senior year he led Loyola to a 31 to 13 rout over their arch-rival, Calvert Hall. In what was to be his last football game Frank scored the first three touchdowns.

Other Sports

But football was not the only sport which caught Frank's fancy. For two years he played guard with the varsity basketball team and also played junior varsity baseball in his sophomore year.

Despite his busy sports schedule he found time to be active in the sodality, the yearbook, and on dance committees. Leader, first and foremost, he was president of his sophomore class and president of the Glee Club in his senior year.

To Mt. St. Mary's

As high-school drew to a close offers came from several colleges. Notre Dame, Maryland, VMI, Virginia, Georgetown, Mt. St. Mary's all were possibilities. Out of all these Frank chose to go to Mt. St. Mary's. Here was a school where football was not a big business but was played merely for the sport.

John Law, the Mt. St. Mary's coach took a liking to Frank's punting and asked him to work at it during the summer. With this in mind Frank began to diligently practice his punting all day Saturday and during the evenings after working all day for his father. In one of these punting sessions on July 1st occurred the first in a series of events which was to change Frank's life. As the evening shadows lengthened and Frank stood by himself ready to lift another punt into the air, a pain shot through his side. As most of us would, Frank, immediately thought of appendicitis. But perhaps that wouldn't be so bad. Frank had heard that one usually put on weight after an appendectomy. There was still plenty of time for an operation and plenty of time to put on some extra weight for the approaching football season. That night Frank went home with mixed emotions.

On Sunday, the side continued to bother him and a doctor was called. The doctor diagnosed his illness as a cold of the kidney and told him to remain in bed that day.

On Monday, July 3rd, Frank went to the doctor's office where he was pronounced to be in perfect physical condition.

On the morning of July 5th, Frank awoke with a pain in his back. He arose and said nothing since he was to take his nephews and nieces to a fireworks display in Baltimore Stadium that evening.

It was very hot that night and Frank went to bed with the windows wide open and with a fan circulating what little cool air there was to be had.

In the morning Frank arose in a cold sweat, his head throbbing. He called his father to tell him he would not be able to go to work. The doctor was called again but this time Frank was taken to Union Memorial Hospital. That evening he was sent to City Hospital. At that time the doctors did not know what was wrong with him.

On July 6th, there was still no verdict. When Frank awoke on July 7th he could lift his left leg but couldn't bend it. Then he awoke on the 8th, he could bend his right but couldn't lift it and he couldn't move the left leg at all. That evening while reading the paper he came across headlines which paralyzed him for a moment. They read: "GUNTHER ILL WITH POLIO." That explained the agonizing silence of the doctors. Their silence was no longer necessary. When confronted with the paper, the doctors told Frank he would leave the hospital in three to four weeks. After 17 days in City Hospital he was transferred to Children's Hospital School. Here he was given a complete physical examination. His parents were told that the dreaded polio had taken practically all his back and abdominal muscles and that in all probability he would never walk again. With casts on both legs and a back brace he was placed on a hair mattress with a board placed beneath it.

Steady Recovery

By Christmas Frank had been allowed to sit in a wheel chair. In January he was making regular trips to the pool for treatments. In February he talked the therapist into letting him stand for the first time. It was a very weak and a very dizzy Frank Gunther who stood up that day, but that was a beginning, and that was all Frank needed.

Soon after this, Frank, along with another fellow and girl, all with the same affliction, made a novena to St. Francis Xavier. Their combined prayers were very effective within three weeks of the completion of the novena all three were being fitted for braces. On May 4th, Frank again emerged on top. On that day he left the hospital, on crutches, yes, but under his own power.

Frank took many memories with him when he left the hospital. Memories of the little paper they published, a paper of which he was editor. Memories of the parties and the card games and of his Methodist

OCS Applications Received:

Navy and Marine Corps Program Open To Seniors

Attractive programs of officer training and service in the Navy and Marine Corps were described last week for men graduating in June by two officers in the Villanova NROTC unit.

Applications are now being received, Lt. Valerio M. Duronio, USN,advised, from Villanova seniors who are interested in serving as commissioned officres in the Navy through the Officer Candidate School at Newport, R. I.

Looking For Ensigns

"The Navy is looking for competent young men to serve as Naval Reserve ensigns on active duty," said Lt. Duronio. Newport OCS graduates already in service in ships throughout the world and in the shore activities in the United States and abroad.

Men emerge from Newport as Ensigns after an intensive four-month training program and serve on active duty for three years. They also assume an obligation to remain an additional five years in the reserves.

Applicants must have a baccalaureate degree or must expect to receive one within four months, and must attain a passing score in the Navy Officer Qualification Test. Age limits are between 19 and 27.

Lt. Duronio urged men interested in the OCS program to contact him in Room 111, Commodore John Barry Hall, on Wednesdays from 1 to 3 p. m.

Marine OCS

Another program offered to service-minded Villanova seniors is the Marine Corps Officer Candidate Course. This provides the military training needed to qualify men for the specialized training to be received as Second Lieutenants in the Marine Corps. Conducted at Quantico, Va., it consists of an intensive 10-week course followed by commissioning and seven months in basic school.

According to Capt. Lee A. Kirstein, USMC, local Recruiting Officer, men selected for this OC course will serve as officers with a Marine Corps organization and help uphold a fine tradition of fighting men.

Eligibility requirements are similar to those of the Navy OCS program, except that the minimum age limit is 20 years.

Seniors interested in the Marine Officer Candidate course are advised to obtain further information from Capt. Kirstein in Room 111, Commodore John Barry Hall.

Belle Masque Members in Play At Immaculata

Last Thursday and Sunday the Cue and Curtain members at Immaculata and Villanova's Belle Masque Society presented "Catherine of Aragon," Immaculata's senior play.

Seven Villanova thespians were among a cast of approximately 30, as the 16th century drama bowed in the Immaculata Field House.

The play, written by Sister M. Donatus, revolved around Catherine of Aragon, played by Cecile Sullivan, an IC senior, and Henry VIII, enacted by Bill Brown, sophomore Arts.

Brown, a veteran of Belle Masque, was supported by Clem Birch, freshman arts, in the role of Thomas Cromwell, Henry's crafty statesman. Skip Killmond, a senior pre-law student, added the noteworthy part of Felipez to his experience of being no. 1 in a National Dramatic Competition at Mary Washington College in Virginia last year, "Stalag 17" and "Command Decision."

Frank Delany, a freshman, took his place in the role of Griffith, Queen Catherine's butler. Tom Keller, also a Belle Masque veteran, played the Duke of Suffolk, tool of Henry VIII. Pete Scott, junior English major, took the part of Chapuz.

Playing a dual role was Jim Campbell, who played Lord Montjoy and then the queen's doctor. He was making his debut with Belle Masque, as were Birch and Delany.

The play, which allowed for a good deal of dramatic interpretation, was well accepted by both audiences.

cated that Ryan had voluntarily taken on extra duties during his stay in the athletic secretary's office from early in 1953 until the third week in January, when he departed.

These extra duties consisted of leading the cheering at pep rallies, announcing swimming meets and waging a one-man battle to spread the "hello" habit.

Father Dundon hinted that the administration favored control of the pep rallies by students, probably seniors. He said this policy would most likely be adopted next year, since it had worked successfully in former years.

The Olympics is expected to attract thousands of school children and college students as well as the general public. Admission to the opening ceremony is by invitation only. Thereafter admission to the exhibits and all events will be free.

Faculty Wives "Come of Age;" Moderator Nixed

A meeting of the Villanova University Faculty Wives' Club was held in the Library of John Barry Hall last Thursday.

A new silver tea service was presented which had been purchased from Club funds, and a luncheon for the members was announced for May 14.

A lively discussion followed the suggestion of a request to be tendered to one of the Augustinian Fathers to become moderator of the group. Objection was made to the title of such an addition to the organization on the grounds that it was not actually a campus group and that they were mature women not in need of a "moderator". A new suggestion was made that the title be changed to that of Chaplain and the matter was shelved for future discussion.

The business part of the meeting was closed with the announcement by the president, Mrs. Joseph Grayson, that the next regular meeting would be held March 10, and the program would include a concert by the Villanova Singers and a book report to be given by Mrs. J. Stanley Morehouse.

Following the business meeting, Father John J. Coffey, O. S. A., was presented. Father Coffey gave a talk entitled "Qualities of Leadership".

The Villanova University and NROTC rifle teams are still going strong, their latest victories coming over Lafayette, Drexel, Penn and Western Maryland.

The undefeated NROTC team still tops the Philadelphia area ROTC League with seven wins.

High men have been Captain Jack Gilligan—an honorable mention selection in the national Hearst competition among NROTC units—Hank Miller and Caesar Trunzo.

Some of the Villanova shooters placed with some of the best marksmen in the East at the recent National Rifle Association competitions at West Chester.

The pistol team, although winning only three of 11 matches, is coming along well against some veteran shooters in the Delaware Valley, according to coaches.

Rifle matches coming up include Pennsylvania Military College Saturday and the Philadelphia Rifle Club Sunday.

On Jan. 13th, the General Electric Athletic Association of Philadelphia played an exhibition game with Villanova's Freshman basketball team. Door prizes were awarded to spectators, and the proceeds from the affair went toward the air conditioning of Villanova's Library.

Band, Schiller Directing, Begins Concert Season

With a spectacular debut last night at St. John's Orphanage, Villanova's Concert Band began its 1955 season.

The 40-man aggregation, armed with new arrangements, and under the leadership of Student Conductor Bob Schiller, will continue its tour with a journey to St. Joseph's School of Nursing next Monday night, Feb. 21.

Next on its 11-week schedule are concerts at the St. Agnes and Fitzgerald Mercy Schools of Nursing, Feb. 28 and Mar. 7, respectively. Concerts at Overbrook Seminary and the Misericordia School of Nursing will follow.

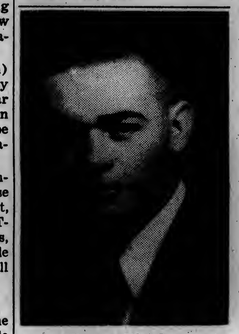
The Band has a large repertoire, including the "Student Prince" and "King and I" Overtures, "Sanctuary of the Heart," and "At the Gremlin Ball." Also listed in the program are the "Gillette Cavalcade March," "Guadalcanal March," "Funiculi-Funicula," "American Patrol," and "Stars and Stripes."

Among the soloists featured with the band will be Bob Gaudio, on the accordion, and "The Mainliners", a vocal quintet. Schiller also solos on the trumpet, and Joe Valenti sings.

As a special feature at the end of the concerts, members of the audience will be invited to lead the band in several numbers.

No sir! The Pennsylvania Railroad is not holding a convention on our fair campus! Those Casey Jones caps and red bandanas you see are being sported by one hundred new pledges to Phi Kappa Pi, Villanova's Engineering fraternity.

Their (pardon the expression) "Hell Week" began last Monday and will grind to a spectacular halt this Thursday night, when the frat's initiations are to be held "somewhere on the Villanova campus."



Meanwhile, the "Little Brothers," equalling in number those of last year's record turnout, are toting placards and T-Squares, caps and bandanas, and are expected to provide matches and cigarettes to all Phi Kappa Pi members.

Tasks Limited?

When questioned about the other duties of the "Little Brothers," Fraternity President Tom Ulrich said that a dozen pledge-masters were authorized to watch over the "Big Brothers" and their charges. Ulrich, however ,said the tasks expected from the pledges by their Big Brothers were numerous and varied (apparently limited only by state or federal law).

The pledges' newly-fashioned frat paddles will be judged at the initiations Thursday night, and prizes will be given for the most artistic. Ulrich announced that frat keys would be awarded to the senior frat members that night.

Concerning this year's initiations, Ulrich had the following comment: "The enthusiasm and spirit of the pledges as well as the fraternity members is a general indication of the brotherhood and progress which the Phi Kap is endeavoring to create among the engineering students, living up to the fraternity's motto, 'Phrata Kai Prokope.'" (Brotherhood and Progress).

Cass Issues Appeal For Hoedowners

An appeal for western musicians for his WVIL Sunday Night Hoedown was issued last week by Cass Bianowicz, producer-director of the show, which is heard weekly from 8:30 to 9.

Right now Bianowicz has two sophomore guitar players—Jack Bartlett, an engineer and Dick Costa, an education student—lined up for his hoedown.

But he wants to put on a full size band. To do so Bianowicz must have fiddle players, accordion players and steel guitar players.

The producer-director said the two guitar strummers he has now are really talented, Bartlett, according to Bianowicz, sings like Hank Snow, while Costa has his own style.

Students interested in helping add harmony to the show may report to Bianowicz (311 Fedigan) for auditions.

HAMILTON STANDARD

Division of United Aircraft Corporation will be here for

INTERVIEWS TUESDAY, MARCH 1

For 35 years the name Hamilton Standard has symbolized the world's finest aircraft propellers for both piston and turbine engines. Now it stands, too, for the finest in a growing line of jet aircraft equipment such as:

- JET FUEL CONTROLS (electronic and hydro-mechanical)
- JET TURBINE STARTERS (pneumatic and combustion)
- HYDRAULIC PUMPS (variable displacement)
- AIRCRAFT AIR CONDITIONING SYSTEMS

Many Hamilton Standard engineers have won international recognition for their contributions to aeronautical science. The same opportunities await young engineers who join our growing organization today. After a brief training and orientation program at high starting salary, you can advance steadily in one of our many fields of engineering activity—the one most suited to your desires and talents.

Our modern plant is ideally located at Bradley Field, the main air terminal, only 15 miles from both Hartford, Conn. and Springfield, Mass.

VU Alumnus Spells Harris As Placement Officer

James J. Redfern, a Villanova alumnus, has been named Placement Director. He replaces George A. Harris, who will concentrate on his position as Director of Alumni Relations.

Redfern, from Long Island, took his BS in education from Villanova in 1951. In 1954 he earned his master's degree at Boston College.

In taking over his position, Redfern emphasized that the growth of the school is mandatory for the growth of the placement department. The new placement director said he will work with Mr. Harris, who had held both positions. Harris will continue to edit the ALUMNUS magazine.

Redfern also announced that interviewing by the placement service will begin soon. Times will be posted, Redfern added.

Interested seniors were advised to watch for a regular column which will appear in the VILLANOVAN, with current placement information.

Singers Look To Heavy Spring Schedule

The Villanova Singers have intensified their practices preparatory to a heavy spring schedule. At a meeting held last Sunday it was announced that the group will offer selections at Immaculata, Chestnut Hill and Rosemont, as well as at the Senior class' Concert - Dance Feb. 25 and the Faculty Wives' meeting of Mar. 10.

Membership in the Singers has risen to 79, according to the organization's secretary, Bob Ford. "Because of the increased size of the organization we will be forced to close our doors to new members at least temporarily," Ford added.

Librarian Jack Jannucci reported that he and Dean Reuschlein, choirmaster, had purchased more sheet music and added that the supply problem would soon be resolved.

Played '51 Prom

Williams, who played for one of the University's proms in 1951, and was a very definite success, was then rated as one of the top young bands in the nation, and is now regaining that popularity. Williams has a very danceable, a smooth tempo, and a top female vocalist, according to Chairman Gehring, and Dick Harris and Dick Peer, juniors who heard the band at a Wilmington engagement.

Mike Pedicin, of course, has been a top jazz artist in the Philadelphia area for years, and is well known for several recordings. Williams will play for 45 minutes, beginning at 9, with Pedicin taking over for the 15 minute intermission session, and then Willams, and so forth, with Williams playing for the full final hour of the dance from 12 to 1.

Planning Work

Work has long since begun on planning the theme of the prom, the favors, and refreshments. Chairmen Roy Zimmerman, planning, Mario DiVincenzo and Henry Guerrisi, publicity, Nick Mazzoni, tickets, Phil Butler, decorations, and Pete Quinn, miscellaneous, met with Gehring, class moderator Father Thomas A. Calpin, O. S. A., and class officers Sunday night to further advance preparations for the May 6 affair. Juniors wishing to work on the mentioned committees should contact the chairmen concern or class officers.

Mr. Civitello, Campus Barber, Succumbs

Carmen Civitello, a familiar figure at Villanova for over two decades, was buried last Saturday morning in St. Dennis Cemetery, Oakmont and Eagle Road.

Mr. Civitello died of a heart attack Feb. 7, after working as campus barber at Villanova for 21 years. He had been ill since his first heart attack last fall.

When Mr. Civitello came to Villanova in 1934 he had already been wielding the scissors for 31 years. Until seven years ago, he ran his shop in the basement of Mendel Hall. Then, he moved into the present location.

The talkative barber took two firm stands: he claimed the students attending Villanova in the depths of the depression were more serious-minded than later crops of Villanovans. And he declared that students do not know the correct names of hair styles.

College haircut styles are about the same now as they were a generation ago, Mr. Civitello always maintained.

Bob Schafer, 25 points shy of 2,000 mark, leaps for an underhand shot vs. the Hoyas in upset over Villanova last week.

Wildcats Meet Canisius Tonight; Bids at Stake

By Bob Strayton

Al Severance's erratic Wildcats take on the cagers of Canisius tonight at the Palestra with two objects in mind: to sew up post-season tourney bids and to improve on a record hurt considerably by road losses during the past week and a half. Penn plays in the forepiece against Brown tonight; Friday night in the Palestra the Main Liners engage Lebanon Valley, with the Quakers meeting Harvard.

In the Georgetown game, played in Washington, D. C., Villanova was rudely upset, as the Hoyas, who looked as if they couldn't miss at all, completely disrupted the usually smooth - functioning Wildcat shifting zone defense.

Missett, Buehler Excel

After jumping to an early 14-2 lead, it looked as if the Wildcats were off to another easy contest, but before long, Warren Beuhler and Joe Missett, who tallied 26 and 19 points respectively for the evenings work, started hitting with sets from the outside. By halftime, Villanova was losing 34-24, and never did get back into the ball game.

In the second half, Buehler and Missett, the latter a local Malvern boy, again started scoring from the floor, but the Wildcats were able to fight to within 4 points of overtaking an unusually hot ball club, when they lost their steam, and the Hoyas won by an 84–79 count.

Dukes Win Again

Previous to their loss in Washington, Villanova's competent basketeers were the guests of Duquesne, in the Duke's home court in Pittsburgh on Monday, Feb. 7th. In a heated contest, Duquesne won, 66-58.

Villanova jumped into the lead immediately in the ball game, as their excellent zone defense completely immobilized All-Americans Dick Ricketts and Si Green. Fighting tenaciously, both teams kept the game close until the final five minutes.

Ricketts, Green As Usual

With but five minutes remaining, and Villanova in the lead, Duquesne surged into activity. Ricketts and Green scored, and with the added help of a few questionable fouls on which the Dukes capitalized, Villanova lost the lead. From that point on, Duquesne kept control of the ball and the score, and won the ball game.

The Wolfpack of North Carolina State, which had been beaten once by Villanova this season, entertained the Mainliners at Raleigh, N. C. on Sat., Jan. 29th.

Despite a 49 point effort by State's All-American center, Ron Shavlik, who also pulled down 35 rebounds, the Main Liners compiled the most points ever scored against an Everett Case-coached team, and won the game, 107-96. Before losing to Villanova, North Carolina State had been the second highest ranked team in the country. They dropped to sixth place after the loss.

N. C. State Loses Again

For the second time this year, the Severance-style zone completely baffled State's inside men. Although leading by two points at the half, the Wolfpack lead soon disintegrated as Bob Schafer, Jack Devine, Al Griffith, John Cirino, and Jimmy Smith all hit for double figures in the scoring column. Before State could regain its composure, the game was almost over, and Villanova was comfortably ahead by 11 points.

After their overwhelming victory at Raleigh, the jubilant Wildcats went up to New York, where they faced the Fordham Rams in another fine ball game.

Illness Hinders Trackmen In First '55 Competition

By Ed Shea

Villanova's outstanding track squad has continued to make headlines in the past few weeks. The names of Charley Jenkins, Ron Delaney, George Sydnor, Phil Reavis and Don Bragg are known to track fans throughout the country.

On Jan. 29 at the Boston Garden, the track squad found that theflu offered too much competition for them. Jenkins was forced to remain at home and as a result the varsity mile relay team could only place third behind Morgan State and Pittsburgh.

Reavis Shows Talent

Phil Reavis sparkled in the high jump with a leap of 6-6. Herman Wyatt set a new meet record to win the event at 6-10¼.

On Feb. 5 the team moved to Madison Square Garden in New York. It was here that Delaney met his first defeat since coming to Villanova. In the 880 event he was pitted against the Norwegian ace, Auden Boysen.

All Boysen did was set a new meet record with a blistering 1:51. Delaney finished second 15 yards back.

NYAC Meet Disappointing

This past Saturday the New York Athletic Club was host to more outstanding runners and once again Villanova ran into trouble. The long awaited meeting between Charley Jenkins and Mal Whitfield proved to be no contest. Jenkins, showing signs of his past illness, finished last as Whitfield breezed to victory in the Buermyer 500. The winning time wa 57.1 seconds.

Freshman George Sydnor looked good finishing second to Rod Richard in the 60-yard-dash. Only inches separated the two at the finish.

Don Bragg finished in a tie for fourth in the pole vault with a leap of 14 feet. As usual, Bob Richards won his specialty clearing the bar at 15-3.

A graduate of Villanova brought glory to both himself and the school by winning the Baxter Mile. This runner, of course, is Fred Dwyer. Dwyer defeated both Gunnar Neilson and Wes Santee in winning with a time of 4:6.2.

Another Chance

In the weeks ahead, Villanova's banked board aggregation faces a grueling five straight weeks of competition. Next Saturday, of course, the annual ICAAAA meet will be held, again in the Garden, but this time, only collegiate trackmen are entered.

Following the ICAAAA meet, the Wildcats display their wares in New York during the Knights of Columbus contests on March 5th. Then the Pioneer Club games occur on March 12th, also in the Garden.

Tournament Marks End of Winter Intramurals

Winter intramural activity reaches a climax this week as the round-robin tournament to determine the 1954-55 basketball championship is conducted and the annual All-Star-Freshman game takes place Thursday.

The tournament play began yesterday in the Alumni gym with nine undefeated teams competing for the basketball title. The winner will come from a group including the Vandals, Nobodys, Lungers, Baker Co. I, Charlie Co. I, Heads, Forresters, Hottrotters, Sullivan, or Wackers, each of whom either took first place honors in their league play or were tied for the lead when the season ended.

All-Stars Practicing

The intramural All-stars will be seeking to record the first All-star victory over the Freshman when the two clubs meet Thursday at 3:30 p. m. in the Field House. In the past two years the smoother teamwork of the Frosh has been the deciding factor in the triumphs by the first year men. Athletic Director Ed Geisz had been drilling his All-star members for the important game Thursday.

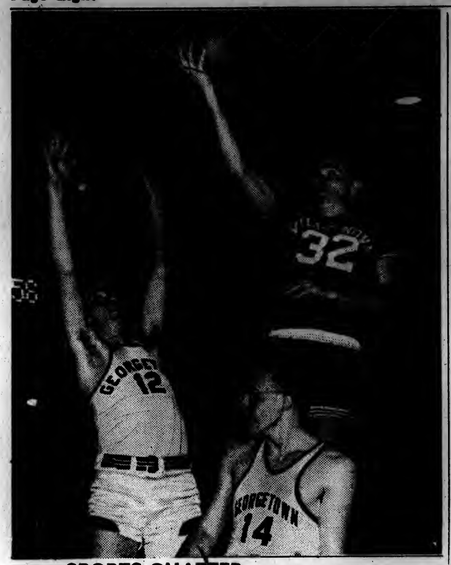
Geisz has anouced that water basketball, initiated at Villanova last year, will again be sponsored by the intramural department. Those desiring information concerning the sport should see Ed Geisz in the Intramural Office in Alumni Hall.

Michigan Mermen Display Talent At Exhibition

Michigan's Wolverines, runners-up to Ohio State in the NCAA swimming championships last year, put on a demonstration swimming meet at the Field House pool on Saturday, Feb. 5th. During the exhibition meet, in which Michigan's mermen competed against Villanova, four pool records were broken.

Performing before a large and appreciative crowd, the combination exhibit-lecture was a huge success.

Of the eight events on the day's agenda, the Wolverine team was successful in winning all eight. In an opening 800 yd. backstroke relay, a quartet of Jim Karauthers, Berwell Jones, and a twin team of Jack and Burt Wardrop posted an 8:36.7 time for the innovation. Following the backstroke exhibition, Bruce Harlan, Michigan's diving mentor, gave a lecture and demonstration of diving techniques. Harlan is a former NCAA and AAU diving champion.



4 Records Fall

Among the pool records which fell to the adept Wolverine squad were: 150 yd. individual medley, won by Fritz Meyer

Tournament Prospects

By Norm Feldpush

Ambrose "Bud" Dudley stated Monday night that Villanova is being considered for a post-season berth by both the National Invitation and the N.C.A.A. basketball tournaments. Mr. Dudley said that "feeler bids have been received, and if invitations are extended, Villanova will definitely accept. The decision as to to choice will be made by the Athletic Board."

N.C.A. Schedule

While the N.I.T. pairings have not been announced to date, the N.C.A.A. has released their Eastern schedule. A triple-header will be played in Madison Square Garden on March 8. The first game will pit the Middle Atlantic Conference representative against the Southern Conference champions. The second game will feature a member-at-large team opposing the Atlantic Coast Conference champion. Since the present A.C. Conference leader, North Carolina State, has been declared ineligible as a result of fquestionable recruiting practices, the winner will probably be determined from Duke University, Maryland, or North Carolina University. The third game on March 8 will find another member-at-large team opposing the New England champions.

The action will then shift to Penn's Palestra on March 11, with the winner of game No. 1 in New York playing the Ivy League victor, who will draw a bye in the first round. The second game of the doubleheader will feature the winners of the second and third Garden contests. The victors in Palestra play will then journey to Kansas City for final round competition.

Villanova's play this week should influence the committee's decision. Canisius, Lebanon Valley, and Duquesne are scheduled for the Palestra floor. Canisius is experiencing one of the finest seasons in the school's history. Twice this season Duquesne has ended Villanova winning streaks; an abbreviated undefeated skein of four games at the campaign's beginning, and last week a seven game victory streak. The Dukes have decisioned the Wildcats six consecutive times since the 1951-52 season, when Larry Hennessy and Co. shattered an unbeaten string at 17 in a 64-62 overtime thriller.

Wildcats In Four Tournaments

Coach Al Severance has piloted the Mainliners to four post-season tournaments. At the conclusion of the 1938-39 campaign, the Wildcats defeated Brown 42-30, but lost to Ohio State in the next round, 53-36. Villanova was defeated by Kentucky, 85-27 at the conclusion of 1948-49, despite the brilliance of Paul Arizin. The 1950-51 season saw two unsuccessful tournament engagements. A 67-62 defeat by N.C. State in the quarter final round of the N.C.A.A. playoffs was followed by a 67-65 loss to Utah in the Bradley Campus Invitation.

Villanova Wins 13th; Smashes BC at Palestra

Returning once again to their winning ways, Villanova's erratic basketball team met, and thoroughly defeated, a weak Boston College team last Saturday night. The score of the game, which was played at the Palestra, was 100-75.

From the onset, it was apparent that Villanova would have an easy night. After running up a quick 14-1 lead, with about 3 minutes gone by, coach Al Severance began to send in substitutions.

A loosely played first half was followed by an equally painless second stanza, at least as far as Villanova was concerned. Leading at times by 34 points, and with four substitions in at one time or another, the game turned into a farce.

Efficiency Vs. Lack of Same

Villanova's efficient zone, adroit ball-handling, and 48% shooting average ,as compared to an almost harmless BC effort, made the game one to be enjoyed rather than speculated upon, and by the time the game was over it was evident that the few remaining fans actually were entertained, royally at that.

The scoring, spread out as it was, nevertheless saw John Cirino collect 26 points, Bob Schafer 23, Jim Smith and Jack Weissman, 12, and Al Griffith, 10. Jack Devine, Villanova's captain, who usually hits double figures, got only four points during his exceedingly short interim of play.

Frosh Win Three

Three victories in four starts featured the play of the Villanova freshmen cage squad in the last three weeks. Only a loss to the Penn frehmen marred the record of the Wildcats; however, this was avenged in a game at the Field House last Friday.

The outstanding games by far were the two contests with Penn. The Main Liners reversed an 80-79 setback incurred just before exams by scoring a 73-69 triumph last week.

The record of the Frosh is now eight wins against four losses.

Mermen Drop 5 Straight Meets

After swimming to two victories and one tie in their first three meets of the present tank season, Villanova's mermen suddenly came to an abrupt halt, as victory is concerned, and have lost their last five meets.

Victorious over Loyola and Swarthmore in the initial two outings of the season, and tying the Blue Hens of Delaware in their third meet, it seemed as though the Wildcat swimmers might have the first winning team since the sport was re-incepted in 1953.

Couig Defeated

However, on Jan. 19th, the team went down to Hutchinson gymnasium on the Penn campus, and there lost their first meet of the current swim season to a well-balanced Red and Blue squad. Villanova was completely overwhelmed by Penn, and the score of the meet was 68-16. Even Don Couig, the sophomore workhorse of the team, couldn't win in his 150 medley specialty. As a matter of fact, Villanova was unable to win even one of the events.

Over in the Field House on Jan. 22nd, Ed Geisz' charges met the perenially fine swimming team from LaSalle College. Again it was utter defeat for the Wildcats, as they lost 53-51, before a large and partisan home crowd.

Medley Relay Wins

In that meet, Villanova was successful in winning only two of the eight scheduled events. Couig won the 150, and the four man team of Den Rinkacks, Tony Tomasulo, Bob Duffy, and Couig captured the 400 yd. medley relay.

During the inter-term recess, the mermen again met LaSalle, this time at LaSalle. And again, Villanova lost. The score was 56-28 in the lop-sided contest. Both Couig and Pat Kean, this year's team captain, performed creditably for the Wildcats.

West Chester Victor

West Chester was the scene of the fourth consecutive loss for the mermen. The score was identical to that of the second LaSalle encounter, 56-28. During that meet, Couig garnered a new West Chester pool record on the 150, with a 1:43.6 time.

Following the West Chester loss, the Villanova natators engaged in a struggle with Long Island University at the Field House, and again Villanova was unsuccessful in its attempt to regain its winning status. During this meet, Couig won the, 150 and 200 backstroke, and Don Devlin, returning to swimming for the first time this season, won the diving competition.

Michigan Mermen

of Michigan in 1:33.9 minutes; 220 yd. freestyle, by Ron Gora, Michigan, with a winning time of 2:13.1; 200 yd. breastroke, in a record time of 2:37.4 minutes by Jim Thurlow; and 400 yd. freestyle relay, won by Michigan's Mike Delaney, Laurie Thoman, Meyers, and John O'Reilly. The time for the latter event was 3:39.4.

Entertaining Exhibition

Perhaps the most interesting of the performances held at the Main Line pool was the exhibition given by Harlan. Performing with agility and ease, he enthralled spectators with a series of perfectly executed Olympic dives. The former champion highlighted his excellent performance with an interesting lecture on the why's and wherefore's necessary for outstanding performance from the springboard.

In competition thus far this season, the undefeated Wolverines have been victorious in impressive wins over Iowa State, Purdue, Army, North Carolina State, and North Carolina University.

Basketball Review

Villanova won, 79-69, and again, it was the aggressive shifting zone that told the story.

Early Lead For Ram

Fordham went into the lead, 14-4 on 6 successive set shots in the early moments of the contest. Jack Devine, however, broke the ice for Villanova when he drove in for a layup. A series of stolen balls and fast breaking lay-ups by Al Griffith, interspersed with tap shots by John Cirino, and sets by Bob Schafer, soon gave Villanova a sizable lead. Although Ed Conlin, perhaps the best player in quite a while in the New York area, was able to score 31 points, his team was completely outplayed by the fast moving Wildcats.

Only once did Fordham threaten after Villanova took over the lead, and that was when they came to within three points of the 'Cats shortly after the second half started. But Villanova pulled away, and Fordham was finished for the night.

By Bernard Coyne, Station Manager

WVIL is the most ambitious and most active extracurricular activity on the Villanova University campus. More than 100 students plus faculty members and young ladies from Rosemont and Immaculata broadcast six hours a day, Sunday through Friday, to entertain the residents. More than 60% of the program time is devoted to recorded music, popular, classical and jazz.

This is augmented by sports and news programs which emphasize the Villanova angle. One half an hour a day is devoted to live shows such as "I Doubt It," the popular quiz, rebroadcasts of basketball games, campus musical combos and panel discussions.

Progress Keynote

Progress has been the keynote of the Radio Station's policy this year. With the help of a generous allowance from Father McLaughlin, Dean of Student Activities, coaxial cable was purchased to be installed to guarantee uniform reception in every dorm. The entire station was reorganized into departments equivalent to a professional station, and responsibility delegated to those of ability.

Through the assistance of Fr. Rongione, the moderator, College Radio Corporation was contacted as National Sales representative to obtain advertisers to defray costs. Old Gold Filter Kings was acquired as a sponsor for "Dream Date" and "The Career Hour", and the money gotten from these shows was used to purchase an AP teletype for up-to-the-minute news and sports coverage.

Record Shortage

The record shortage of past years has been remedied by contacting all the record distributors in the Philadelphia area for complimentary disc jockey releases. New stationery and membership cards are indicative of the trend toward business efficiency. Turntables, microphones and a tape recorder are some of the pieces of new equipment to be purchased this semester.

The guarantee of facilities for a new station in Dougherty Hall by Fr. Curran was the paramount accomplishment of the year. This expression of confidence combined with the talents of the staff gives WVIL limitless possibilties as a source of entertainment and training in the field of communications.

Off-Campus Function

Plans are now being initiated for the first off-campus function in the history of the organization as a reward to the staff for its zealous cooperation and dedicated service.

D.P.M.

Fraternity pins wil be discussed by members of Delta Pi Mu at a meeting in C&F at 10:30 A. M. tomorrow, President John DeReinigis announces.

Setting of a program schedule for the second semester is also on the agenda.

The fraternity has been discussing the pins for several months. Owen Hickey has been making contacts with a number of jewelers in an attempt to find a pin suitable to DPM members.

A.I.E.E.-I.R.E.

Villanova's A.I.E.E.-I.R.E. society began its second semester activities last Monday night with a well attended meeting. Mr. Henry Wu and Mr. Louis Ricciuti, both Class of '52, spoke on "Electric Wave Filters." They are both presently engaged in research work for the Polyphase Corporation on close tolerance filters used in government guided missiles.

The two alumni discussed the peculiar problems they encountered in their work and how they solved them. Filter models and a transistor analyzer were used to illustrate their talk.

PHYSICS CLUB

Two lectures and a discussion of plans for the second semester will feature the Physics Club meeting at 10:30 a. m. tomorrow in the physics lab.

President Dave Vachon said the club will consider a schedule of outing and field trips for the semester, besides hearing hearing the two speakers.

Junior Charles Schwedtfager will consider "Cosmic Radiation" and Junior Tom Decker will discuss "Thermodynamic Sidelights."

Vice-President Lifts Ban On Boycotted Theatre

Villanova students may now legitimately patronize the Bryn Mawr Theater.

Rev. Edward B. McKee, O. S. A., university vice-president, announced last week that the movie house was no longer considered out of bounds to Villanova students.

The ban was imposed last May when the Goldman chain insisted on showing "Moon is Blue" despite protests by Villanova and Catholic organizations in the Main Line area.

Campus Leader

Mother's conversion to Catholicism.

But Frank now had to start a new life. He again began to think of college although those gridiron dreams were now completely shattered. Frank wanted to go away to school. The doctors wanted him to stay in Baltimore for a year to rest and then go away. Doctors or no doctors Frank wanted to finish where he started and so he is with us now. His very close friend through grammar school and high school, Mike Kelly, who had come to Villanova the year before suggested the Main Line campus to Frank.

In September, Frank arrived at Villanova, still on crutches. He remained on crutches until Christmas time and had to wear brace for most of that year. Frank still has to wear a back brace but that hardly keeps him down.

To list his accomplishments here at Villanova in detail would require the rest of this paper. Merely to mention a few he is now Senior Class Secretary, Editor-in-Chief of the Belle Air, Co-chairman of the Student Council Spirit Committee, and a member of Who's Who.

First and foremost Frank Gunther is a Catholic gentleman. His love for Villanova is shown in everything he does. Loyal, trustworthy, he is eager to help all those in need of help whether it requires long hours or grave inconveniences. Of all the titles we might tack onto Frank, gentleman, leader, scholar, etc., the title which I take most pride in is not so pretentious or so inspiring but closest to my heart—Frank Gunther, friend.

Junior Week Installment Plan Is Announced

Junior Class treasurer Jerry Guerrisi announced last night that a Junior Week ticket-installment plan will go into effect this coming Monday, in response to requests by many members of the class for a means of saving money early for the big social week.

A poll taken last semester in religion sections indicated that a goodly number of Juniors believed that they could make out better financially if some sort of prior-payment plan were effected. Guerrisi, acting on this opinion, has set up a plan that will follow these lines:

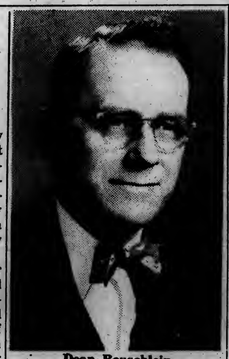
Religion Sections

1. One member of each Junior religion section will be available before and after every religion class to collect money from Juniors wishing to benefit from the plan.

2. When money is deposited, the student must make it clear which event of the three in question—Mother's Day ($9.50), Prom ($6.00) or Dinner Dance ($10),—he is paying for, and he must complete payment in full on any separate event to be entitled to a reserved ticket.

3. If a Junior wants to put money down on, for example, the Dinner Dance and the Prom in that order of preference, and deposits $13, he has reserved the Dinner Dance ticket for $10 and has $3.00 down toward the $6.00 necessary to insure him the prom ticket.

4. If, however, Junior does not complete full payment on any given event ticket, he will be refunded his money upon request; but once a ticket has been paid for entirely, the money, of course, will not be refunded.



5. The installment plan will close two weeks prior to Junior Week, on Monday, April 18.

6. The religion section collectors will turn over any money received plus bookkeeping on such intakes every two weeks to treasurer Guerrisi.

Sales Monday

7. Any Juniors who do not presently have religion courses should see Guerrisi on the second floor of Sullivan Hall if they wish to take advantage of the system. Naturally, those Juniors wishing to buy tickets in the usual fashion may do so also beginning Monday, from class officers, ticket head Nick Mazzoni, or any of his committee men, a list of whom will be

Sing Saturday Evening

This Saturday, for the first time, choral groups from Villanova and the University of Pennsylvania will combine at a between-games program at the Palestra. Harold Gill Reuschlein, choirmaster of the Villanova Singers, announced that an invitation had been tendered by the director of Penn's Glee Club, Dr. James Bambury, and that his group had accepted.

This is another and important step toward bettering relations between the two Universities, it was emphasized. Earlier in the academc year it was announced that there would be inter-school competition in basketball next season.

Alma Maters

Four songs will be heard at the Palestra. Pennsylvania's group will sing the Alma Maters of Pennsylvania and of Columbia University, its opponent in basketball that evening, the Villanova Singers will sing Dean Reuschlen's own arrangement of the Villanova Alma Mater, and the two groups will combine to sing "Halls of Ivy."

The Singers will make their first appearance this semester when they sing at the Senior Concert and Dance Friday night. At this function the organization will offer: "Adoramus Te," "O Bone Jesu," "Beautiful Saviour," "Prayer of Thanksgiving," "Brahms' Lullaby," "The Winter Song," "Calm as the Night," "The Drinking Song," "Eight Bells," and "Halls of Ivy."

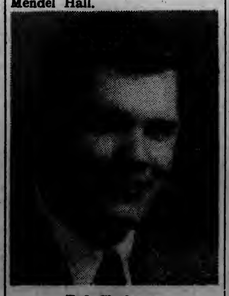
Sr. Concert - Dance Friday

The Senior Concert and Dance, featuring the singing of the Villanova Singers and the music of Bob Schiller's Villanovans, is scheduled for this Friday night. The concert will begin at 9 p. m. and will last a little over an hour. Then the floor will be cleared and dancing will begin, lasting until 1 a. m.



The Villanova Singers are beginning Friday night their second semester schedule of concerts. Previously they have sung at the Faculty Dinner in December, as well as at nightly chapel exercises.

The Villanovans, revamped this year under Schiller's direction, are fresh from a successful performance at the NFCCS Mardi Gras Dance held a month ago. They have played at neighboring colleges at other times earlier in the year.

Tickets for the affair are $1 a person. Even more important than the entertainment or the price is the cause, it was stated. Because the Senior Prom and Dinner Dance were not successful, this affair was necessitated. Unless it is successful, the certainty of a Father's Day for this year is questionable.

A great portion of the debt has already been realized in ticket sales. The important phase of the project is still to come. The returns of the next several days will determine whether the debt is cancelled.

All those seniors who have not yet picked up their three tickets, and any other students interested in purchasing tickets, may do so by contacting Bud Ford (240 Sullivan Hall), Jim Wrzesinski (Simpson Hall), or Ted Clarkson. Returns can also be made to any of these three or at the information desk in Mendel Hall.

"One of the area's best-informed experts on Nazi Germany will speak at the International Relations Society's February meeting this Thursday night," announced Ed Daly, Activities Director. Dr. Fritz Nova, Associate Professor of History at the University, will speak on his former homeland in a speech entitled "The Rise of Nazi Germany."

Difficulties Overcome

Pat Kean, Publicity Director of the Society, which also brought Mr. Nigel Nicolson, M. P., to campus in October for an excellent talk on Anglo-American relations, said that "we are very pleased with being able to secure Dr. Nova as a speaker. Difficulties in schedules prevented us from arranging an earlier date for the talk."

Delta Pi Mu Arts fraternity will participate in the meeting which is scheduled to be held in room 201 of the Commerce and Finance building at 7:15 p. m. on the 24th.

"Asked To Leave"

Dr. Nova was "asked to leave" Nazi Germany in the late '30's as a result of his attitude toward the regime which had entrenched itself in his native land. He then fled to Fascist Italy where he continued his studies and developed an abiding affection for the Italian people. His affection did not extend to the ruling class however, and once more he was forced to move.

He came to the United States and once again took up his studies, this time at Haverford College. He wrote his Ph.D. thesis on a subject closely paralleling that of his forthcoming speech.

At Nuremberg Trials

Dr. Nova learned more of his former country's rulers when he served as an interpreter for the preliminary investigations prior to the Nuremberg War Crimes Trials. In this he acquired a clear picture of the collapse of their power.

Plans Set For March 11 Shamokinaki

It was three years ago that a group of Villanova alumni got together and mapped out plans for a dance to benefit an Augustinian who had once instructed them at Villanova, and who was then laboring in the Japanese missions.

Those alumni followed through after their energetic start and turned over the proceeds to Rev. Thomas Purcell, working in the Nagasaki mission.

Unique Name

The unique name of the dance — Shamokanaki — came about when those alumni were organizing the first dance, Rev. Edwin T. Grimes, O. S. A., the dance moderator, said last week.

Because Father Purcell had always been proud of his Shamokin, Pa. homeplace, Shamokin Dance was suggested. Later, one of the alumni added the Japanese ending.

Now, witn present Villanova students doing the planning and preliminary work, the dance committee is entertaining enthusiastic ideas—to sell 1000 tickets to the affair March 11 in the Field House.

His very close friend through grammar school and high school, Mike Kelly, who had come to Villanova the year before suggested the Main Line campus to Frank.

In September, Frank arrived at Villanova, still on crutches. He remained on crutches until Christmas time and had to wear brace for most of that year. Frank still has to wear a back brace but that hardly keeps him down.

To list his accomplishments here at Villanova in detail would require the rest of this paper. Merely to mention a few he is now Senior Class Secretary, Editor-in-Chief of the Belle Air, Co-chairman of the Student Council Spirit Committee, and a member of Who's Who.

First and foremost Frank Gunther is a Catholic gentleman. His love for Villanova is shown in everything he does. Loyal, trustworthy, he is eager to help all those in need of help whether it requires long hours or grave inconveniences. Merit in Lent

Once again Lent is upon us. For the next few weeks, we shall be faced with the problem of how much to eat or drink, whether or not to do various things that bring us enjoyment, and whether or not to do various good works we do not normally perform.

It is too easy to look upon Lent as just some sort of custom that is left over from the Middle Ages. Many Catholics who hold this theory of Lent feel that the observance of Lenten penance by such modern individuals as themselves is just too much to expect. These individuals seem to forget there is a quotation of Christ's in the Bible about doing penance or else perishing.

Probaby there are very few here at Villanova so ignorant of their religion as to deny the necessity of penance. There are many, however, who hold the amount of penance they perform down to a bare minimum. They are willing to go without one or two things they really don't want and to eat a little less food, but they don't believe in doing anything that really hurts.

What they forget is that Lent is not intended to be merely an obligation to do some form of penance. Lent is also intended to be an opportunity for the Catholic to obtain graces in larger quantities than he does during the remainder of the year.

To achieve this purpose, it is not enough merely to go through the form of going without some pleasure. It is far more important to do something in a positive sense, to perform some meritorious act. Of all acts we can perform during Lent to gain grace, one stands above all others—the daily reception of Holy Communion. The Catholic who receives his Savior at Mass every morning during Lent is making the best possible Lent. We trust that as many Villanovans as can possibly do so will be at the altar rail every morning during the Lenten season.

Common Courtesy

The present method of restricting campus parking is extremely effective ,and the addition of "Leary Hall" to the campus is, in our opinion, a very welcome thing.

Now the parking situation has been rectified, but unfortunately the administration cannot force thoughtless and inconsiderate people to obey normal rules of parking-lot procedure in the areas across Lancaster Pike.

We don't mean to restrict our argument to that species somewhat derisively labeled "day hops," since in this instance the resident students are playing just as big a role.

From the appearance of the parking lots, its would seem that the student applies his emergency brake upon reaching the entrance, leaves his vehicle before it comes to a stop and scampers off to class without a backward glance. In one instance, a resident student's black, Cadillac convertible had been blocking a lot driveway for three solid days.

Our urgent request is that you think of others when you use the University facilities. Parking space is being severely curtailed, and maneuvering in them is ofttimes impossible because some drivers fail to consider other people when they leave their automobiles.

Two Inherent Weaknesses Cause French Instability

By Ed Daly

Events in France since the fall of the Mendes-France regime have centered American attention on the instability of French governments. For the twenty-first time since the war, the world has had the spectacle of a France without a cabinet, a France whose politicians bicker and intrigue while important international negotiations wait their pleasure.

What's The Answer?

Why is France so often paralyzed by cabinet crises and political intrigues? Is France merely a corrupt third-rate power unwilling to clean up its own political mess? The answers to these questions are vitally important, for France is the keystone of the American defense structure in Europe.

To begin with, cabinet crises are nothing new in French political history. Ever since the turn of the century, French cabinets have come and gone in a steady procession. In spite of this, France was still strong enough to make a magnificent showing in 1914.

Many years have passed since the First World War, of course. During that time French political factionalism has weakened France as a Power to the extent that the government has become virtually impotent when faced with major issues. Reform projects of French governments in recent years have almost always meant the collapse of the cabinet.

Several Reasons

A number of factors are responsible for the weakness of French governments. First of all, there is the number of parties. This problem would probably not be so serious were it not for the fact that French legislators are elected under a very complicated proportional voting scheme, which in effect favors small splinter groups rather than broad parties of the American type.

The result of the system is that cabinets must always be based on coalitions rather than on single parties. When the government attempts to sponsor a measure opposed by one of the several parties in its coalition, that party may withdraw its support and thus cause a crisis The moral of that is that the government which is to survive must do as little as possible.

Another cause of trouble is the comparative lack of responsibility to the voters on the part of the French legislators. Since the voters choose a party list rather than a candidate, the winner owes his election to the party which designated him rather than to his constituents. Therefore, if he wishes to be continued in office, he must vote as his party bids.

As a result of the fact that these weaknesses lie in the French constitution and that their removal would require constitutional amendments, a process that would require overwhelming majorities in the French legislature, something hard enough to obtain on everyday issues and virtually impossible to secure on an issue that would stir up as much opposition from the professional politicians as this would.

After all, men do not sign away their livelihood.

Change Unlikely

It is therefore safe to expect that there will be no change in the French political picture. One French government will continue to succeed another at about the same rate at which cabinets have been changing for the last fifty-odd years. Stability in French cabinets does not seem to be among the prospects of the next few years.

It is also safe to predict that major reforms will continue to be rare. Governments will probably continue to apply the principle that government is best which accomplishes the least. Unsolved problems, such the demand for more autonomy for Tunisia and Morocco, the need for modernizing France's ancient rent laws, and the raising of civil servants' pay will probably still go unsolved. Whether the question of implementing German rearmament will also lie on the table remains to be seen. At any rate, French cabinet crises will probably continue to slow down the speed of Western defense preparations.

Decide What Counts . . .

By Mark McCormick

A group that has been with man through his history has never before flourished to the extent that it is now. This is that group composed of men who have adopted a common bond of belief in a compound of selfishness and cynicism.

"Live with a single selfishness." After all, every man must fend for himself in this wilderness that we have discovered life to be. "Adopt a hard shell of cynicism." After all, the motives of men aren't to be trusted now that we know what scoundrels they have proved themselves to be. Of course, we all know that the worst of evils is gullibility, and so we must take no chances.

He that believes in humanity is bound to meet with disillusionment. So, we must believe only in ourselves, live for ourselves, and take our chances on what comes after life. We must surely know by now that idealists, optimists, men with faith and hope, are doomed to disappointment; sooner or later in this life we know that they are spat upon.

Cult of Debunkers

Therefore let us join the league of debunkers, remove ourselves from humanity and refuse to believe in anything beyond our own egos. This is the new and enlightened skepticism, a top contender among modern ideologies. And it is an easy, popular path to follow.

There is an alternative course that may be followed, that a considerable number of men have staked their lives on. It considers in the humble catholic Christian belief. This group teaches that the proper belief for man consists in following two basic directives, which they assert are of devine origin:

1. Love the Lord thy God with thy whole heart and thy whole soul.
2. Love they neighbor as thyself.

Whether foolishly or not, they assert that faith can work wonders, that good works, performed in divine the light of these commands, are the proper and necessary action of man. They contend that faith and good works are the means to survival and endless joy.

They contend that the "new skepticism" is symptomatic of spiritual disease, which for its followers can only lead to spiritual suicide, perdition.

Strictly Opinion . . .

Glancing through the 1954-55 catalogue the other day, I happened to run across a list of the faculty members and the colleges they had attended. This list was thoroughly impressive, since it included some of the finest schools in the world. Our neighboring institutions, St. Joseph's, LaSalle, Drexel, Temple and Pennsylvania are all well represented. Moving farther afield, members of our faculty have studied at Dartmouth, Harvard, Marquette, Princeton, Notre Dame, Cornell, Duquesne, and Penn State. Still others have attended such well known colleges as Haverford, Rensselaer, Catholic University, Augustinian College, Illinois, Northwestern, University of Chicago, New York University, City College of New York, Indiana, Boston College, Wisconsin and Fordham.

And More

Continuing down the list we find Michigan State, St. Bonaventure's, Brooklyn Polytechnic Institute, Columbia, Michigan, Georgetown, Delaware, Naval Academy, Cincinnati, Rutgers, Middlebury, Missouri, DePaul, Hunter, M. I. T., Carnegie Tech and Texas. This is an imposing list.

There are also many foreign schools to be added to this brilliant array: Oxford University, University of Munich, University of Greifswald Warsaw Tech; London University, the College of St. Monica, University of Fribourg, Universite de Grenoble, University of Montreal, the Gregorian University, University of Wurzburg, University of Zurich, University of Berlin, University of Toronto, Royal University of Milan, and the University of Montpelier.

And One Other

One school not mentioned above but fairly well-known nevertheless is Villanova. During the semester holiday I had occasion to visit the West Coast cities of Seattle, Tacoma, Sacramento ,and San Francisco. The name and fine reputation of Villanova have spread to all the schools in this area. Truthfully, if I had said that I was from Princeton, Notre Dame, Yale of Harvard, I couldn't have been received any more cordially nor with more respect. It was a great feeling to be able to say that I was a Villanovan.

Following the Rumanian armistice Dr. Parvalescu became officially attached to the Royal Rumanian foreign in Cairo. Here he was in charge of the Rumanian Legation and other property in Egypt. This lasted until the communists took over the government, whereupon he resigned.

Then To Paris

After his resignation he went to Paris for research work, followed by teaching in South Africa, and lecturing at the University of California at Berkeley. In September, 1951, Dr. Parvalescu began a three-year stint as the entire physics department at Bard College.

Dr. Parvalescu joined the Villanova faculty in September of 1954.

By now he had gained practical familiarity with widely variant educatonal systems. Moreover, from his capable pen had come such papers as, "The Mathematical Theory of Knowledge and Behavior," "Brass, Electronic and Otherwise," and "The Anatomy and Physiology of Fact." Today the Doctor is working on two books, one philosophical and the other physical in nature.

Dr. Parvalescu

In answer to the question, "Why did you come to Villanova?" the Doctor explained that he wanted to be part of a bigger department and to teach larger classes. Bard works on what amounts to the time-consuming tutorial system in its advanced physics courses. Moreover, in a larger department there is a greater opportunity for the free interchange of ideas necessary to the continued development of the scientific mind.

And now that he is here, how does Dr. Parvalescu like Villanova? Let him tell us in his own words.

"After the interlude of individualized education at Bard, it is refreshing to return to more formalized education."

What, then, of the students?

Look At Trees . . .

"Villanova students are, generally speaking, very conscientious. Perhaps that blinds them a little to the forest of knowledge by focusing too much attention on the trees of daily, routine assignments. Too, they've shown juvenile traits which run counter to one's idea of college students."

Teaching, for Dr. Parvalescu, is that process by which one leads the horse to water—and then makes him want to drink. That is the key to his highly successful method may be seen from his reply to the question, "Why do you enjoy teaching?"

"I hate ignorance; I see its bad consequences everywhere. I see the thirst for answers of all kinds in all kinds of people. I do not have the answers, but I think I can show people how to find them. That is usually called teaching. So I teach. I would do that even if I were a truck driver, bricklayer or farmer."

It's highway robbery!

For sheer fun out on the road, Chevrolet's stealing the thunder from the high-priced cars!

Up to this year, maybe there were reasons for wanting one of the higher-priced cars. If you demanded something really special in the way of driving fun, you simply had to pay a premium to get it.

Not any more! The Motoramic Chevrolet has changed all that. Who could wish for more excitement than the new 162-h.p. "Turbo-Fire V8" delivers? (For those who do, 180-h.p. is optional at extra cost in all V8 models.) Chevrolet also offers the two highest powered sixes in its field.

Come in and see how the Motoramic Chevrolet is stealing the thunder from the high-priced cars!

Career Advice for Seniors:

Some 80 Guests Attend Annual Job Conference

The annual Career Conference was held for Villanova seniors last Thursday in C & F Auditorium.

Very Rev. James A. Donnellon, O. S. A., Villanova president, opened the conference with a speech of welcome to the guests and students present.

Fr. Klekotka Presides

Rev. John A. Klekotka, O. S. A., chairman, explained the meaning of "The Interview" and then the panel proceeded by explaining different phases of the topic.

Mr. Glenn Petty, of Lybrand, Ross Bros., and Montgomery, pointed out in his speech "Preparation for the Interview" the proper manner to undertake such an affair.

Keen interest was shown when Mr. J. Edward Murphy, of Bell Telephone Co. of Pennsylvania, spoke on "What Does the Employer Look for in the Interview."

The last speaker, Mr. R. B. Easley, of Proctor and Gamble, discussed "What Information Should the Student Expect from the Interview."

Guests Present

Over 80 guests were present to answer questions from the audience. The guests represented professions, business and other occupations.

In the afternoon a luncheon was given for the guests who gave their services to help the future Villanova alumni. Rev. Francis X. McGuire, O. S. A., director of Villanova's development program, addressed the group on "The Role of Business in Developing Higher Education."

The outcome of the conference was a huge success, according to James J. Redfern, newly named placement director. He thanked all persons who helped put on the conference.

CURRICULUM STUDY

Villanova Chapter of the American Association of University Professors will initiate, at a meeting Feb. 25, a series of discussions intended to promote interest in and development of curriculum matters here at Villanova.

These meetings, the outcome of more than a year of planning, have as their goal the formulation and presentation of a model liberal arts curriculum for a college facing the same problems as Villanopa.

Committee Established

In accordance with these general aims, a curriculum committee has been established under the chairmanship of Professor Thomas J. O'Toole of the Villanova Law School. Several working committees covering the various disciplines within the liberal arts have been formed or are in the process of formation. The study has received the encouragement of Father Donnellon, Father Dwyer, and Father Sullivan, and the support of the entire faculty is expected.

The forthcoming meeting of the Chapter will take the form of a critical evaluation of recently revised curricula of several American institutions of higher learning, including Harvard, Notre Dame, Carnegie Institute and Manhattan College. Preliminary reports of the various sub-committees engaged in the study of the liberal arts curriculum will be stressed at subsequent meetings.

Phi Kappa Pi Welcomes Some 85 Frosh Pledges

Amid the smell of instant shaving cream and the clatter of paddles, 85 pledges were initiated into the Phi Kappa Pi last Thursday night.

The "little brothers" of the engineering fraternity began their "ordeal by the paddle" at 7:30 when they were led blindfolded, parading, stumbling, and finally crawling, from the basement of the C&F building to the bowels of Mendel Hall.

In Mendel Hall the proceedings reached their hectic climax, but by midnight had culminated in the admittance of the 85 supplicants into the fraternity.

Frat President Tom Ulrich characterized the session as "very effective." No comment was available from the pledges.

ACADEMY APPOINTEE

A Villanova sophomore has been named the principal appointee from Michigan to the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis.

He's Bill Brown, a social science major, from Ypsilanti, Mich.

Brown, who admitted he was enthusiastic over the appointment, said only the physical and aptitude tests stand in his way.

NROTC Regular

The oldest child in a family of four, Brown explained that he came to Villanova on a regular NROTC scholarship.

After spit shining shoes and standing watch with Annapolis midshipmen during a cruise through Spain and France, Brown said he decided to try for an appointment to the Naval Academy.

If he passes the two remaining tests, Brown will report to Annapolis in June.

Veterans, Two Newcomers In "Harvey" Production

Nine veteran players plus two promising newcomers to collegiate theatrics virtually assures the success of Belle Masque's spring offering, "Harvey", on March 23, 24, 25, and 26 in the Field House.

Each male part is covered by a boy who played a leading role in a former Belle Masque production. The female lead, Jean Ward, had four years experience with the "Jest and Gesture" dramatic society at Rosemont College, finally serving as President of the organization.

Starring roles are in the capable hands of Bernie Coyne, Drew Higgins, Jean Ward, Bob Erskine, Priscilla O'Connor, and Cecilia Gleason.

Here is a list of the cast and their accomplishments:

Elwood Doud .. Bernie Coyne: fourth year in Belle Masque and his seventh starring role.
Wilson ..... Jim Borden: appeared in "Stalag 17" and "Command Decision"
Judge Gaffney .. Jack Reardon: newest Belle Marque star, remembered for lead in "Command Decision"
Sanderson .... Drew Higgins; wins his third lead in his third attempt.
Dr. Chumley ... Bob Erskine; in his fourth starring role.
Lofgren ..... Mike Clark; third Belle Masque appearance; appeared in "Stalag 17."
Vita Louise ..... Jean Ward, a second year student in Villanova's Law School; apeared in previus years with Belle Masque.
Ruth Kelly . Priscilla O'Connor; freshman nursing coed at Villanova; considered a talented newcomer.
Aunt Ethel . Maryleyn Dondero, a freshman nursing coed.
Mrytle May .. Cecilia Gleason, of Rosemont; experience in Jest and Gesture Rosemon's dramatic society.
Betty Chumley ... Ann Kaler, of Rosemont.
Rev. William Krupa, O. S. A., the show's director, is assisted by Charlie Brockman, who held an important role in "Command Decision."

LENTEN RULES

Rev. Joseph W. Kemme, O. S. A., Chaplain of the University, has announced the Lenten Regulations binding all Villanova University students:

1. The law of fasting regulates the quantity of food.
2. The law of abstinence prohibits or limits the use of meat on certain days.
3. For Students:
   A. Those engaged in exhausting mental work may eat three full meals a day, including meat.
   B. Those same students must observe the law of complete abstinence from meat on Ash Wednesday (Feb. 23), Holy Saturday (until noon) and all Fridays.
   C. Those students must also observe the laws of partial abstinence (meat at principal meal only) on Ember Wesnesday, Mar. 2, and Ember Saturday, March. 5.
   D. On - campus resident students have been dispensed from fasting by the Prior to Villanova.
4. Those who are excused from fasting or abstinence, or both, should practice some other form of mortification.
5. Remember the purpose of Lent: self discipline and union with Christ.

Names of nominated freshmen who will be in the running for two Student Council seats in next week's election will be announced this week.

Frank Licopoli, chairman of the Student Council elections committee, reminded freshman that they should look for the list on the Mendel bulletin board.

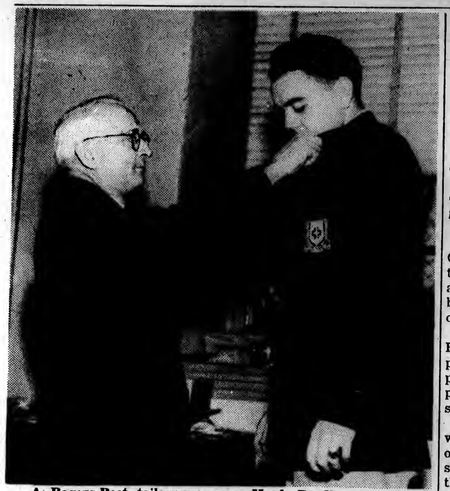
Twenty-Four Named

Twenty-four freshmen — 11 day hops and 13 residents— were nominated at the class' first meeting held in Alumni Gym.

One day hop and one resident will be selected by freshmen in the election, which will be held next week, according to Licopoli.

Three Way Check

Nominees were screened by the dean's office ,the registrar's office and the chaplain's office. They were checked for scholastic standing, chapel attendance and discipline.



Rev. George McLaughlin, O. S. A., Dean of Student Activities, explained to the assembled freshmen the requirements for candidates.

Following is the list of nominees submitted to the threefold screening: Day hops: William Bodo, David Ogle, Edward Sherlock, from C & F;

Martin Doheny, Eugene Fogarty, Philip O'Neill, Vincent Pongia, from Engineering; John Fisher, Martin Roache, from Arts; Richard Hamburger and Joel Stein, Pre-Med.

Ticket sales in the normal manner outside of the installment plan will continue right up until the night of the affair, except in the case of the Dinner Dance tickets, the sale of which will end along with the installment system on Monday, April 18. This is due to the problems brought about by table arrangements and accomodation factors.

New Intercollegiate Variety Show Set At Immaculata

The first annual intercollegiate variety show ever held in the Philadelphia area will make its premiere at Immaculata Colege on March 13 at 8 p. m.

Sponsored by the Philadelphia Region of the National Federation of Catholic College Students, it is being directed by Jim Michener, Regional Treasurer.

Will Tour Campuses

The preliminary plans were inaugurated at a regional meeting held at Immaculata early this year. Following opening night, the show will tour as many campuses in this area as possible.

Each of the participating schools — Villanova, Rosemont, Manor, Immaculata, LaSalle, Chestnut Hill, Gwynedd Mercy and St. Joseph's—will contribute one or more acts "This will assure the audience of a great aggregation of talent," the regional treasurer stated.

Of the many groups which tried out at Villanova prior to the semester examinations, three acts have been selected to represent Villanova.

John Giordano, Ed Murphy and Jack Erdln are the three Villanovans who will appear in the show. Giordano, who played varsity football, has made some vocal arrangements. Ed Murphy, a seasoned master of ceremonies, made over 1100 recordings for the armed forces, and comedian Erdlen is no newcomer to Philadelphia. He has worked night clubs in Philadelphia and resorts in the Poconos.

Guest Star Scheduled

Attempts are now being made to have a well known guest star appear with the show. The acts will be arranged so as to work into a smooth running, varied program.

Campus President of NFCCS, Jim Rath, told the VILLANOVAN, "the variety show will not appear at Villanova this year due to lack of space". Father McLaughlin has explained that the Field House is completely scheduled for activities with no open dates existing. It is hoped that Rosemont will be able to fit the show into its activity schedule. Negotiations are in process at the present time to acquire facilities at Rosemont. However, nothing is definite at this time.

will probably take place some time this week. It will mark the third consecutive year that NFCCS has contributed funds to Father Purcell.

An additional $100 from the NFCCS treasury will be donated later in the year. The recipient has not been annouced at this time.

Second-Year Law Cagers Down Colleagues

A closing spurt of points by the oncoming First-Year law students was not quite enough to overtake the tiring Second-Year hoopsters in a basketball game in Alumni gym. Feb. 2. The Second-Year team won, 58-56.

Frank O'Hara, captain of last year's N.C.A.A. champs, La-Salle, scored ten straight points in the last few minutes for the First-Year but it wasn't enough, as the early lead piled up by the Second-Year proved enough to win.

Led by Leo Gribbin's 17 points, the Second-Year jumped off to a 20-6 lead and maintained at least a ten-point margin until the final minutes. Dan McCormick was outstanding for the victors, with Walt Furman their leading rebounder. O'Hara led the losers with 15 points, followed by Joe McCloskey with 11 and Jack Gaffney with 9.

The win was the second victory this year for the Second-Year, who won the annual football game also, 21-0. A softball game will be played in the spring.

Pete Alberse, Mario DiVincenzo (co-chairman), Jack Lawder, and Henry Guerrisi, (co-chairman), l-r, discuss ambitious plans for publicizing Junior Week projects.

And there are visible accomplishments to show that the Augustinians in the Nagasaki missons have been making headway. They have already built a monastery and a children's clinic. A church will be completed by Easter, Father Grimes said.

Incidentally, Father Purcell was the first priest to teach at the University of Nagasaki, according to Father Grimes.

In the same year that the Shamokanaki bowed, Father Purcell was dispatched to the Nagasaki Missions by the late Very Rev. Joseph Dougherty, O. S. A. Native Bishop Paul Yamaguchi of Nagasaki had asked Father Dougherty to send Augustinians to continue the work of their Spanish predecessors.

These Augustinians from Manila had founded the mission in the sixteenth century. After immediate prosperity in numbers of converts, the mission was destroyed when the government wiped out Christianity.

Strong Foundation

But the mission had such a strong foundation that when missionaries returned three centuries later they found the people had maintained their faith without the help of priests. The priests were amazed, Father Grimes said, when the citizens asked them if they obeyed the "great white father in Rome," said the Rosary to Our Lady and assumed vows of celibacy.

and what was the Catholic Church's position during Hitler's rise and fall are just two of the questions Dr. Nova will answer this Thursday," said Daly.

It was also announced by Vice President Don McGahan that plans for the March meeting of the Society include a debate between the Villanova and Drexel debating teams on the subject of admitting Communist China to the U. N. McGahan also said that "all men desirous of joining the Society, particularly freshmen and sophomores, will be welcomed at the February meeting."

Dr. Reuschlein has increased rehearsals in order to insure that the performances will be of a high standard. Once solely devoted to sacred music, the Singers now have a repertoire well balanced with church hymns and secular music.

Lockheed representatives will be on campus Wednesday, February 23, 1955 to discuss how the company's diversified development program can advance your career

Thirteen commercial and military models of aircraft are in production at Lockheed.

Development projects are even more diversified, include jet and turbo-prop transports, advanced versions of vertical rising aircraft, fighters and bombers far exceeding present-day planes in performance, radar search planes, nuclear applications to aircraft and a number of significant classified activities.

This capacity to develop and produce such a wide range of aircraft is important to career conscious engineers. It means more scope for your ability, more opportunity for promotion with so many projects in motion. It means more security—because your career is not restricted to one type of plane.

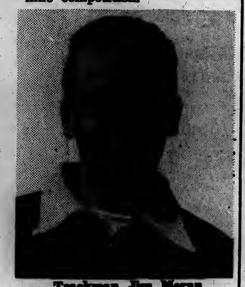
Villanova Accepts NCAA Tournament Offer
Track Team Prepares For IC4A Competition



Jenkins Wins in AAU 600; Delaney Fourth at Garden

Last Saturday, as on many Saturdays previous, Villanova's track team travelled up to Madison Square Garden and there competed in the AAU meet. Against the very best competition in the country, the Wildcat banked-board squad again showed creditably, but not quite as every Villanova fan desired.

Charlie Jenkins, who is still weak from the flu, made a surprising comeback after the New York Athletic Club meet, in which he ran a dismal last place, and outdistanced the Armed Forces Lou Jones, and Joe Gaffney, the ex-Villanova sprinter, in the 600 yd. event, Charlie's specialty.

Relay Team Gets Third

The mile relay team once again lost to the crack batonmen of Morgan State, and this week the erratic relay team was able to place third. Behind Morgan State, for second place honors, was St. John's University, a surprising entrant into the mile competition.

Trackman Jim Moran

Ron Delany, Villanova's import from Ireland, still seems to be suffering from some strange malady, which is preventing him from showing his worth in the recent meets. Delany placed fourth in the 1000 yd. distance. Winning the event was Arnold Sowell, the versatile Pittsburgh star, who tied the world indoor and championship records with his 2:08.2 mark for the distance.

The Wildcats Don Bragg, the sophomore pole-vaulter, was in a three way tie for pole-vault honors by getting up to a height of 14'6". Per usual, the Rev. Bob Richards, won the pole-vault. Richards shattered Cornelius Warmerdam's old championship mark of 15 feet, 3⅞ inches by climbing to the world's record height of 15'4".

IC4A Important To Team

On Saturday, the Villanova track team will meet only collegiate competition, for the first time this year, when they participate in the IC4A games, which are also being held in the Garden.

The fact that only college students will be entered in the meet gives the Wildcats a chance to show exactly what talent they do have, and is probably the most important meet which the team, as a team, has run thus far in the indoor season.

Surprise Starters Griffith, Weissman Prove Ability

One of the biggest surprises which Villanova basketball fans were given this year was the appearance of two sophomore on the starting five. Pre-season speculation as to whom Al Severance would choose for his first team included almost everyone except Allen Griffith and Jack Weissman.

These two, who this season have been indispensable to Villanova's fast-moving shifting zone defense, last year were the sparkplugs of the Freshman team during the second half of the competition.

Led Team Competently

When Jimmy Smith became eligible for varsity competition last year, the gap that he left on the Frosh team seemed a definite handicap to the club. That is where agile Allen Griffith came in. He took over where Smitty had left off, and did a startling job of commandeering the team.

This season however, Griff was considered a black horse for a starting berth, mainly because of his lack of height. But the game little 6'1" speedster had other ideas. During the pre-season practice sessions, Al would entirely disrupt the starting team's strategem by outrebounding the big men, breaking up their plays with seemingly miraculous interceptions, and by taking unerring one hand jump shots from anywhere around the foul circle. With all this abundant energizing, it wasn't long before Severance realized exactly what was happening ,and, much to both Al's satisfaction, Griff found himself on the starting five.

Received Two MVP Awards

The unassuming 19 year-old got his initial basketball experience while playing for his home town high school in Hollidaysburg, Pa. His efforts on the upstate hardwoods did not go unrewarded, though, and Al garnered the Most Valuable Player Award in the Mountain "Y" League, and also the MVP award in the "Y"-sponsored tournament. Aside from his basketball endeavors, Griff also was a member of the Hollidaysburg High baseball team.

After graduation, the C and F Marketing major laughingly plans on spending his first two years in the inevitable Army. Although not quite sure exactly what he wants to do, Al is at present playing around with the idea of opening a sports shop of his own when he does settle down.

26 Against N. C. State

But basketball is his main ambition now, and it is the big thing on Griff's mind at the present. His competence as a "chaser" in Villanova's befuddling zone defense becomes more apparent with every game, while at the same time his points are also coming at critical stages in the game. The single-game high for Griff this year was when he tallied 26 points against Ron Shavlik and his fellow giants from N. C. State in a game which Villanova won, 107-96, at Raleigh.

Another well-known figure in Villanova's basketball regime is the aforementioned Jack Weissman, another talented soph. While he was a freshman, Jack gained a name and a trademark for himself by developing a deadly push shot. But he too was overlooked in pre-season prognostications for a starting role.

Like his teammate Griffith, "Wonder" was not the type to let such things as a first team berth slide by the boards. So he set about to get positioned on the starting five, which, very conveniently, he succeeded in doing.

Averaging Nine Per Game

His 9 point per contest average and his seven rebounds a game have meant a lot to the team, and have substantiated the wise choice which Severance made in selecting Jack for a starter.

The local Yeadon youth was one of the outstanding Philadelphia- and-vicinity ballplayers during his senior year, and came to the attention of the public by his exceptional performances in high school competition at the Palestra, when he was a member of the Yeadon five. At present, Jack is enrolled in the C and F school.

SchaferNeeds23;Duquesne, Canisius Losses Mar Record

Under pressure from the NCAA to improve its record for the post - season tournament competition ahead, Villanova's basketball team has to face the conclusion of the season's regular schedule against three upset-minded Eastern foes. Muhlenburg, Le Moyne, and Seton Hall are the three final games which Villanova must play this week.

Tonight, in the second half of the double-header at the Palestra, the Wildcats will face Muhlenburg's Mules, one of the more potent quintets in the Middle Atlantic Conference.

Trouble With Rebounds

Led by six-six sophomore Dennis Roth, who is currently averaging well over 50 per-cent of his shots, and Vince Osadchy, also a soph, the Allentown invaders of Philadelphia will be out to avenge their earlier Palestra loss against Penn in December.

Playing a rugged 25 games schedule against such standouts as LaSalle, Penn, Temple, Seton Hall, and St. Joseph's, the Mules have performed quite well, and have received much admiration for their tough encounters. St. Joseph's, a local team which has proved itself to be a black horse victor more than once this season, was swamped by Muhlenburg, 92-80.

Le Moyne's Dolphins will meet Villanova on Saturday, Feb. 28, in a game also scheduled to be played at the Palestra.

Thus far this season, LeMoyne has met some of the best competition in the country. Among their adversaries this year were Niagara, Western Kentucky, Manhattan, and St. Bonaventure.

Scoring Threat Inminent

At least, however, it will be an evenly matched game as far as height goes. Dick Kenyon, a 6'3" junior is Le Moyne's rebounding ace and the tallest man on the team. The lethal New Yorker is averaging 18 points a game, and scored 41 markers against St. Joseph's this year.

Bob Dietz, another veteran junior, and also 6'3", shares the scoring honors for the Dolphins with Kenyon. At present he is maintaining 12.4 average. Outside shooting will be done by Patsy Leo.

Little need be said about the Orange Pirates. Monday night, at Seton Hall, Villanova will meet a team which previously this year lost to the 'Cats by five points in an overtime period.

Spectators will remember Dick Gaines, the six-foot sophomore, who performs in the same way as does All-American Si Green, and who makes it a point to steal passes, out-rebound taller ballplayers, and score consistently.

Marty Farrell, also a soph, has been instrumental in helping the Pirates achieve such a fine record this year. Farrell, along with Setonia's big man, Ed Chesney, who stands 6'9", will be working to control the boards.

Villanova's basketball team was honored last week when the National Collegiate Athletic Association offered the Wildcats a berth in the rugged NCAA-sponsored post-season tournament. The offer was accepted last Saturday by Rev. Edward B. McKee, O. S. A., the Moderator of Athletics.

The initial offer of a tournament position came early last week, but its acceptance was delayed until last week's basketball games were played.

Lebanon Valley Sole Win

In the three games played last week, Villanova was able to win only one, against Lebanon Valley, by the score of 86-65. Losses to Canisius, on Wednesday night, and Duquesne, on Saturday night, were the fare of the Wildcats in the other two encounters.

Under tension from the NCAA's decision to hold the bid pending, the Main Liners went into the Palestra on Wednesday night with the hopes of adding another victory to their record, but were soundly defeated by the Buffaloans. The score was 86-63, with Canisius, also an NCAA team-at-large, on the winning end of the count.

In the opening moments of the game, the Wildcats jumped to a quick eight point advantage, but the taller Canisius team soon took command of the backboards, and Villanova could do little after that. They threatened mildly shortly before the end of the first half, but from then on Canisus kept control.

The Lebanon Valley game was a heartening victory for the Wildcats. Bobby Schafer contributed 25 points to the game, and to his ever-growing total, which is just short of the 2000 point mark. The inconsistent 'Cats looked amazingly like one of the nation's best as they handed a 21 point defeat to their ten-year rival.

Three Straight to Dukes

For the third straight time this year, the Iron Dukes from Duquesne once again put the losing hex on the Wildcats, this time by a 15 point margin. As in the two games previous, the game followed the same pattern. The Dukes were trailing by three points at halftime. Within five minutes after the second half started, the combination of Si Green and Dick Ricketts had put Duquesne 5 points in front. Villanova never caught up, and the Dukes won, 70-55.

Bob Schafer, Villanova's high-scoring Senior, scored 14, 23, and 25 points in each of the games respectively, to boost his four year total to 1977. It seems safe to say that within the next week the Blonde Bomber will join the handful of elite already claiming the 2000 point total.

Indoor Track Season

By Joe Heaps

Generally speaking, track is a most unrewarding sport. Fan interest in the sport is meager. Attendance at dual meets is sparse. Competitors receive more encouragment from their teammates than from the spectators. The personal satisfaction of track men for a good performance is seldom supplemented by outside recognition.

Successful Season

For a brief two months of the year, though, this is all changed. During the indoor winter season, track receives its share of publicity and headlines. Arenas throughout the nation are the scenes of colorful meets, featuring the best of the runners, jumpers, and vaulters. Spectator interest is high. Newspapers are full of track-results, predictions, speculations.

For Villanova this has been the most successful winter season in its history. The names of Jenkins, Delaney, Reavis, Sydnor, Bragg, Moran, Maliff, Petersen, and Ligorelli have appeared in newspapers throughout the country for their achievements in the past five weeks. Their feats have solidified Villanova as one of the top powers in collegiate track.

Villanova's mile-relay team

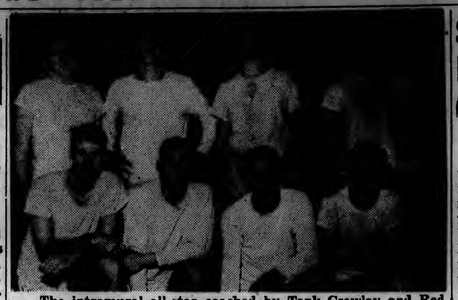
Yet, despite the headlines, despite the glamour, despite the recognition, most of the track men still prefer running in the spring. The reason is simply that they believe they run better outdoors.

Bad Weather

Because of the severe winter, practice has proved to be a stumbling block. The practice sessions have had to be shortened and almost every runner has contacted the virus in some degree or another.

Coach Jim Elliott, who has felt more like a doctor than a track coach for the past month, laments the misfortune of illness overcoming some of his boys. "In many sports a slightly weakened player can perform without anyone noticing his drop in effectiveness, but weakness of a track man who is not in best health will be revealed easily by a check of his times," states the coach.

Delaney Speaks



Ron Delaney, who has excelled this winter in his 100 yard specialty, says, "It's been difficult to get into proper shape on the outdoor track. The bad weather has cut down practice and has made it hard to get a continuous week's workout." Ronnie prefers running in the spring and is looking forward to going home in June to participate in the Irish track season.

Pole-vaulter Don Bragg, who is one of the men plagued by the grippe, is also looking forward to warmer weather when conditions will be more favorable for practice.

Both Charlie Jenkins, ace quarter-miler, and George Sydnor, the Freshman dash star, have felt the effects of the virus. Always a short-distance man, George will switch to the quarter this spring to prepare himself for future relay teams. He, too, will be glad when warmer weather arrives.

IC4A Meet

Another important meet for the team is scheduled for Saturday night, when the IC4A's are run in Madison Square Garden. Captain Jim Moran, who has turned in consistently fine efforts in his leg of the mile relay team, is optmistic on the team's chances in the big meet.

All-Stars, Freshman Clash

The Intramural All-Star—Villanova Frosh basketball game scheduled for last Thursday was postponed, and has been tentatively re-scheduled for this Friday. Coaches Dave Crowley and Red Thornton have guided the team through three weeks of practice in preparation for the annual clash. The starting team will be selected from the following players: Bob Bishop, Jim Brady, Dick Cahill, Joe Donnelly, John Kiernan, Tom Meaney, Gene McDonnell, Pat Nicholson, Frank Perna, Frank Power, Joe Saldutti, Dave Sansone, Bill Sutcliffe, and Ed Zipf.

Seven leagues will participate in the playoff tournament, which will begin Mar. 7 under the direction of Jim Moran, the basketball commissioner. Most of the teams have two regular season games remaining.

In the 5:30 Navy League, the Wheels were defeated by Charlie Co. II, 45-41. McCormick paced the losers with 5-4-14, while Prestwick was high for the victors with 6-2-14. The 6:30 League saw the Heads defeat Rolling Rocks 53-45, despite Boylan's 7-1-15 and Vaughn's 7-0-14 for the losers.

4:30 Afternoon League

Recent action in the 4:30 Afternoon League featured the Toads 40-35 win over the Delta Timers. Sproul paced the Toads with 7-1-15.

The Travelers overcame Koestler's 15 point to defeat the Sharpies 31-26.

8:30 Evening League

In the 8:30 Evening League, Oop-Shoops downed the Bearcats 41-38, as Restivo excelled for the winners with 16-2-34. Bellhops, paced by Gary's 10-5-25, defeated the Bearcats 54-38. Crow and Mulroy, with 17 and 15 respectively, paced the Bearcats. The Hawks outscored Delurey Scientists 66-49. Nicholson, 11-6-28, and Fitzgerald, 11-0-22 led the winners in the scoring column. Powerful Sullivan also nipped Delurey Scientists 55-51, as Joe Donnelly sparkled with 7-4-18.

Water basketball reappears on the intramural scene Feb. 28. The entry deadline will be Feb. 25. Twenty-four ten-man teams are expected to enter the competition, won last year by Fedigan.

Weight-lifting and wrestling will continue in the Field House every afternoon afternoon under the direction of coaches Otis Douglas and Ed Geisz.

Swimmers Excel In Victories Over Drexel, PMC

By Bill Brown

On second thought, maybe this swimming team will set a record. Of course, it won't be in the books—there is no section which accounts for spirit. With victories last week over P.M.C. and Drexel, the Villanovans showed a comeback which is a will-o'-the-wisp to people in other sports.

Beat P. M. C.

Last Wednesday, the Villanovans drowned P. M. C. by 54-30. Don Couig, Lee Sykes, and Dick Harris took the 300 yard medley relay with a time of 3:21. The 220 yard freestyle was won by Jim Donnelly in 2:44. Captain Pat Kean, winner of the 100 yard freestyle, climbed out of the pool after swimming for 1:01.2.

The Cadets outswam the Villanovans on two occasions: the 440 freestyle and the 440 freestyle relay. However, Lee Carson, Wally Ulrich, Paul Donahue and Denny Rinkacs scored victories respectively in the 200 backstroke, diving, 200 breaststroke and the 50 freestyle events.

The Drexel Dragons hosted Villanova on Saturday. The guests were slightly more than ungrateful and again swam away with seven of the nine events.

Couig Sets Mark

This meet saw Don Couig break a Villanova record for the 400 freestyle which was formerly held by Bill Quinn. Couig's time was 5:45..6. Lee Carson fished his way to victory in the 200 backstroke. Lee accomplished this feat in 2:55.9. Carson teamed with Sykes and Harris to win the 300 medley relay in 3:33.

A Drexel combination of Hayes, Vollrath, Norris, and Harris defeated the Villanovans in the 400 freestyle relay. Drexel's Norris was also winner of the diving events.

Duffy, Couig Double Winners

Bob Duffy was a double winner with victories in the 60 freestyle (:31.7) and the 100 freestyle (:59). Don Couig took his second victory of the battle in the 150 individual medley (1:26.8). In his accustomed spot as winner of the 200 breakststroke was Paul Donahue. Paul was first in 2:59. Jim Donnelly stopped the watches after 2.39.4 had elapsed in the 200 freestyle.

Frosh Win; 35 For Kelly

By Bob Mulcahy

One victory in four starts was all the Villanova Kittens could salvage in their court activity last week.

The defeat of Brown Prep was the only bright spot in an otherwise disappointing week as the Frosh dropped games to St. Joseph's College Frosh, Stevens Trade, and the champs of the Industrial League, General Electric.

In conquering Brown the 'Cats jumped out to an early lead and were never headed. After holding a 41-34 half-time advantage the Kittens, led by Captain Jack Kelly and newcomer Jim Muldoon, continued their assult on the hoop and ran up a 78-60 lead with eight minutes left to play. However, here their offense sputtered momentarily, and the prepsters creeped to within eight points 80-72, but Villanova again found the range and pulled away winning 98-87. Kelly wound up with 35 points, a season's high for the Freshmen, while Buddy Houck led the visitors attack with 40 points.

Steven's Trade Nip Kitten

In another high scoring fray the Kittens went down to a 90-88 defeat at the hands of Stevens Trade out at Lancaster. Although the Frosh outscored home forfces in field goals 37-28, they lost the game at the charity strip.

The very poor officiating, which actually resulted in the loss, is illustrated by the fact that only 14 fouls were called against Stevens while they went to the foul line 53 times, converting 34 of them.

DiFronzo Gets 17

Villanova led most of the way until Stevens tied it up 78 all, early in the fourth quarter. From there on it no more than two points separated the teams. The scoring for the 'Cats was fairly evenly divided with Ralph DiFronzo leading the way with 17 points.

Almost as disheartening was the loss to St. Joseph's. The game was tight all the way with neither club ever possessing more than a five point lead.

See-Saw Battle

Three times St. Joe's tied the score in the second half, and each time Villanova went ahead on baskets by either Kelly, Tom Brennan or Frank Singsheim. But the Hawks were not to be denied, and finally a hook shot by substituting Johnny Rotz put them ahead 47-46, a lead they never relinquished.

A late drive by the Kittens fell short as the Hawks won 58-54.

A 63-56 loss to G. E. in a sloppily played game brought the season's record for the Kittens to 9-6 as again a late rally fell short.

The Featured Campus Activity of the Week:

The Villanova Middie: He's Tops

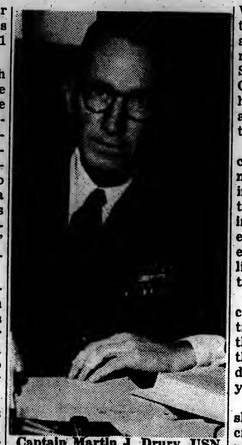
What with superior grades, rifle and drill teams, the local NROTC man is a good one

IF THE 280 midshipmen, eight officers, and six enlisted men of the Villanova NROTC Unit wanted to pat themselves on the back, they could cite an imposing list of commendations:

The Navy Bureau of Personnel consistently rates the unit at the top, or very near the top, in scholastic and military achievements comparing it to 51 such units in the United States.

No other unit can claim a finer base of operation; Commodore John Barry Hall is the Nation's most up-to-date and best equipped NROTC armory and classroom building.

Villanova midshipmen on summer training cruises have compiled a fine record of officer-like conduct and high aptitude for the naval servce.



The highly-touted volunteer fancy drill team, undefeated in four years of competition, has won permanent possession of the Fourth Naval District Fancy Drill Championship.

And the unit rifle team, recently elevated to the University's varsity, this year placed second in the Hearst national trophy match, and last year won 97% of its matches. This season it has posted a 12 and 1 record.

But in spite of such high praise, most of the men of the unit claim that something more lies behind Villanova's prominence. They agree with a grizzled, colorful Marine master sergeant now serving as an assistant instructor. According to John E. Waryha, the Villanova unit is distinctive because it has always supplied a proportionately large number of "hard core" men, devoted service-minded officers.

Villanova, then, is amply fulfilling her part of the mission of the Naval Reserve Officers Training Corps, the Holloway Plan, to provide the Navy with regular and Reserve officers to supplement those graduated by the Naval Academy.

The program, which consists of weekly drills, various Naval Science courses, and summer cruises, enables the Villanova midshipman to be well grounded in such nautical fields as navigation, ordnance and gunnery, leadership and marine engineering.

Captain Martin J. Drury, USN

The courses, as almost every midshipman will admit, are difficult, and competition is keen to maintain high class rankings in subject work and aptitude. When he receives his diploma, the successful NROTC man is appointed to the commissioned rank of Ensign in the Navy or Second Lieutenant in the Marine Corps. With the acceptance of his commission, the officer then agrees to serve three years in the fleet or in the corps.

The candidates for regular commissions are chosen through nation-wide competitive examinations held during the fall of the year preceding entrance into college. "Regular" students receive a Navy-subsidized education, following, with some limitations, the curriculum of their choice.

In the past four years, midshipman summer training cruises have taken Villanova men to England, Ireland, Norway, France, Spain, Portugal, Holland, Brazil, Cuba, and Canada. Regulars participate in 8-week cruises during their three summers in college; contracts are required to participate in one summer cruise before their senior year.

On their second cruise, regulars receive aviation and amphibious indoctrination at Corpus Christi, Texas and Little Creek, Virginia, respectively. In the summer preceding the senior year, midshipmen are entrusted with responsibilities as first-classmen.

Professor of Naval Science of the local unit is Captain Martin J. Drury, U.S.N., an Academy graduate who succeeded Captain James R. McCormick, U.S.N. in 1952. He heads a faculty of eight officer-instructors. One Marine officer, Captain Lee A. Kirstein, U.S.M.C., specializes in the teaching of Marine Science.

The elan of the unit is healthy; Barry Hall, dedicated by then-Secretary of Defense Louis A. Johnson on June 4, 1949, is alive with activity. In addition to the drill and rifle teams, the unit sponsors a pistol team and has just completed organizing a Quarterdeck Society for midshipman battalion officers. Two unit dances and two parades annually round out the life of the midshipman at Villanova.

Indoor Track Season

By Joe Heaps

Generally speaking, track is a most unrewarding sport. Fan interest in the sport is meager. Attendance at dual meets is sparse. Competitors receive more encouragment from their teammates than from the spectators. The personal satisfaction of track men for a good performance is seldom supplemented by outside recognition.

Successful Season

For a brief two months of the year, though, this is all changed. During the indoor winter season, track receives its share of publicity and headlines. Arenas throughout the nation are the scenes of colorful meets, featuring the best of the runners, jumpers, and vaulters. Spectator interest is high. Newspapers are full of track-results, predictions, speculations.

For Villanova this has been the most successful winter season in its history. The names of Jenkins, Delaney, Reavis, Sydnor, Bragg, Moran, Maliff, Petersen, and Ligorelli have appeared in newspapers throughout the country for their achievements in the past five weeks. Their feats have solidified Villanova as one of the top powers in collegiate track.

Villanova's mile-relay team

Yet, despite the headlines, despite the glamour, despite the recognition, most of the track men still prefer running in the spring. The reason is simply that they believe they run better outdoors.

Bad Weather

Because of the severe winter, practice has proved to be a stumbling block. The practice sessions have had to be shortened and almost every runner has contacted the virus in some degree or another.

Coach Jim Elliott, who has felt more like a doctor than a track coach for the past month, laments the misfortune of illness overcoming some of his boys. "In many sports a slightly weakened player can perform without anyone noticing his drop in effectiveness, but weakness of a track man who is not in best health will be revealed easily by a check of his times," states the coach.

Delaney Speaks

Ron Delaney, who has excelled this winter in his 100 yard specialty, says, "It's been difficult to get into proper shape on the outdoor track. The bad weather has cut down practice and has made it hard to get a continuous week's workout." Ronnie prefers running in the spring and is looking forward to going home in June to participate in the Irish track season.

Pole-vaulter Don Bragg, who is one of the men plagued by the grippe, is also looking forward to warmer weather when conditions will be more favorable for practice.

Both Charlie Jenkins, ace quarter-miler, and George Sydnor, the Freshman dash star, have felt the effects of the virus. Always a short-distance man, George will switch to the quarter this spring to prepare himself for future relay teams. He, too, will be glad when warmer weather arrives.

IC4A Meet

Another important meet for the team is scheduled for Saturday night, when the IC4A's are run in Madison Square Garden. Captain Jim Moran, who has turned in consistently fine efforts in his leg of the mile relay team, is optmistic on the team's chances in the big meet.

All-Stars, Freshman Clash

The Intramural All-Star—Villanova Frosh basketball game scheduled for last Thursday was postponed, and has been tentatively re-scheduled for this Friday. Coaches Dave Crowley and Red Thornton have guided the team through three weeks of practice in preparation for the annual clash. The starting team will be selected from the following players: Bob Bishop, Jim Brady, Dick Cahill, Joe Donnelly, John Kiernan, Tom Meaney, Gene McDonnell, Pat Nicholson, Frank Perna, Frank Power, Joe Saldutti, Dave Sansone, Bill Sutcliffe, and Ed Zipf.

Seven leagues will participate in the playoff tournament, which will begin Mar. 7 under the direction of Jim Moran, the basketball commissioner. Most of the teams have two regular season games remaining.

In the 5:30 Navy League, the Wheels were defeated by Charlie Co. II, 45-41. McCormick paced the losers with 5-4-14, while Prestwick was high for the victors with 6-2-14. The 6:30 League saw the Heads defeat Rolling Rocks 53-45, despite Boylan's 7-1-15 and Vaughn's 7-0-14 for the losers.

4:30 Afternoon League

Recent action in the 4:30 Afternoon League featured the Toads 40-35 win over the Delta Timers. Sproul paced the Toads with 7-1-15.

The Travelers overcame Koestler's 15 point to defeat the Sharpies 31-26.

8:30 Evening League

In the 8:30 Evening League, Oop-Shoops downed the Bearcats 41-38, as Restivo excelled for the winners with 16-2-34. Bellhops, paced by Gary's 10-5-25, defeated the Bearcats 54-38. Crow and Mulroy, with 17 and 15 respectively, paced the Bearcats. The Hawks outscored Delurey Scientists 66-49. Nicholson, 11-6-28, and Fitzgerald, 11-0-22 led the winners in the scoring column. Powerful Sullivan also nipped Delurey Scientists 55-51, as Joe Donnelly sparkled with 7-4-18.

Water basketball reappears on the intramural scene Feb. 28. The entry deadline will be Feb. 25. Twenty-four ten-man teams are expected to enter the competition, won last year by Fedigan.

Weight-lifting and wrestling will continue in the Field House every afternoon afternoon under the direction of coaches Otis Douglas and Ed Geisz.

Swimmers Excel In Victories Over Drexel, PMC

By Bill Brown

On second thought, maybe this swimming team will set a record. Of course, it won't be in the books—there is no section which accounts for spirit. With victories last week over P.M.C. and Drexel, the Villanovans showed a comeback which is a will-o'-the-wisp to people in other sports.

Beat P. M. C.

Last Wednesday, the Villanovans drowned P. M. C. by 54-30. Don Couig, Lee Sykes, and Dick Harris took the 300 yard medley relay with a time of 3:21. The 220 yard freestyle was won by Jim Donnelly in 2:44. Captain Pat Kean, winner of the 100 yard freestyle, climbed out of the pool after swimming for 1:01.2.

The Cadets outswam the Villanovans on two occasions: the 440 freestyle and the 440 freestyle relay. However, Lee Carson, Wally Ulrich, Paul Donahue and Denny Rinkacs scored victories respectively in the 200 backstroke, diving, 200 breaststroke ,and the 50 freestyle events.

The Drexel Dragons hosted Villanova on Saturday. The guests were slightly more than ungrateful and again swam away with seven of the nine events.

Couig Sets Mark

This meet saw Don Couig break a Villanova record for the 400 freestyle which was formerly held by Bill Quinn. Couig's time was 5:45..6. Lee Carson fished his way to victory in the 200 backstroke. Lee accomplished this feat in 2:55.9. Carson teamed with Sykes and Harris to win the 300 medley relay in 3:33.

A Drexel combination of Hayes, Vollrath, Norris, and Harris defeated the Villanovans in the 400 freestyle relay. Drexel's Norris was also winner of the diving events.

Duffy, Couig Double Winners

Bob Duffy was a double winner with victories in the 60 freestyle (:31.7) and the 100 freestyle (:59). Don Couig took his second victory of the battle in the 150 individual medley (1:26.8). In his accustomed spot as winner of the 200 breakststroke was Paul Donahue. Paul was first in 2:59. Jim Donnelly stopped the watches after 2.39.4 had elapsed in the 200 freestyle.

Frosh Win; 35 For Kelly

By Bob Mulcahy

One victory in four starts was all the Villanova Kittens could salvage in their court activity last week.

The defeat of Brown Prep was the only bright spot in an otherwise disappointing week as the Frosh dropped games to St. Joseph's College Frosh, Stevens Trade, and the champs of the Industrial League, General Electric.

In conquering Brown the 'Cats jumped out to an early lead and were never headed. After holding a 41-34 half-time advantage the Kittens, led by Captain Jack Kelly and newcomer Jim Muldoon, continued their assult on the hoop and ran up a 78-60 lead with eight minutes left to play. However, here their offense sputtered momentarily, and the prepsters creeped to within eight points 80-72, but Villanova again found the range and pulled away winning 98-87. Kelly wound up with 35 points, a season's high for the Freshmen, while Buddy Houck led the visitors attack with 40 points.

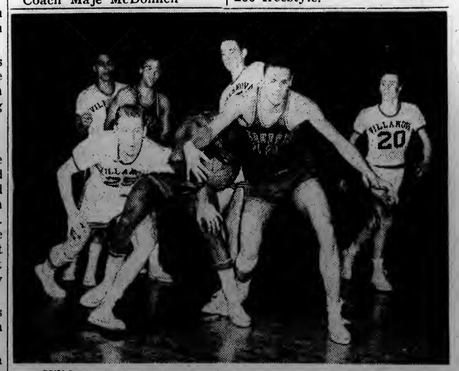
Steven's Trade Nip Kitten

In another high scoring fray the Kittens went down to a 90-88 defeat at the hands of Stevens Trade out at Lancaster. Although the Frosh outscored home forfces in field goals 37-28, they lost the game at the charity strip.

The very poor officiating, which actually resulted in the loss, is illustrated by the fact that only 14 fouls were called against Stevens while they went to the foul line 53 times, converting 34 of them.

DiFronzo Gets 17

Villanova led most of the way until Stevens tied it up 78 all, early in the fourth quarter. From there on it no more than two points separated the teams. The scoring for the 'Cats was fairly evenly divided with Ralph DiFronzo leading the way with 17 points.

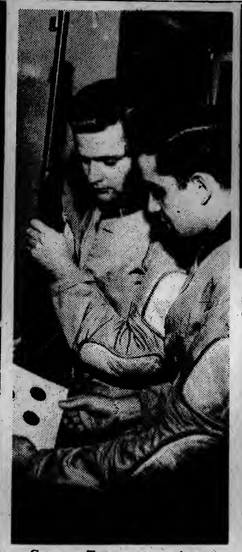


Almost as disheartening was the loss to St. Joseph's. The game was tight all the way with neither club ever possessing more than a five point lead.

See-Saw Battle

Three times St. Joe's tied the score in the second half, and each time Villanova went ahead on baskets by either Kelly, Tom Brennan or Frank Singsheim. But the Hawks were not to be denied, and finally a hook shot by substituting Johnny Rotz put them ahead 47-46, a lead they never relinquished.

A late drive by the Kittens fell short as the Hawks won 58-54.



A 63-56 loss to G. E. in a sloppily played game brought the season's record for the Kittens to 9-6 as again a late rally fell short.

Wildcat Bob Schafer grimaces as he wrestles with Duquesne's Si Green and Dick Ricketts for possession of ball in 70-55 loss to Dukes at Laletra Saturday night. John Cirino, Dave Rickett, Jack Devine and Alex Griffith are in the background.

The Featured Campus Activity of the Week:

The Villanova Middie: He's Tops

What with superior grades, rifle and drill teams, the local NROTC man is a good one

IF THE 280 midshipmen, eight officers, and six enlisted men of the Villanova NROTC Unit wanted to pat themselves on the back, they could cite an imposing list of commendations:

The Navy Bureau of Personnel consistently rates the unit at the top, or very near the top, in scholastic and military achievements comparing it to 51 such units in the United States.

No other unit can claim a finer base of operation; Commodore John Barry Hall is the Nation's most up-to-date and best equipped NROTC armory and classroom building.

Villanova midshipmen on summer training cruises have compiled a fine record of officer-like conduct and high aptitude for the naval servce.

The highly-touted volunteer fancy drill team, undefeated in four years of competition, has won permanent possession of the Fourth Naval District Fancy Drill Championship.

And the unit rifle team, recently elevated to the University's varsity, this year placed second in the Hearst national trophy match, and last year won 97% of its matches. This season it has posted a 12 and 1 record.

But in spite of such high praise, most of the men of the unit claim that something more lies behind Villanova's prominence. They agree with a grizzled, colorful Marine master sergeant now serving as an assistant instructor. According to John E. Waryha, the Villanova unit is distinctive because it has always supplied a proportionately large number of "hard core" men, devoted service-minded officers.

Villanova, then, is amply fulfilling her part of the mission of the Naval Reserve Officers Training Corps, the Holloway Plan, to provide the Navy with regular and Reserve officers to supplement those graduated by the Naval Academy.

The program, which consists of weekly drills, various Naval Science courses, and summer cruises, enables the Villanova midshipman to be well grounded in such nautical fields as navigation, ordnance and gunnery, leadership and marine engineering.

Captain Martin J. Drury, USN

The courses, as almost every midshipman will admit, are difficult, and competition is keen to maintain high class rankings in subject work and aptitude. When he receives his diploma, the successful NROTC man is appointed to the commissioned rank of Ensign in the Navy or Second Lieutenant in the Marine Corps. With the acceptance of his commission, the officer then agrees to serve three years in the fleet or in the corps.

The candidates for regular commissions are chosen through nation-wide competitive examinations held during the fall of the year preceding entrance into college. "Regular" students receive a Navy-subsidized education, following, with some limitations, the curriculum of their choice.

In the past four years, midshipman summer training cruises have taken Villanova men to England, Ireland, Norway, France, Spain, Portugal, Holland, Brazil, Cuba, and Canada. Regulars participate in 8-week cruises during their three summers in college; contracts are required to participate in one summer cruise before their senior year.

On their second cruise, regulars receive aviation and amphibious indoctrination at Corpus Christi, Texas and Little Creek, Virginia, respectively. In the summer preceding the senior year, midshipmen are entrusted with responsibilities as first-classmen.

Professor of Naval Science of the local unit is Captain Martin J. Drury, U.S.N., an Academy graduate who succeeded Captain James R. McCormick, U.S.N. in 1952. He heads a faculty of eight officer-instructors. One Marine officer, Captain. Lee A. Kirstein, U.S.M.C., specializes in the teaching of Marine Science.

The elan of the unit is healthy; Barry Hall, dedicated by then-Secretary of Defense Louis A. Johnson on June 4, 1949, is alive with activity. In addition to the drill and rifle teams, the unit sponsors a pistol team and has just completed organizing a Quarterdeck Society for midshipman battalion officers. Two unit dances and two parades annually round out the life of the midshipman at Villanova.

TALKS CANCELLED

Pre - Cana marriage talks, usually held on the four successive Sundays in Lent, have been cancelled for this year, announced Rev. Joseph W. Kemme, O. S. A., University Chaplain, and Rev. Robert Regan, O. S. A., moderator of the talks.

reason for the cancellation: Seniors have most of the material in their courses; many resident students find difficulty in bringing their engaged or near-engaged to the talks; Pre-Cana lectures have developed rapidly on the parochial level in Philadelphia.

The Chaplain emphasized that this was not the end of the series, but that they would be resumed "when sufficient" need is discovered and sufficient interest reawakened, probably in the Spring of 1956."

A.I.E.E.-I.R.E.

A.I.E.E.-I.R.E. held its initial second semester field trip to the R.C.A. plant at Camden, N. J., last Wednesday, Feb. 16. The 50-man group which journeyed to Camden was taken on a tour of the new "Bizmac" electronic busines machine installation, color correcting equipment for magazine lilustratons, and the Standards Dvision where RCA products are tested and placed under rigorous conditions of temperature, humidity, and vibration.

Accompanying the students on the tour were the Rev. John A. Klekotka, O. S. A., head of the E. E. department, Professor B. Clothier, and Mr. Raymond Adams.

CHEMICAL SOCIETY

At its last meeting, the Villanova Chemical Society heard Mr. Larry Beltz, of the Foote Mineral Company, discuss the topic "Zirconium". Mr. Beltz, a graduate of Villanova, class of '43, traced the history and uses of Zirconium up to the present time. He pointed out the fact that the element was originally used in vacuum tubes to aid in producing a high vacuum.

He went on to say that it has been used in atomic fission work. By a series of diagrams and sketches, he illustrated the two methods of liberating the element from its ore, namely the Crowl and Iodine methods. Mr. Beltz also demonstrated the extreme sensitivity of Zirconium powder with static electricity. The meeting was concluded with a question-answer period.

John Gilligan, president of the Villanova Society, pointed out that students do not have to be chemistry majors to join. The only qualification is that they have an interest in chemistry.

DPE ELECTION

Lou Donatelli, a pre-law C&F junior, was elected treasurer of Delta Pi Epsilon Fraternity at a meeting last Thursday night.

Donatelli, from St. John's High School in Washington, D. C., replaced Senior Bill Cunningham, who resigned because of the press of added responsibilities in Belle Masque. Cunningham is Belle Masque president.

During the meeting members received fraternity mugs, which were ordered earlier in the semester.

President Bruce Stark urged more members to attend the fraternity's next meeting, scheduled for March 1 at 7:15 p. m. in C & F Auditorium.

Villanova's Student Council will meet today at 7:15 p. m. in C & F Auditorium.

Chairman Dick Winfield said the meeting scheduled for last Thursday was postponed because of the Career Conference for seniors held that day.

PHYSICS CLUB

Discussion of a lecture by Cardinal Newman on the importance of science, and election of a Student Council representative will take place during the weekly meeting of the Physics Lab tomorrow at 10:30 a. m. in the Physics Lab.

President Dave Vachon extended to liberal arts students a special invitation to attend the meeting and join the discussion of Newman's lecture.

President Rath Announces:

Marriage Lecture Series Sponsored By NFCCS, Also Contributing To Missions

NFCCS Chapter President Jim Rath announced today that the Family Life Committee of the National Federation of Catholic College Students will present six Lenten lectures on "You and Marriage." The lectures will be held in the student lounge of LaSalle College on Sunday evenings starting Sunday, at 7:30 P. M. Admission to the lectures will be $1.00 for two persons for all six lectures.

"Strategy In Courtship"

The first address, on February 27, will be a panel discussion on "Strategy in Courtship." The first lecturer scheduled is Dr. James P. Quindlen on March 6th speaking on "Happiness and Health." Mr. and Mrs. Dennis Clark and John McDermott will be the speakers on March 13, discussing "Money Matters". "Our Child . . . God's Child" is the title scheduled for March 20. The lecturer will be Mary Lewis Coakley. Fr. James Cummiskey will be guest speaker on March 27, talking on "Morality and Marriage". The lectures will end on April 3 when Father Edgar Schmiedeler lectures on "Christianizing Your Home".

Schedules And Questionnaires

Members of the campus chapter of NFCCS will distribute questionaires to the Senior Religion classes this week. The forms list the dates, titles, and speakers as they are scheduled for the lectures. They also provide space for questions asked by the students on any of the specific lecture titles. The forms are being collected and returned to LaSalle in time for the lecturers to include the questions in their lectures.

Rath announced tickets for the lectures were placed on sale Monday. They may be procured from the Chaplin's office any day.

The Augustinian mission in Japan will be $100 wealthier very soon as a result of the campus NFCCS chapter's decision to donate part of its treasury to the foreign missions, Rath added. The action was taken at the regular meeting of the organization held in room 101 C&F last week.

Mission to Benefit

Scheduled to benefit from the disbursement is Rev. Thomas Purcell, O. S. A., of the Augustinian mission in Japan. The donation will be transmitted to Father Purcell indirectly through Rev. Edwin Grimes, O. S. A., who is in charge of the Shamopinaki Dance Commitee. Proceeds from the dance will be send to Father Purcell, and the gift from the NFCCS will be included.

Father Greenlee To Preside at Irish Olympics

The Very Rev. Henry E. Greenlee, O. S. A., Prior Provincial, Province of St. Thomas of Villanova, will preside Sunday at the opening of the Irish Cultural Olympics in the Library. Acting as Chairman will be John C. Kelly, K. S. G., Chairman of the Friends of Villanova University Library.

After an invocation by the Very Rev. Patrick J. Dundon, O. S. A., Prior of St. Thomas Monastery, there will be addresses of welcome and appreciation by the Very Rev. James A. Donnellon, O. S. A., President of Villanova University, and Rev. Daniel P. Falvey, O. S. A., Librarian at Villanova University, respectively, followed by a talk on "Founding Fathers" by Father Greenlee. Highlight, will be the address by the Honorable John J. Hearne, S. C, Ambassador from the Irish Republic. Benediction by Father Greenlee will close the day's events.

On Monday, Dr. John I. McEnerney of the University faculty will speak on the "Irish Contribution to the American Way of Life."

The Rev. Patrick O'Keefe, O. S. A., will talk on "Famous Irish Saints" from the coming of St. Patrick to five hundred years later. Father O'Keefe, a native of Waterford, Ireland, entered the Augustinian Order in Dublin, studied in Ireland and Rome, and is now a professor

Voting Place Alumni Gym; First Class of '58 Function

Dick Winfield
Council Chairman

On the eve of the climax of their first collegiate campaign, 22 freshmen of the 24 nominated for two Student Council seats are still in the running.

Balloting will be held tomorrow in Alumni Gym from 11:30 a. m. until 3:30 p. m., according to Frank Licopoli, chairman of the Student Council Elections Committee.

He reminded all freshmen that they must present their matric cards to be eligible to vote. No proxy ballots will be allowed.

Elected candidates—one day hop and one resident — will take their places on Council at the next meeting March 7.

Campaigning by the candidates and their friends has been going on since the list of eligible nominees was released last Thursday by Rev. George McLaughlin, O. S. A., Dean of Student Activities.

Names of freshmen who had been nominated at the class' first meeting several weeks ago were screened by the dean's office, the chaplain's office and the registrar's office.

Here is the official list of candidates, arranged in alphabetical order: Day hops: William Bobo, C&F; Martin Doheny, Eng.; John Fisher, Arts; Eugene Fogarty, Eng.; Richard Hamburger, pre-med.

David Ogle, C&F; Philip O'Neil, Eng.; Vincent Pongia, Eng.; Martin Roache, Arts; Joel Stein, pre-med.

Residents: Charles Campbell, C&F; John Fixl, pre-med; Terry Hayes, Arts; William Lesko, C&F; Charles Maier, pre-med; John Moynihan, Arts.

James Naiman, C&F; Frank Okenka, Eng.; Norman Peer, Arts; Leo Rudegeair, Eng.; Frank Smith, pre-med; Karl Smith, C&F.

Student-Faculty Group Considers SC Cut Proposal

After enthusiastic approval by Student Council, a motion to grant unlimited cuts to dean's list students has been referred to the Student-Faculty Committee.

Reaction of the S-F Committee will be announced to Council at its next meeting Monday night.

Convening for the first time Jan. 10, Council heard report of the committee appointed to investigate the matter — Bill Quinn, Frank Adams and Jack Downing. They backed the plan,

As Well As Charitable:

Third Annual Shamokinaki Features Social Angle

In an Oriental setting, Villanovans and their dates will glide to the mellow tones of Charlie Gresh and his orchestra Mar. 11—to show that business can be mixed with pleasure.

The familiar Field House will be decked out with Oriental appointments for the third annual Shamokanaki.

From 9 til 1, dance goers will socialize and in the same stroke help a worthy cause. Proceeds will be forwarded to the Augustinian Missions at Nagasaki.

Rev. Edwin T. Grimes, O. S. A.
Shamokinaki Moderator

Hopeful Note

Sponsors of the affair have adopted an optimistic tone concerning the dance. Chairman George Sinnott has set a lofty goal of 1000 ticket sales. Other members of the student committee—the sponsor—think they can pull the trick.

Even now they're roaming the grounds with pockets bulging and of course tickets are also on sale in the Pie Shoppe. Donation is $1.25.

But the sponsors don't want students to forget the social angle—after all, a dance is an appropriate time to let down the hair and let one's self go.

Familiar Band

The band chosen to provide the rhythm for the Shamokanaki won't find the Field House strange. Gresh and his men have played other stands there, including last year's successful Shamokanaki.

In case the name of the dance threw you: the affair is held to raise funds for the missions, which are under the direction of Rev. Thomas Purcell, O. S. A., who formerly taught here.

Since he was from Shamokin, Pa., founders of the dance merely slipped on the Japanese ending.

And in case you're having trouble digging up a date Shamokanaki sponsors urge you to visit the Blind Date Bureau in the Pie Shoppe.

Beauty Has Its Rewards: Jr. Queen Contest Opens

An opportunity for all members of the Junior Class to build up their respective egos and at the same time save a bit of money through the semester begins today in the form of the annual Junior Week Queen contest, sponsored by the Class of 1956.

The result of a good deal of interest and competition in past years, the contest will end at midnight, Wednesday, April 20, and will be open, of course, solely to members of the University's Junior Class who have only to submit pictures of their lovelies between now and the contest's deadline, midnight, Wednesday, April 20. Judges will be announced at a later date.

Court To Be Chosen

In addition to the Queen will be chosen a "Lady-in-Waiting," and four members of the winner's court. All judging will be don strictly on a picture basis, and all entries, if possible, published in the VILLANOVAN as they come in. The places of deposit of pictures (which can be either snapshots or preferably portraits) are the rooms of Bob Ford, 306 Sullivan, and Harry Nash, 242 Good Counsel.

The winner and the five runners-up will reign over all of Junior Week, and will be crowned at the Junior Prom Friday, May 6. The entire Royal Party will be guests of the Class of '56 throughout all the events of Junior Week, and the Queen, if from out of town, will receive free hotel accomodations, and so on. The winning group will be announced in the Junior Week edition of the VILLANOVAN.

GENERAL RULES

1, All members of the Junior Class are eligible to submit one picture.

2. Pictures (preferably at least 5"x7", must be submitted to the Villanovan office or the above rooms by midnight of April 9. All early entries will be eligible for publication in the Villanovan prior to Junior

Welcoming NCAA Bid

Last week the N.C.A.A. made official Villanova's bid to its post-season basketball tournament. The Wildcats were chosen as one of the Eastern representatives-at-large despite a not-startling 14 and eight record.

This is a happy climax to a gruelling season. Sparkling, if not consistent, ball has keynoted the team's play. Highlights of the season were the sensational comeback in the St. Francis game and the unexpected pair of triumphs over North Carolina State, the nation's second-ranked team when we played them.

Critics of the choice point to the Cats' inability to impress in the Christmas tourney and to their failure at the hands of Duquesne, Georgetown, and Cansius. However, these people fail to take into account the quality of Villanova's opposition through the entire season (there were very few set-ups in the second half of the schedule), and the fact that every team is permitted a bad night.

These are not excuses—they are facts, facts apparently recognizable to the Association.

Moreover, the N.C.A.A. has not given Villanova a berth on a merely negative basis. They realize too well the full import of Coach Severance's words, "On a given night, we'll take any team in the country." The sound thrashings administered N. C. State afford considerable proof for the soundness of this position.

It is with considerable pride and justification that we of Villanova extend our best wishes to everyone connected with the University basketball team. It is our firm hope that the team leaves Kansas City next month as the N.C.A.A. champion. No matter what the outcome, however, all Villanovans will be there, in body or in spirit, chanting, "Let's go Wildcats!"

Penn-VU Harmony

At the Lemoyne - Villanova game Saturday night, observers witnessed the expression of a changing policy between the University of Pennsylvania and Villanova. Our Villanova Singers joined Penn's Glee Club at their invitation in presenting several spirited numbers.

To many, it seemed an ordinary display of college spirit. But to us it provoked speculation. Undoubtedly the change in outlook first reflected by the new basketball arrangement, and now by this interchange is welcomed by Villanova for it can be broadened to other activities, to Penn - Villanova dances, to Penn - Villanova plays and even to Penn - Villanova football games. These joint and competitive activities would naturally breed desirable school spirit, would stimulate alumni and outside interests and would proffit Penn and Villanova with prestige and fraternity.

However, if this intercollegiate policy becomes more active, a problem is apt to result. The problem is that of a few immature students, who would abuse the policy as their predecessors have destroyed good relations in the past.

Even though this program does not formally exist as yet, let us adapt an eager, constructive attitude toward improving Penn-Villanova relations now so that if and when a good-will policy is effected we will be able to participate easily and constructively.

Serious U.S. Policy Failure Seen In Loss of Tachens

By John Eddinger

The Tachen Islands have been abandoned to the Communists after the United States government announced that it would not defend them. Chiang's troops have been "redeployed" at the advice of American leaders. Now is the time to determine what the practical effects of this policy will be in the battle for control of Asia.

The control of the Tachen group by the Chinese Communists will have the following effects:

Chiang's forces will be pinned to Formosa.

The Communists will be able to assume that no anti-Communist force will be in a position to invade the mainland.

Sixty-thousand Communist troops which guarded the coast opposite the Tachens will be free to be employed advantageously elsewhere.

Permanent radar stations on the islands are in Communist hands. Japan and Okinawa will now become vulnerable to air attack with a maximum warning time of fifteen minutes.

China Door Closed

The door to Communist China has now been closed. Any hope of invading the mainland by the forces of Chiang Kai-shek has been exploded. This theory, of course, is based upon the fact that, under Chiang's control the Tachens were the final stepping-stone to the front door of the China mainland. Opposite these islands stretches a wide plain which leads to the Yangtse Valley and the populous heart of China. No place is better suited for an invasion.

Tachens' Loss Great

The Tachens do not occupy very much territory. The group contains two major islands, Upper and Lower Tachen, a few smaller islands, and a number of tiny islets. During Chiang's occupation of these islands, the local inhabitants aided him immensely. An intricate intelligence system had been built up, a system which had agents in every port and river city on the mainland. The coast directly opposite the Tachens is a part of Chekiang Province, where Chiang Kai-shek was born. Chiang has more secret allies and potential supporters in that province than in any other. By landing an invasion force on the Chekiang coast, the Nationalists would open the way into the broad Yangtze Valley, outflank the Communist defenses of Shanghai, and open their ranks of volunteers in one of the world's most populous regions. To the Communists the occupation of the Tachens secures the mainland at its most vulnerable point.

Inconstant U. S. Policy

American foreign policy regarding the Far East at present is of a rather puzzling nature. At one moment our leaders are the defenders of freedom and democracy, and at the next moment they meekly allow the Reds to take whatever they want. The Chinese Reds, taking advantage of this inconsistency, have literally steamrolled their way across East and Southeast Asia, with very little real opposition. Only in Korea did the United Nations intervene, and there the "privileged sanctuary" beyond the Yalu enabled the Communists to fight the Allies to a stalemate. Since there was no intervention in Indo-China, the Free World lost another vital area to Communism. Tachen has been the latest prize for Communism.

Need for Vigor

If America is to maintain any prestige in Asia, she must follow a more vigorous program. The West cannot afford to lose more land in Asia. To be successful, the United States must (1) build up Formosa to render that island invulnerable to attack and (2) repel by force any aggressive act of Red China to add more territory to her already vast empire.

Strength of Church Important to Soul

By Tom Mentzer

"Snap to it!" The command lashed out like a whip against the ears of the new group of army recruits. Response to the top sergeant's sharp words was quick. Standing at attention, these new rookies listened closely as their leader tensely outlined the purpose and features of the weeks of basic training that were to follow.

They were going to learn how to use all types of weapons from a bayonet to a bazooka. Strenuous physical feats requiring a determined will power were hereafter going to be demanded of them. Commands given by superiors were to be heeded promptly. Every act performed by them during this vigorous training period was designed to equip them to endure the rigors of any battleground on the face of the globe. Dependent upon how well they absorbed the various features of this program were two lives, their own and their country's.

Lent a "Training Program"

Last Wednesday, Ash Wednesday, marked the commencement of another type of training program. Called Lent, this training period is essentially different from the military program in that its purpose is to condition the soul rather than the body.

At the same time, if we take a moment to delve deeper into the matter, we discover that there is also a similarity between the two programs. "Snap to it," is a command issued in the soul-training program also. Only in this case the Catholic Church gives the command and Catholics all over the world stop to hear it.

She speaks about weapons that will be used. But these weapons are not bayonets or bazookas; rather they are confessions and communions. Feats taxing a strong body and a strong will likewise have a place in this program. Indeed, depriving one's self of cigarettes or beer for some six weeks demands as strong a man as any week-long march. Moreover, the performance of these acts serves to strengthen the soul so that it might withstand any attack whether it be from the world, the flesh, or the devil. What is more, it is imperative that this training be availed of, lest two lives be threatened, the soul's and the Church's.

Truly, this time is proper for any spiritual training, especially that which the Lenten period affords. You need not be extraordinary to discern that communism threatens the soul of man and the life of the Church as well as the body of man and the life of the United States.

If we first strengthen our souls and the life of the Church, which is only as strong as its members, perhaps our bodies and our country will not need to display their strength. It never hurts to try.

Peering . . .

By Dick Peer

. . . Into the kitchen I found a decree marked, "Students' Lenten Menu". Apparently we're going to have all sorts of yummy things again. Heading the list was that old Lenten favorite—rice and dried squid, followed by forty-seven different ways of serving cheese. The head waiter even told me about a special meal we're going to enjoy. Says he with a toothless grin, "We're having chocolate covered clams once every single month."

. . . At all the tire marks on the lawn in front of Sullivan Hall, it seems to me that the next item on the Development Program should be an extension of the inadequate footpath there now. I believe a four lane highway with a connecting clover leaf from the Pike might remedy the situation rather well.

. . . At the N.F.C.C.S. meeting notice on the Pie Shop bulletin board, I see that the year is now being noted in addition to the month. I understand that this was done because people had been coming to the meeting a year late.

. . . At the clean aprons on the Pie Shop personnel, I couldn't believe my eyes. Upon checking I found there was no need for any alarm—they had just turned them inside out.

Strictly Opinion...

By Frank Hartmann

A common complaint heard on the Villanova campus concerns the lack of places to go in Philadelphia. Whereas, it's true that Philadelphia doesn't compare to New York for the neon-lighted spots, it does have its share of desirable and different places to take a date.

This week, I'd like to cover some of the eating spots that are within our financial reach, but yet provide an enjoyable evening out.

If you like good music and good food with pretty good prices for the college budget, try Victor's at 1303 Dickinson St. It's a real "atmosphere" spot, with candles and soft music.

Maurice's, well known to Villanovans, features the same kind of atmosphere and is a little closer to the center of town, being on Quince St. behind the Forrest Theatre. Going up in price, but also in entertainment is dinner at the Benjamin Franklin Hotel on Chestnut St.. This includes a complete ice show starting at 7:30 with the tables set directly around the rink. (It might help to know the headwaiter.)

Good Seafood . . .

Philadelphia has one of the very best in seafood houses in Old Original Bookbinders at 2nd and Walnut. Known all over the country, it has an old cobblestone fireplace, and on its walls are mementoes of the gay Nineties. Don't order any thing but seafood, it's great. The prices won't let you make a habit of going there, but they're not out of this world.

Getting back to a lower price level without sacrificing quality, you have a choice between Shoyer's at 4th and Arch, and the Russian Inn at 1233 Locust. Shoyer's has been there since 1874 and has an atmosphere all its own with great expanses of linen, white aproned waiters and polished brass. Its specialities are sweet and sour meat balls and Hungarian strudel.

The Russian Inn features such foods as Beef a la Stronganoff and Blini with caviar. It seems to be a center for the ballet crowd, but nonetheless is fairly inexpensive.

Continuing along the foreign line, Dante's Corona di Ferro at 762 S. 10th St. seems to have the edge in the Italian food with such dishes as Shrimp Marinara, baked manicotti, and eggplant parmigiana. For Chinese food, if that appeals to you, try the South China at 208 N. 9th St. Their speciality is Wo Siu Opp which is braised boneless duck. Which is good.

Finally, if you're trying to make the big impression, the place to go is the Barclay on Rittenhouse Square. Live it up while eating in an 18th century decor with table bouquets and soft music. You'll pay for it.

If you're on a man-about-town binge, or just looking for a different place to go, why not clip this column and post it near your social calendar. Some of the places I've been to; the rest come highly recommanded—And remember—don't use your knife for the peas!

Expense-Free Tuesday:

Plans Set For Inter-Club Talent Show in Jr. Week

A plan which will accomplish at least three purposes—providing entertainment, eliminating all expense, and boosting campus organization competition—has been announced for Tuesday of Junior Week by chairmen Jim Bambury and Dick Peer.

The idea, conceived in conjunction with planning head Roy Zimmerman and class officers, will add to the annual Tuesday band concert an entirely original program — a talent contest whose contestants will represent various Villanova organizations, whether publications, clubs, fraternities, societies, or active groups of any type.

No Admission

First of all, the evening is open to all. Secondly, there will be no admission price, and thirdly, there will be an hour-and-a-half informal dancing period following the judging.

Here's how the plan proceeds:

1. All campus organizations are eligible.

2. Any type of talent, including from one to five members, may represent his or their organization.

3. Only 15 contestants' entries will be accepted—the first fifteen that formally submit entries after the opening date of entry—which is today, Wednesday, March 2.

4. Contestant organizations will have until the end of March to sign up, unless 15 respond before that time. All groups are urged to sign up one of their members, or a group of their members as soon as possible, since there are some 30 active campus organizations.

5. It will be understood that every member of every contestant group must be an active member in good standing with his club or fraternity, which will do the actual primary auditioning and choosing of its entry.

6. An award to be announced later will be given to the winning organization, and medals given individually to the successful members of the entry.

Contest To Be Judged

The contest will be judged by several prominent local musical devotees, with Bambury and Peer serving as MC's.

The band concert will precede the evening competition and dance in the Field House.

The tentative schedule:

7:30-8:00—Band Concert
8:00-9:15—Entry Appearances (one performance apiece)
9:15-9:30—Judging of top three winners
9:30-11:00—Informal dancing

An Ode to a Cup of Coffee . . . Pie Shop Variety

O cup, thy steaming nectar lures me on,
And to your wafting odor,
I dedicate this simple song.

Has thou thought in repose
The pleasures of the cup?
And how sublime that battery acid
Trickles down your crop.
Then take heed—hear my plea!

This mortal university will not suffice
Without this gift of gods.
So drink the Pie Shoppe's
coffee . . .
I'll bury you in the bogs.

Dr. Klein Speaks:

Faculty Discussion Group Meets This Afternoon, 4:30

Dr. Klein

Dr. Walter Klein of the University's Business Administration Department will consider "The Implication of Economic Analysis for Just Prices" before the Faculty Discussion Group today at 4:30 p. m. in the Library of Commodore John Barry Hall.

The group, founded a short time ago, is a permanent committee of the Villanova Chapter of the American Association of University Professors. It has as its purpose the formulation and presentation of a model liberal art curriculum for a college facing the same problems as Villanova.

Future talks will be given by Dr. Fritz Nova and Mr. Roland Houde. Dr. Nova will speak on "The Political Thought of Mussolini", while Mr. Houde will discuss "Problems of Teaching Logic."

Interested students may attend these meetings, a Discussion Group spokesman added.

Tn'T Practices Continue

Even though formal rehearsals for the cast have not been definitely scheduled yet, Turf and Tinsel dancers are prancing through their paces twice weekly in the Blue Room of the Field House.

Dancers, under the direction of George Noake, work out Tuesday and Thursday nights, according to Dick Cook — one of T 'n' T's business managers.

Cook said rehearsals for the complete cast should begin within the next few weeks for "Jessica James," the society's musical-comedy offering, scheduled for the Field House, April 27 through 30.

Schiller's Concert Band Continues To Please

The Concert Band continued to please a large foot-tapping audience when it held its third concert of the season last night at St. Agnes' parish, West Chester, Pa.

Two prepious appearances at St. John's Orphanage and St. Joseph's School of Nursing in Philadelphia were very well received and afforded the group an opportunity to perfect their impressively large repertoire.

Student Conductor Bob Schiller stated that the next performance would be held at St. Agnes School of Nursing in Philadelphia, Monday, March 7.

He termed the 40 man aggregation the largest in two years, and praised their professional attitude which is responsible for the group's outstanding success.

Dean Reuschlein Addresses Bar Association Group

Dean Harold Gill Reuschlein of the Law School will speak before the Delaware County Bar Association Friday evening, and will address the Lackawanna County Bar Association Mar. 7.

Dean Reuschlein has just returned from a week-long tour of eastern colleges, where he spoke before the student bodies of Merrimack College, Holy Cross, Siena, and Manhattan on the choice of Law as a profession.

Professor John T. Macartney, also of the Law School, has been appointed to the Committee on Civil Legislation by the Philadelphia Bar Association. He has also been re-appointed to the Committee on the Home for the Bar Association, which is seeking a suitable site to be used as a permanent address for the Philadelphia Bar Association.

Professor Thomas O'Toole of the Villanova School of Law spoke at a dinner meeting of the Contemporary Club, a Philadelphia forum group, at the end of February. Other speakers included Professor Clark Byse, of the University of Pennsylvania, and Mr. Joseph Bongiovanni of Villanova University.

Mr. O'Toole spoke on "Teachers and the Fifth Amendment."

St. Joseph's, Beta Gamma Men Meet

Last Wednesday, the Beta Gamma Debating Society, represented by Bill Eckenrode and Jim Wrzesinski, engaged St. Joseph's College in the Seventh Intercollegiate Debate, sponsored by the Holy Name Society of St. James' parish of Pennsgrove, N. J., where the event was held.

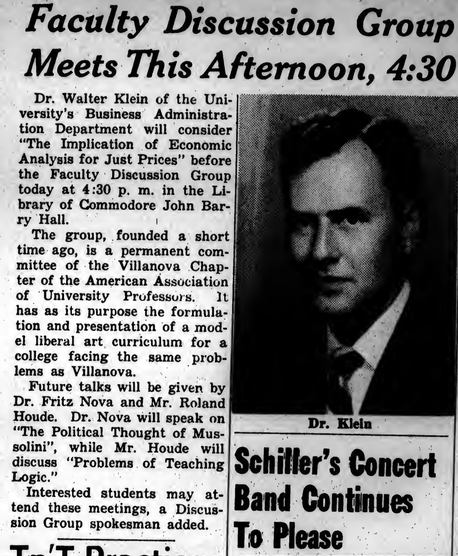
St. Joseph's had won the contest's William C. Bruther's Trophy five out of six years and once more claimed the laurels.

The controversial topic was "Resolved: That the United States should extend recognition to the Communist government of China," and St. Joseph's, the defending champions, chose the negative argument.

Members of both teams were presented with keys symblematic of their participation in the event.

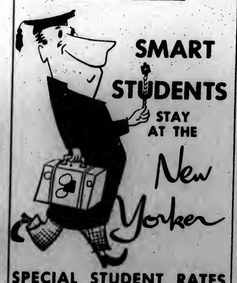
Dr. Fritz Nova of the history department assumes a momentarily glum pose during a questions and answer period following his talk to a joint meeting of IRS-DMP last week on Nazi Germany's rise.

Villanovans Take To Radio



Bob Schiller and his Villanovans try another medium, March 11 and 13, when they make their appearance — via tape recording—on two Philadelphia area radio stations.

The group has been chosen by WVIL, Villanova's radio station, to represent Villanova on "Young Pennsylvanians," a half hour show sponsored by Strawbridge and Clothier.



A tape recording of the Villanovan's show will be made next Monday, a WVIL spokesman said. He explained that the program will be used on a contrast between Dixieland jazz and Modern jazz. Various phases of both musical media will be included in the show.

Appearing with Schiller, who is director of the Concert Band, will be Pat Briody, Jack Gilfillan, Mike Guido, and Jim McCarthy.

The show will be broadcast on Mar. 11 at 4:30 p. m., over WFLN-FM and March. 13 at 3 p. m., over WNAR-AM.

Mother's Day Program Cost Is Outlined

Formal invitations to each Junior mother will be part of this year's Mother Day, chairman Frank Hartmann announced last week, as he and his committee members tied up loose ends of plans for the first official and most gratifying day of Junior Week.

The invitations idea, brought up and solidly backed at a first-semester class meeting, will add a more personal touch to the day and give the Juniors' mothers something additional to remember the day by. The invitations will cost about $.20 apiece.

Price List

The price for the entire day is $9.50, a half-dollar over last year's event ticket. The price list is broken down this way:

Meals for Junior and Mother	$5.00
Corsage for Mother	1.25
Favors	1.00
Programs	0.30
Invitations	0.20
Caterers' Tips	0.25
Tree (for planting ceremonies), Linen, table rentals, Mass cards, spiritual bouquets, postage fees, matches	1.50
Total	9.50

The preceding figures are figured out as accurately as possible, using last year's budget outcome and this year's price estimates as the guide.

Jack Padova has lined up a top-notch entertainment program in the afternoon, with the Band, the VU Singers, a Turf and Tinsel skit, and a harmony group, the Mainliners Quintet, providing the goings-on.

Spoons Again

The favors will again be demitasse spoons, with "Villanova Mother's Day—Class of '56" engraved thereon. Bruce Martin has helped Hartmann a great deal in work on favors and programs, as has Phil Keane in connection with tree-planting arrangments, and John Henry and Phil Taddeo with food and chapel exercises, respectively. The annual Diaper Dan contest will be, of course, included in the day-long activities. John Stangl is working with Frank on this project's preparations.

Delta Pi Mu Calls Pledges Tomorrow; Elaborate Belle Masque Sets Readied

Work Half Completed

In the past five weeks, the stage crew of Belle Masque's spring production, "Harvey", has undertaken and completed one-half of the most elaborate sets ever used in a Society presentation.

The show requires two separate settings: Dr. Chumley's office and the living room of Elwood P. Doud. In the way of construction, the crew has applied some new and unique methods. The living room is unusually high by the standards of the behind-the-scenes men. Its walls stand sixteen feet, while the doctor's office is twelve feet in height. To eradicate the need for two roofs, they make use of a system of pulleys, which raise or lower the roof as the set requires.

Painted Wallpaper

Carrying their diligent endeavors to a greater degree, the group has literally painted the wallpaper on the two rooms. Because of the difficulty of this type of work, this method is seldom used.

One of the largest handicaps the stagehands face is the changing of a set between scenes. The time element does not allow them an over-abundant amount of time.

The crew of twenty students is under the guidance of Jake Krupa, brother of Rev. William Krupa, O. S. A., and is ably co-managed by senior Jim Duffy, mechanical engineering major and Jack Lavery, a junior C&F student.

William Cunningham

Business managers Jim Judge and Tom Curran report that ticket sales will begin in two weeks, and that tickets will be available in the Pie Shop from any member of Belle Masque.

"Romances" At Harcum

Next week, "Romances," a one act play by Rostand, will bow at Harcum Junior College. Heading the cast are Lucille Bell, freshman nursing student, and Stan McGeehan, sophomore engineering. Jim Lombardi, junior C&F, is handling the backstage chores for the play. Bill Cunningham, president of the Belle Masque Society, is making his debut as a director in this presentation.

Arts Men Meet, 10:30

Delta Pi Mu pledge chairman Jim Bambury has announced that all freshman arts men should attend a pre-pledge period meeting tomorrow morning at 10:30 in 201 C&F.

The get-together will be held to set up and announce definite plans and dates for the initiation period, and to assign fraternity "'big brothers" for the aspiring members.

Joint Meet

DPM held a joint meet with the International Relations Society last Thursday evening, with the history department's Dr. Fritz Nova the speaker.

Following Dr. Nova's talk on the rise of Nazi Germany, the fraternity discussed plans for its new frat pins, which, handled by Owen Hickey, will be delivered within about six weeks. Those members interested in the pins should contact Hickey in his room, 232 Good Counsel. Two prices scales are available —around $5, and $10, the more expensive having solid gold letters and symbols. Dopsit on the less expensive pin is $2.50, on the higher-priced pin, $5.00.

See Officers

Those freshmen aspiring to fraternity membership must turn out tomorrow; if for some reason attendance is impossible, contact should be made immediately with officers John DeRemigis, Harry Nash, Ed O'Connell, Joe Blimm, and Frank Adams.

Law School Forum Plans Announced

Tentative plans for a series of legal conferences and forums were announced last week by Dean Harold Gill Reuschlein of the Villanova School of Law.

Early this month, four lawyers from the Philadelphia Bar Association and a member of the Delaware Bar will come to Villanova to speak on the types of law practiced and the nature and expectations of each.

Later in March, Mr. Abram Freedman, Esq., City Solicitor of Philadelphia, will speak on "The Art of Advocacy."

Other speakers are being contacted, the Dean said.

Accounting Society Meets Tomorrow; Hears FBI Man

The role of an accountant in the Federal Bureau of Investigation was explained to members of the Accounting Society at a business meeting Thursday.

Speaking to the group was Mr. E. H. Magee, special agent in the accounting department of the FBI. Besides 15 years service with the FBI, Magee has been a bank examiner.

After explaining the qualifications for the FBI (at least 25 years of age, good physical condition), the speaker said the agent, on being accepted, attends school for 16 weeks. During this time, the agent studies law, esponiage, sabotage, and weapons.

Then Mr. Magee discussed the accountant's role in the FBI by giving several examples of extortions and frauds which were broken by the Bureau.

A question and answer period followed the talk.

President Joe Dorris said the next meeting of the Society will be held tomorrow at 10:30 a. m. in 201 C&F. Annual banquet and nomination of officers for next year will feature the meeting, according to the president.

WVIL SCHEDULE

WVIL program schedule for the week of March 6 is as follows:

CONGRATULATIONS

The VILLANOVAN congratulates H. Rees James on announcing his engagement to Patricia Anne Ferris.

Miss Ferris, who is from Fox Chase, Pa., is a full time nursing student and will receive a Bachelor of Science degree upon graduation this June. Mr. James is a senior English major.

RING NOTICE

Ring chairman Owen Hickey has announced that the final order of Juniors' rings will be delivered to Father McLaughlin's office in Mendel Hall tomorrow from 11 to 2 in the afternoon. Final payment must be made upon receipt of the rings, which actually arrived last week but were sent back to Dieges and Clust for another finishing process. There are 39 rings and three pins to be available tomorrow, and Hickey urged that those who are concerned make it a point to get to the Student Activities office.

Junior Bob Ford Succeeds McCormick as Feature Ed.

Two staff changes and the appointment of a photography morgue editor have been announced by VILLANOVAN Editor-in-Chief Edwin Daly.

Cause of the changes was the resignation of Mark McCormick senior philosophy major, as feature editor.

Junior Bob Ford, from Linden, N. J., formerly a co-copy editor, took over McCormick's post. Replacing Ford was Frank Delany, a freshman arts student from Broomall.

At the same time, Daly announced the appointment of P. Thomas Tulli, senior day hop English major, as the VILLANOVAN's first photography morgue editor. Daly said Tulli will attempt to bring the newspaper's picture file up to date.

McCormick, a regular midshipman from Fort Dodge, Ia., told Daly that he resigned because "of the press of studies."

In accepting the resignation and naming Ford to the post, Daly said: "I of course regretted to see Mr. McCormick resign since he has done an excellent job as feature editor. But I have great faith in Mr. Ford and feel sure that he will succeed with his new tasks."

Spring Lynx Plans Rolling; Contest Open

All material to be entered in the Spring edition of the LYNX must be submitted by April 1, according to Rees James, editor of the quarterly publication.

The short story contest is still open to anyone wishing to enter. Any copy can be given to James, Dr. Phillipson or Mr. Mitchell.

The coming issue, James stated, will be in keeping with the season, and will be appropriately dedicated to Mother's Day.

Rifle Team

Villanova's rifle team last week, for the first time in its history surpassed the 1400 point mark for an individual meet. The team of Jack Gilligan (286), Hank Miller (282), Stan McGeehan (282), Caesar Trunzo (278), and Walt Gould (273) scored the total of 1401 points against Drexel on Saturday.

Physics Club Gains SC Seat For First Time

Charlie Schwerdtfeger, junior physics major from Berwyn, will officially become the first Student Council representative of the Physics Club at the Council meeting Monday night.

His election took place last Thursday at the club's weekly meeting. In being seated on the Council, Schwerdtfeger gave up his post as secretary.

Dave Dalva, freshman physics major from New York City, will become acting secretary. He had been freshman representative in the club.

The Physics Club was accepted as a Student Council member at a Council meeting Jan. 10.

President Dave Vachon said the club also scheduled a picnic for Apr. 30 at Valley Forge. Rain date is May 7, Vachon said.

The club will meet again tomorrow at 10:30 a. m. in the Physics lab, but Vachon did not announce a definite program schedule.

which was then passed by Council.

Two schools using the unlimited cut system are Notre Dame and the University of Virginia.

Tackling other matters, Council:

1. Recommended that final exam schedules be made up and posted at least three weeks prior to exam week;

2. Voted to request more parking facilities for students after Day hop Bill Quinn described the crowded conditions in the present parking lots for students' cars;

3. Heard a report from Dick Hepburn suggesting degree honors (magna cum laude, summa cum laude, etc.)

4. Referred to Student-Faculty Committee a motion for a free day next Tuesday so that Villanovans could attend the Villanova game in the NCAA tournament's opening round in New York.

5. Decided to postpone a decision on a motion to allow day hops to eat in the dining hall on nights when they plan to stay for meetings and extra curricular activities.

Council said that when facilities permit, Council will look into the matter. This was taken to mean when modern dining facilities in Dougherty Hall are completed.

At the present time, only day hop members of the Concert Band and VILLANOVAN have permission to eat in the cafeteria.

VU Singers Perform Twice Over Weekend

Performing in a twin bill weekend debut, the Villanova Singers succeeded in pleasing both of their audiences. The Senior Concert and Dance, held to balance the treasury, managed to give its ticket-holders a fine evening.

Singing a well balanced repertiore of songs, "The Drinking Song", "Eight Bells", "O Bone Jesu", and Brahms' "Lullaby" included, the organization showed the fruit of many weeks of practice.

The high spots of the evening were solos by Peter Scott, Charles Brockman, and Conrad Urban Scott sang a classical selection, "Matine' by Verdi. Raising the tempo, Urban, second bass and club president, performed the Dartmouth "Winter Song." Brockman did the first chorus of Villanova's Alma Mater.

A barbershop harmony group, "The Mainliners," with Jack Jannucci, Jack Padova, Joe Valenti, and Joe D'Aquila, sang "Margie," and "Girl of My Dreams."

Saturday night, the group journeyed to the Palestra and, in keeping with our good neighbor policy, joined the Penn Glee Club during halves of the basketball games. Each organization sang solos, Penn doing their Alma Mater and that of Columbia, while Villanva sang its own Alma Mater. Then as a grand finale, the two clubs of 100 voices combined to sing "The Winter Song" and "The Halls of Ivy".

On Wednesday, Carlton Nelson will review the art of glassmaking, the story of Waterford Crystal and its revival in recent times. Mr. Nelson was born in the United States, received his A. B. degree in Boudoin College. Associated with Macy's in New York, he is at present China and Glass buyer for John Wanamaker Store.

Joseph Ratigan, also of the University faculty, will deliver a talk on Thursday on Irish Literature.

As an added attraction to the Irish Olympics, the following items will be on display in Commodore John Barry Hall.

1. A pair of silver canes, property of Commodore John Barry, made about 1785 by Joseph Anthony, Philadelphia silversmith.

2. Manuscripts:

(A) Account of stores under the care of several officers belonging to the continental ship, "Alliance," taken on or about Dec. 25, 1781, at Boston, and made up at L'Orient, Feb. 6, 1782.

(B) Power of Attorney, signed by John Barry on June 22, 1801, as administrator of the estate of Isaac Austin, his father-in-law.

(C) Alphabet to ledger of the frigate, "Alliance," with the disposition of the crew's pay.

(D) An account of the prize money from the British ship, "Snow Commerce," captured 1781-82.

3. Miniature of Commodore John Barry, a presentation piece from John Paul Jones.

4. Watch fob of John Barry, with his coat of arms. It is a gift from a French officer, probably LaFayette or the Viscount de Noaille.

SPORTS CHATTER

Scandal Insinuations

By Norm Feldpush

With the clirvax of the scandals involving collegiate basketball several years ago, the staunch defenders of the "good old days", when basketball was exclusively a campus sport, were heard to cry "if the game is not returned to the campus, this situation will rise again." The rules committees were busily employed with legislation restricting the players' outside basketball activity. These rules were gradually relaxed as the impact of the campus heroes' misdoing faded from the fans' memories.

Sportswriting Drudgery

For the past several seasons, sportswriters have been enslaved to routine coverage of all-American players, surprising team victories, and inflated scoring averages. Perhaps the routine has overcome some of these dynamic personalities. Perhaps they are concerned over a probable loss of readers, or maybe the concern is for the decreasing sales of their daily appearing employers.

Whatever the reasons, the insimuations are appearing as before. Once again these statements, often with no names mentioned, are carefully worded and pointed toward a specific institution. A major college name is connected with gambling odds, and the rest is left to the reader's imagination. Always the writer is protected, for he merely provides the initial impulse for thought. It is the reader who draws the conclusions.

Villanova Mentioned

As in common knowledge, Villanova has been mentioned with gambling, either directly or indirectly. The New York Daily News stated "Philadelphia may supply the next basketball scandal. Bookies there won't accept bets on games of a local college." Still another statement by syndicated columnist Dan Parker read "New York bookies took the Villanova-Canisius basketball game off the boards last Wednesday, the seventh time this season a Villanova game has been erased . . ."

The first statement simply links the failure of bookies to bet on the results of a certain team's games with a possible scandal. No other factors were considered. With five major colleges in Philadelphia, some fans, if familiar with the trends of their season's play, could arrive at the conclusion that Villanova is that team. However, the News states nothing definite. The published information concerning gamblers would ordinarily rate an indifferent stare from the reader. But the chant is being echoed elsewhere.

Mr. Dan Parker, in pursuing his usual "sensational journalistic" style, has linked Villanova with the dreaded word of "bookie". While his statement concerning their actions is true, it is of no interest to the general public unless an implication is present. People now recall the previous scandals, and Mr. Parker's capitalization on unfortunate ocurrences is successful.

But there is another reason for this action taken by the members of the wagering profession. Villanova was listed in the pre-season publicity as a ball club which could cause the top teams trouble, but was figured to be an unpredictable squad. Regular season play by the Wildcats has confirmed this. With Captain Jack Devine and high-scoring Bob Schafer, the starting lineup has featured Jim Smith, with one semester of previous varsity experience, and sophomores Jack Weissman and Allen Griffith performing in the majority of the games. A lack of height is noticeable, with Devine being the tallest at 6'4". The usual talent-ladened schedule was highlighted by three meetings with powerful Duquesne.

Team Unpredictable

A team with this background is inevitably unpredictable. On a hot shooting night, such a team can defeat the best. When the ball fails to drop, the lack of height together with inexperience can mean defeat. These are the reasons gamblers will turn thein backs. They are never confident of winning, and an unpredictable team means frequent financial setbacks.

Villanova Athletic Director Ambrose "Bud" Dudley commented on Mr. Parker's theories and summarized the situation by stating "What the so-called bookies do is no concern of the Villanova Athletic administration, its coach, or its players."

Perhaps Dan Parker and associates should find other ways to sell newspapers.

Jenkins, Breckenridge Win; VU Second In IC4A's

By Bob Strayton

Tankmen Beat St. Peter's; Couig Wins 3

St. Peter's just didn't have the key to open the pearly gates of victory last Saturday when they swam against Villanova at the Fieldhouse. The Villanovans defeated the New Jersey swimmers 58-24.

Although St. Peter's was forty-five minutes late for the meet, Villanova lost no time in setting the clock to rights. Eight of nine events were taken by the home team.

Couig—Record Setter

The irrepressible Don Couig provided the highest light of the meet with three victories. Don thus became the first swimmer in Villanova's history to turn this trick . An undefeated skein in the 150 individual medley was lengthened by Couig as he took the event in 1:53.2. His other laurels were won in the 220 freestyle and the 20 backstroke.

Victories in the 50 and 100 freestyles made a double winner of Bob Duffy. His times were 25.5 and :58.0, respectively. Wally Ullrich and Dan Nulty place one-two in diving, gaining five points towards Villanova's total score.

St. Peter's Takes Two

St. Peter's hit the scoring column with victories in the 400 freestyle relay (Brennan, Bolanos, and Corrigan) and the 300 medley relay (McNerney, Murray, and Forrester).

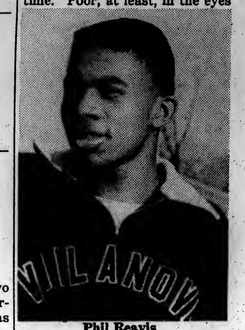
Rounding out the list of Villanova victors are George Allen and Tony Tomasello. George came home first in the 200 breaststroke in 3:15.8. The 440 freestyle was Tomasello's poison. Tony's time was a trim 6:19.0.

Georgetown Next

Today at three-thirty in the Fieldhouse, Villanova meets Georgetown. Coach Geisz has high hopes for a victory, and urges all students to come to the meet.

For the second straight week, Charlie Jenkins, Villanova's fleet-footed sophomore sprinter, took a first place in the 600 yd. event. Alex Breckenridge, who is also a sophomore, made his indoor debut as far as victory was concerned, by toiling to a win in the mile run. The action took place in New York's Madison Square Garden, where the ICAAAA track championships were held last Saturday night. Villanova placed second in the meet.

Charlie Jenkins



Two other Villanova sophomores, Don Bragg and John Kopil, performed quite well during the all-collegiate meet also, Bragg tied for first place in the pole vault, while Kopil placed a close second to Breckenridge in the mile.

Timed At 1:11.2

Jenkins, who started off the indoor season in the Boston Knights of Columbus meet by blistering the boards in his 600 yd. specialty, this week repeated the feat, and won the event in 1:11.2. Two yards behind Charlie at the finish line was Tom Courtney, the highly regarded Fordham ace.

Previous to his victories of the past two weeks, at the AAU's and again in the IC4A's, Jenkins had become lethargic on the boards, due to a serious case of the flu. Hampered by the illness, Charlie lost a great deal of prestige in track circles, and was chosen only as an alternate for the Pan-American games which are to be held in Mexico City within the next few weeks.

The mile run, in which Breckenridge and Kopil fared so well, was completed in a poor 4:19.9 time. Poor, at least, in the eyes of New York fans who were used to the low-four minute performances of Wes Santee and Gunnar Neilson.

Mile Victory Revelation

For Villanova, however, the victory in the mile was a revelation. It proved, mainy, that Al Breckenridge was still able to win. It also was an indication that little John Kopil is to be reckoned with in the future. Following the two Villanova runners across the line in the mile was Bill St. Clair, of Manhattan.

The 14 feet height recorded by Don Bragg was sufficient in tying for first place in the meet. It was, however, bit of a disappointment in some ways, because in indoor competition previous to the IC4A's, Don had been able to vault 14'6". Only last week in the AAU's had he achieved a similar height.

Frosh Trackmen Compete:

First-Year Track Duet Attains Indoor Prestige

By Joe Heaps

Last year two new national high school marks were set in the annual indoor high school meet in New York. A high-jumper from Somerville, Massachusetts cleared 6 feet 5⅛ inches to break the high jump record and a sprinter from Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania turned in a 6.4 second 60 yard dash performance to become a record-holder. This year the two talented youngsters, now both Villanova trackmen, are spreading Blue and White fame throughout the track world with their excellent efforts in the indoor season.

The two are, of course, Phil Reavis and George Sydnor.

Creditable Transition

The transition from high school competition to invitational meets featuring the world's greatest stars seem to be an almost impossible task. Both Phil and George have taken it in stride, though, and when queried about the big change, merely smile and admit that the competition is" much rougher."

Each man has been recognized for his feats this season and each has a great potential for future years. Phil considers the Millrose Games in New York as his best effort of the indoor season. He tied for first place with four jumpers with a leap of 6' 7½". He also considers that night one of his luckiest, for, of the five

Intramural Hoop Tournament to Begin Monday

For the second time in two weeks, the Freshman-Intramural All Star basketball game has been postponed, it was announced by Intramural Athletic Director Ed Geisz. He said he hoped the game could be played "sometime this week." Difficulty in obtaining an open afternoon in the Fieldhouse has been the cause of the postponements.

The All Stars are optimistic that this could be the year for the All Stars to defeat the Frosh. Thus far, the Freshmen have won every post-season game between the two clubs.

Tournament Moved

Because of a large number of make-up games in the various intramural leagues, the round-robin tournament has been moved back a week and is now scheduled for the week of March 14. Quarter-final and semi-final games will be played March, 14, 15, and 16 and the championship game will take place Thursday, March 17.

The re-scheduled games being played this week and next will

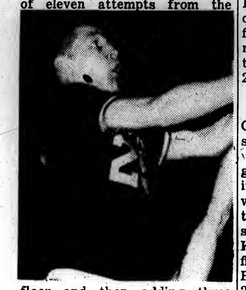
Schafer Hits 2000 Points As Team Routs Le Moyne



Last Wednesday night and then again Saturday, the spasmodic Villanova Wildcats fattened their deceiving record by defeating the court quintets of both Muhlenberg and Le Moyne. Playing two entirely different types of game, the Wildcats gained their 15th and 16th victories of the season.

Against Muhlenberg the Villanova five had their hardest time of the year in regards to finding the hoop. Shooting an ineffective 26.7%, the Cats had to fight right down to the final buzzer to gain their 54-51 victory.

Playing a close first half, the Cats left the court at halftime leading by the score of 35-32. In the opening minutes of the second half the Villanova five suddenly caught fire and broke away to a 49-35 lead. However, at this point the shooting of the Wildcats began to fall off and the stubborn Mules were soon back in the ball game. Leading by six points with 9:28 to go, the Villanova quint went into a freeze against the Up-Staters zone defense. It took Muhlenberg exactly 6 minutes and 28 seconds to realize that Villanova didn't feel especially like shooting. It was at this point that they broke out of their zone and made a final effort to gain possession of the ball. However, before the final buzzer had sounded, the Mules added three more points from the foul line but lost 54-51.

Devine Stars

While the rest of the team was having trouble getting points, Captain Jack Devine was red hot. Making six shots out of eleven attempts from the floor and then adding three more from the free circle, Devine piled up a total of 16 points for the evening. To this he added 14 rebounds, which made quite a busy night for Captain Jack.

In the game against Le-Moyne the Wildcats came against a type of offense they had not met all season. The Villanova five, anxious to run and score found themselves slowed by Le Moyne's possession type strategy. As a result, when the first half ended, they had tallied only 33 points but still led by five.

Switch Defense

In the second half the Villanova quintet broke out of their zone and resorted to the familiar man-to-man defense. This resulted in stopping Le-Moyne from scoring for the first eight minutes and fifty-eight seconds of the second half. However, while Le Moyne was suffering from their scoring famine, the Wildcats were building up a 47-28 lead. From then on the Cats were in complete control, scoring at will. Substituting freely, Al Severance played eleven men, in gaining the 73-44 victory.

2000 For Schafer

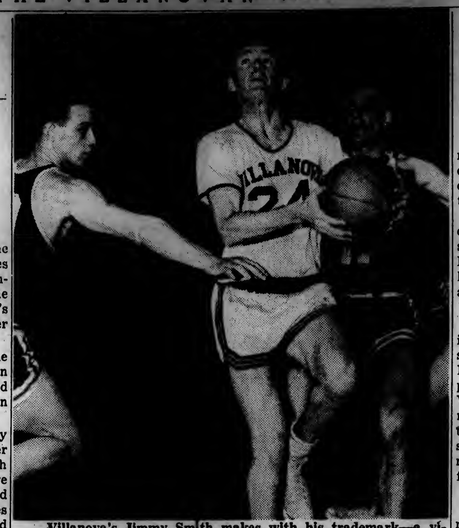
The excitement of fthe evening came when Bobby Schafer entered the select group of 2000 point manufacturers. Only nine other college players have ever totalled this many points in their careers. Fittingly, the 2000 point came on one of the Bombers dramatic, arching 35 foot set shots—his third in a row. At this time the game was stopped and Bobby received a game basketball, his second award for the evening. Earlier, both he and Jack Devine had been awarded basketballs, Bob for breaking Hennessy's record and Jack for scoring 1000 points in his college career.

Frosh Beat Naval Air, Perkiomen

By Bob Mulcahy

High scoring featured the sweep of both scheduled games last week by Villanova's Freshmen baksetball squad. The Kittens increased their season's record to 11-6 by scoring over 85 points in both tilts.

An 87-85 victory over the Atlantic City Naval Air Station at the Field House was followed by a 91-74 rout of Perkiomen Prep. at Pennsbury.



A late rally by Atlantic City fell short when the buzzer sounded ending the game with visitors in possession. Five points by both Fletcher and Laswell in the last six minutes helped reduce a 12 point lead by Villanova. However, important clutch fouls by Connie Newman and Jim Muldoon enabled the Kittens to successfully maintain their lead.

Accurate shooting by Muldoon and Frank Singgsheim helped the 'Cats produce a 39-35 halftime advantage. Following the intermission the Kittens were led by the scoring of Jack Kelly who eventually wound up as the game's high scorer with 26 points.

Playing in the Pennsbury Municipal Auditorium last Saturday the Frosh defeated an outmanned Perkiomen five 91-74. The home forces led briefly 2-0, but baskets by Tom Brennan and Jim Muldoon quickly erased this lead and from there on the Kittens were never headed. At the end of the first quarter the score was 21-16, and at halftime 49-35.

Kelly Gets 40

A sparkling performance by Captain Kelly, who scored a season's record of 40 points, was instrumental in turning the game into a rout. Also scoring in double figures for the victors were Muldoon and Brennan. In the third quarter Villanova scored 24 points. Of this total Kelly scored 14 himself on seven field goals while Muldoon and Brennan chipped in with 8 and 2 respectively, as these three men did all the scoring for the victors. Therein lies the reason why the 'Cats won. They had too many big guns for the opposition. Although Dick Denithorne scored 32 points he was the only threat the home team had.

Villanova's Jimmy Smith makes with his trademark—a vigorous grimace—as he prepares to lay up an underhand shot against Le Moyne at the Palestra Saturday night.

men tied for the event, he was the fortunate one to draw the short straw and receive the wrist watch.

K. of C. Spectacle

Many times the final in the 60-yard dash was so close that a blanket could have covered the runners. Such a finish occurred in the Knights of Columbus Meet in Boston. Sydnor was defeated by a fraction of a stride by Rod Richards. George emphasized the importance of getting a good start in such short-distance sprints and hoped that more races will give him the experience of some of the "veterans" in getting the jump at the gun.

Natural boyhood inclinations to run and jump started the track careers of both Phil and George. Reavis was jumping at a public park when he discovered his ability. In high school, under the careful tutorage of Coach Frank Hegarty, Phil improved rapidly and by the end of his senior year held the metropolitan, state, national, and world titles for high school jumpers.

Attended Haverford High

Like most of his junior high school classmates, Sydnor ran in the "pound" races — everyone competed in his own weight class. George never lost one of these races while at Haverford Junior High School. His ascent to the track team when he entered senior high was a natural. A sensational senior year concluded George's high school track experience. During that season he was undefeated in the 100 and 220-yard dashes, won the Pennsylvania State 100 and 220-yard Championships, and set a new record for the national high school 60-yard dash.

Intramural

determine which teams will be league winners and, thus, members of the post-season playoffs. From their records in past years and their performances thus far this season, the Lungers and Sullivan Hall teams seem to be the teams to beat. The Lungers, paced by Dave Sansome, were runners-up to the Austin Erfs in the 1954 finals.

Course In Life-Saving Offered

Villanova's Intramural department announced last week that a course in life-saving will be held during the next few months in the Field House pool.

All those interested in the course will benefit from the splendid opportunity to gain the Red Cross certificate for senior life-saving, the Intramural office announced.

Starts Mar. 8th

The course, which will be held in conjunction with Red Cross standards, will be held in the Field House starting at 4:30 p. m. on Tuesday, March 8th. Villanova's varsity and freshmen swimmers will give the actual instructions, and demonstrate the various techniques necessary for achieving the certificate.

Lifeguards Take Note

Ed Geisz, swimming team mentor and director of Intramurals, also added that the opportunity of receiving the course should not be overlooked by anyone desirous of working as a lifeguard or pool attendant during the summer months.

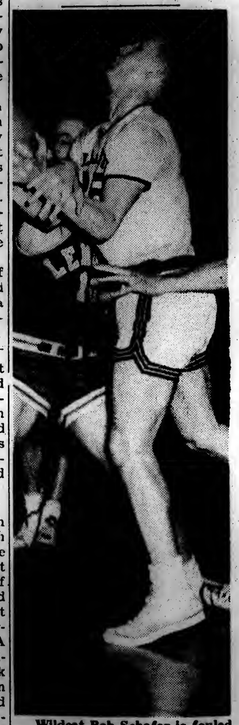
The free instruction course will be held for a period of four hours every week, at the pool in the Field House. Anyone wishing to acquire further information concerning the Red Cross sponsored lessons should contact Mr. Geisz in the Intramural Office.

Kelly, Frosh Captain, Leads Team In Scoring

Another Bob Schafer might be in the making at Villanova. Jack Kelly, the captain of Villanova's freshman basketball team, has been scoring with unerring consistency in every game for the frosh this season. Last Saturday, for example, Kelly gunned in 40 points in the Freshmen romp over Perkiomen school.

The 6'4" Ohioan, who got his baksetball savvy from his father, was a hardwood terror in high school also. At St. Edward's High School, in the suburbs of Cleveland, Jack played four years on the varsity basketball team. In his senior year, he was named captain of the team.

31 Per Game Average



During his scholastic playing days, Kelly made quite a name for himself. His 31 points per game average gave him a berth on the All-State team, and also the All-Cleveland squad. He held the city's three-game point total record with 129. In a season-ending tournament, Kelly also was the indivdual high scorer in the competition, by contributing 48 points to the basket.

His aptitude does not lie merely in basketball, but in baseball as well. Kelly is a fine pitcher, and while in high school he had the bst won-lost record in the school's history. In his senior year, he didn't record one lost on his perfect record.

Jack is, however, from a family of athletes. His three older brothers as well as his father were all athletes, and apparently good ones, while they were in high school. Jack also has a younger sister, who naturally enough, does not engage in sports.

Since he came to Villanova last September, Jack has been talked of constantly. His lanky frame, and, as hearsay had it before the season started, his accurate eye has been invaluable in the freshman games. He is a clever team leader, excellent rebounder, and an adept playmaker, as well as the team's big point-producer.

Next year, when he comes of age for varsity play, Jack could mean the difference between a mediocre season and a sensational one for Al Severance.

Wildcat Bob Schafer is fouled as he drives against Le Moyne.

NFCCS: A Catholic College Bond

A National Link With Some 200 Institutions Is This Group, Striving For Lay Leadership

An organization to which all Villanovans belong is the Villanova Chapter of the National Federation of Catholic College Students. Organized in New York in the fall of 1937 by 10 colleges, NFCCS has grown until it now includes more than 200 colleges and universities.

In the summer of 1937 a Manhattanville co-ed by the name of Winifred Byles visited Paris and was impressed by the workings of Pax Romana. She returned imbued with the idea of forming an American student federation capable of membership in Pax, and participation in international affairs.

It soon won approval and encouragement from ecclesiastical sources. Cardinal Hayes of New York appointed Father McSorley, C. S. P., chaplain of the Federation.

Under Father McSorley's guidance the organization spread to Philadelphia, the Midwest and the West Coast. In 1939 the Federation was sanctioned by the General Chairman of N.C.W.C., Monsignor Ready, who made NFCCS a corporate part of the College and University Section of the National Catholic Youth Council, and appointed Bishops Duffy and Walsh as Episcopal Moderators.

Purposes Enumerated

Primary among the purposes of the Federation is the desire to acquaint Catholic college students with their responsibility to the student community and to the post-college community. Other, related, purposes are to contribute to Catholic lay leadership by providing an opportunity and outlet for that leadership among Catholic college students; to promote solidarity and unity among the student bodies of American Catholic colleges and universities; and to represent its members in national and international affairs.

President James Rath

Mardi Gras Hit

The Villanova Chapter, led by Jim Rath, this year sponsored a Philadelphia Regional meeting, and the Mardi Gras Ball. The Regional meeting, held in the Library of Commodore John Barry Hall on Dec. 5, was one in a series that is held at the neighboring Federation colleges.

The Mardi Gras Ball was under the general chairmanship of Paul Donohue, NFCCS Vice-President, and it made over $500 for the organization. Assisting Donohue were Jim Michener, Bob Schiller, Frank Collins, Ed Fletcher, Jim Greenlee, Bob Fallon, George Sinnott, Leo Burk, and Ed Buritsch.

Because of the success of their previous affair, Federation members were invited to serve on the Shamokinaki Dance committee by Rev. Edwin Grimes, O. S. A., Shamokinaki moderator. This Dance, incidentally, is being run by George Sinnott, an NFCCS member.

A tentative second semester schedule includes publicity work for Lenten conferences to be held at La Salle College, a clothing drive expected to begin soon after Easter, and the annual dinner dance.

In conjunction with the other Regional Federation members, a variety show will be held at Immaculata College beginning March 13. This show is being directed by Villanova's Jim Michener, NFCCS Regional Treasurer. John Giordano, Ed Murphy and Jack Erdlin are the Villanova representatives in the production.

FELLOWSHIPS

Got an eye on a career in public service?

Students interested in public affairs and public service careers, and receiving BA degrees in June have been offered an opportunity to apply for fellowships at three southern universities.

Fellowships grant $1200 a year plus college fees.

Beginning this year fellows will serve with a public agency, such as TVA, or a department in a city or state government.

In the 1955-56 academic session they will take graduate courses at the Universities of Alabama, Tennessee and Kentucky.

For eligibility requirements and other information students should write: the Educational Director, Southern Regional Training Program in Public Administration, University of Alabama, University, Ala.

Deadline for submitting applications is March 10.

Lou Donatelli, a pre-law C&F junior, who was elected recently to the post of secretary in Delta Pi Epsilon, replacing the retiring William Cunningham.

CHEM SOCIETY

John Gilligan, president of the Villanova Chemical Society announced that the organization has picked April 23 as the date for its Dinner-Dance this year. The business meeting last Thursday decided to hold the annual affair at the Media Inn. Gilligan took the opportunity to repeat that it is not necessary to be a Chemistry major to join the society. The only requisite is a definite interest in Chemistry.

AIEE-IRE

Tonight Villanova's electrical engineering societies, A.I.E.E.-I.R.E., will hold their second meeting of this semester.

Mr. John Wentworth of R. C. A. will speak on the Fundamentals of Color TV." Mr. Wentworth has been engaged in television engineering work for R. C. A. for some time and is well qualified to lecture on the popular subject.

A.I.E.E. Chairman Jim Wrzesinski urged all those interested to attend the meeting tonight at 7:30 p. m. in 215 Mendel. He also announced that a field trip to the Pennsylvania Railroad installations in Philadelphia will be held on Thursday, Feb. 10.

ICG

A meeting of ICG will take place in 104 C&F on Thursday March 3, at 10:30 a. m. It is imperative that all members attend, announced chairman Don Seaton, due to the imminence of the Regional Meeting of the ICG which shall be held at Villanova on March 19, 1955. Any interested individuals will be welcomed.

IRS, Gaining Members and Prominence, Joins With DPM To Hear Dr. Nova

The monthly meeting of the International Relations Society was held last Thursday evening in conjunction with Delta Pi Mu Fraternity. The speaker, Dr. Fritz Nova, Associate Professor of History, discussed the rise of Hitler in Germany.

Dr. Nova made incidental references to his own work as interpreter preparatory to the Nuremberg War Crimes trials, an experience which brought him into close contact with most of the Nazi leaders. He also stressed his own recollections of events and attitudes in Germany before his enforced departure from his native land.

Medieval Nazism

In discussing the background of Nazism, Dr. Nova pointed out that elements which were to provide material for the rise of Nazism existed in Germany as far back as the late medieval period as a result of the unusually long survival of feudalism in that country. He emphasized that Germany was denied the opportunity for a gradual, organic growth of democratic institutions through its history.

Germany's one attempt at democracy, the Weimar Republic of post-World War One days, was doomed to failure. Upon its demise, Hitler came to power. Dr. Nova made clear that Hitler was immensely popular among the mass of Germans. The speaker stressed Hitler's skilled use of propaganada.

Cited Mackay

Dr. Nova laid particular emphasis upon the role of the Catholic Church under the Nazis. He cited the recent pronouncements of Dr. Allan Mackay, head of world Presbyterianism, to the effect that the Catholic Church had shown weakness toward dictatorships by concluding a Concordat with Hitler and pointed out that the Church had no choice but to sign the arrangement and had consistently opposed Nazism on many grounds. He concluded by reading from a published work of the late Cardinal von Faulhaber of Munich, one of Hitler's most bitter foes.

IRS President Bill Quinn announced that next month's meeting will feature a debate between the Villanova debating team and the University of Delaware debaters on the issue of admitting Communist China to the UN.

He also announced that the society will sponsor a Communion breakfast some time in April. He emphasized that the organization welcomes new members, who are invited to attend any monthly meeting.

After the meeting, seven new members were enrolled into IRS.

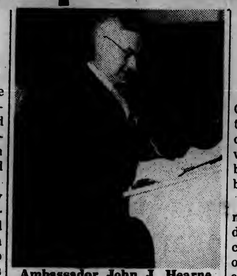
The Irish Olympics continue tonight with the scheduled extensive scope of the culture and history of Ireland after acceptance of tribute by the Irish Ambassador to the United States.

This past Sunday, the Library was the scene of a presentation of an elaborately engraved plaque to the Honorable John J. Hearne, Irish Ambassador to the United States by Rev. James A. Donnellon, O. S. A.

"Presented to our honorary alumnus, the Honorable John J. Hearne by Villanova University in recognition for his contribution to Irish culture in America in his official capacity as Ireland's first Ambassador to the United States.



"March 6, 1955
"Very Rev. James A. Donnellon, O. S. A."

This accolade was supplemented by the acceptance of a perpetual membership in the "Augustinian Guild" for the Ambassador and Mrs. Hearne, as extended by Rev. Henry E. Greenlee, Prior Provincial of the Augustinian Order.

Fall Dean's List Includes 417; Six Senior 4.00's

Rev. Thomas A. Burke, O. S. A., University Registrar, announced the fall semester Dean's List. It includes 417 students, 12 of whom had 4.0 averages. Of these perfect-grade members, there are six seniors, three juniors and three sophomores.

SENIORS

The 417-man group is composed of 123 seniors, 105 juniors, 82 sophomores and 107 freshmen. This is one of the largest

Gresh Band Entertains

Besides smooth music and an Oriental locale, patrons of the third annual Shamokinaki Friday night will have a chance to win a tea set sent from Japan by the priest whose mission will benefit from the affair.

Chairman George Sinnott announces that the set, which was donated by Rev. Thomas Purcell, O. S. A., will be raffled off sometime betwewen 9 and 1, as Villanovans and their dates glide to the music of Charlie Gresh and his orchestra.

The tea set tops the list of side attractions to the colorful affair, as it was outlined by Sinnott. Door prizes have also been donated by Belle Masque, Turf and Tinsel, Junior Class and the National Federation of Catholic College Students.

But all this is secondary to the dancing and decorations. Jake Krupa, brother of the Belle Masque director, Rev. William Krupa, O. S. A., designed all the physical effects for the dance, according to Sinnott.

Another of Jake's brothers, an Augustinian, is doing missionary work in Japan, as is Father Purcell, to whom proceeds from the affair will be sent.

N.Y. Dixieland Artist Plays Wednesday and Thursday

Eddie Condon
Signed for Concerts

A toe-tapping blond musician who brought jazz out of Chicago's South Side and gave it new life and recognition in Carnegie Hall has been contracted by the Class of 1956 to deliver a pair of Junior Week jazz concert performances, in a pioneering planning move for the big social week in May.

National Figure

Eddie Condon, whose rise from the Chicago school of jazz through the age of national jazz popularity has made him a Greenwich Village tradition, has been signed to deliver two-hour jam sessions on Wednesday and Thursday afternoons of Junior Week in the Field House. He will bring him is original combination of talent, including Wild Bill Davidson on cornet, Cutty Cutshall on trombone, Edmund Hall on clarinet, and four other musicians — all of whom appear nightly with Eddie on guitar at Condon's place on West Third St. in New York City.

Thanks To Moderator

The deal with Condon was closed after several weeks of negotiations made principally through the Junior Class moderator, Rev. Thomas A. Calpin, O. S. A., class officers Harry Nash, Jerry Guerrisi and Dave Burns, and concert chairman Jack Kelly.

Student ticket prices will be a dollar per person, with non-collegian general public sales set at $2 per person. Advance sales will first be made to Juniors, then to all Villanovans, then to students of surrounding institutions, and finally to the general public. The afternoon shows, (times to be announced) will provide all Villanova off-campus students a better opportunity to sit in on at least one performance, while also doing away with the problem of dates' late

Rudegeair and Fogarty Victors In SC Election

Two freshman engineers — both experienced in high school student government work—took their places on the University's Student Council Monday night.

Eugene Fogarty, a day hop from Norristown, and Leo Rudegeair, resident from Lebanon, Pa., were elected last Thursday as less than 35 per cent of the Class of '58 turned out to vote.

The duo outclassed 20 other

For Sunday Night, Eve of Junior Week:

Tn'T Plans Reduced-Price Performance For Juniors and Early-Arriving Moms

In order to provide entertainment on Sunday prior to Junior Week for those Juniors' Mothers who plan to arrive early, the Turf n' Tinsel Society has agreed to run its annual Spring performance "Jessica James" through five consecutive evenings, therefore adding a sixth and very inexpensive attraction to the week's schedule.

T n' T business managers Bill Reich and Dick Cook, through the Society's president, Joe Blimm, arranged last week with Junior Class President Harry Nash a propsal whereby a Junior may take his Mom to the Saturday night show for a package price of $1.00, which is quite a reduction from the original student ($1.00) and general admission ($1.50) total of $2.50.

Not only will the plan, forwarded also by T n' T's genial director, Bob Whelan, aid the resident students whose Mothers are coming a day early because of distance or choice, but it will give all day hops a chance to attend with their Mothers at a reduced rate.

THIS IS JUNIOR WEEK

Sunday, May 1—T n' T Show
Monday, May 2—Mother's Day
Tuesday, May 3—Inter-club Talent Show & Informal Dance
Wednesday, May 4—Eddie Condon Jazz Concert
Thursday, May 5—Eddie Condon Jazz Concert,
Friday, May 6—Junior Prom
Saturday, May 7—Blue and White Day
Saturday, May 7—Junior Dinner Dance

Junior Week does not, of course, open officially until Mother's Day Mass Monday morning, but the Sunday evening show will serve as an unofficial kick-off of the festivities, and, while open to the general public also, will be based on the Junior-Mother entertainment theme.

A special section will be reserved for Juniors and their Mothers, and all Class of 1956 members who can do so are urged to take advantage of this opportunity for prior entertainment, and at the same time show appreciation of the deal T n' T is offering.

Dave Burns (holding manual), Vice-President of the Junior Class, talks over plans with T n' T President Joe Blimm (seated) and business managers Jim Lombardy and Bill Reich in connection with the performance Turf n' Tinsel is going to put on for Junior and their Mothers on Sunday night opening Junior Week.

Education Foremost . . .

Congratulations are in order to those Villanovans who achieved the required average for membership on the Dean's List. These 417 ladies and gentlemen are carrying out the aim which all college students officially have, the securing of as good an education in their chosen field as possible.

Unfortunately there are many whose names should appear regularly on the Dean's List but do not. For various reason, the marks of these individuals just do not measure up to the needed grade of excellence.

We are referring to those who have the ability to get good marks, but who just don't either because of a busy social life, or full-time devotion to activities, or just plain indifference. They argue for the most part that they are getting much more from their present interests than they ever could from studying dry textbooks or class-notes.

Far from attacking their interests in social life and extra-curriculars, we heartily approve. But we stress that, important as they are, they are secondary to the main purpose of getting an education. They should be pursued, but in such a way that they will not interfere with studies.

It can be done. This semester's Dean's List contains the names of the editors of four campus publications, a class president, three fraternity presidents, and the heads of fifteen other campus organizations. These men are getting a good education and plenty of experience in activities as well.

Library Leprechauns . . .

If you've wondered why the Irishman considers himself and his countrymen on a par with the New York Yankees, U. S. Steel, and Notre Dame, we urge you to stop in at the Library some time this month. There is a brougued symphony of sound and shamrock-green color abounding there under the title of Irish Cultural Olympics.

And it's calculated to win more friends for Ireland and more friends for Villanova.

The sound is coming from a host of well-informed and equally well-named speakers. The list of lecturers for this month of St. Patrick reads like a Dublin telephone directory, what with a Quinn, an O'Donnell, a Monahan, a Delaney, a Cavanaugh, a McEnerney, a Scully and an O'Keefe.

To keep the record straight, there's a J. Rosenthal speaking on Irish linen March 30. Other subjects range from literature to athletics, religion to industry, saints to scholars, philosophy to stamp collecting. It's all Irish, and mostly all from dyed-in-the-green Irishmen or Irish-Americans.

The color comes from the display cases in the Library and the Navy building where a varied collection of objets d' Eire is bringing lumps to the throats of the Gaelophiles among us.

Items in the exhibit range from ancient books to ancient canes, linen to silk, peat to photographs, mosaics to muscles.

Not only is it all Irish, as we have said, but it's all free, it's all educational, and it's all very good.

Man Must Not Submit To Demands Of The Dollar

By Pat Flan

To be a detached observer of the great American scene—what a pastime! If one happened to be such an observer and were he a man who shuns the labor of a serious thought, or who prefers wearing glasses, rose-colored, he might not even become disgusted. One might be able to laugh at the "high" moral standard that is so daily attested to in our searching newspapers. One might remain passive at the four year vacation from education that too many students engage in and have the presumption to call college training. And lastly, if one were really entrenched in his habits, he might even retain perfect composure at the thought of the American master, the bill called DOLLAR, and that money no longer talks, it commands.

Addicted To Dollar

Too harsh, is it, to say that America is addicted to the dollar? Not at all! To see the addiction, all an individual has to do while living is open his eyes. A buck spells happiness, and more bucks spell more happiness. It is with no stretching of the imagination that the impression is obtained that money is the criterion of happiness. The product of work seems to have become the sole purpose of work. Why to speak of work's purpose in terms other than money is to participate in part of vanishing America. Today, don't speak of work's purpose as producing in a man a genuine sense of accomplishment, or a real sense of pride, or the flush of happiness, unless you also speak of a heavy pay-check. Without the latter, the former is conceived as pure fancy. But accomplishment, pride, and happiness, though very definitely existent in many men earning huge salaries, is equally definitely existent in many men earing much smaller salaries. If you doubt it, just stop two or three professors or instructors on this very campus and ask them why they are here. Their answer will more than likely revolve around the purpose of accomplishment or happiness, or both; most certainly, it will not revolve around the acquisition of a fortune, large or small.

Work is the lot of man, but to work without purpose is to work in vain. It is to forfeit the happiness and self-satisfaction that come from accomplishment. It is a loss. And money itself can never become the sole purpose of work. If you believe so, just think about these following words, then repeat and repeat them until they ring in your ears. Then you'll know the emptiness of money as purpose. "It is harder for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven, than for a camel to pass through the eye of a needle." Whose words are these? The words of Jesus Christ.

What Future Holds

This June, several hundred students of this University will be released to the world by graduation and several hundreds more will advance toward that embarkation. How will we go? How will we end? Will we direct our feet where the dollar leads? Will we master money, or will money master us? Will a cash register replace our hearts? Will we abandon the vision and happiness that comes from real purpose? For money, will one of us sacrifice his dreams? For the green staff, will one of us sacrifice his life—or maybe his soul?. What will each be—a Midas—or a man?

The Campus Crier

I saw him weaving through the jam at the Pie Shoppe counter. He looked about, searching for me. It was senseless to avoid him because he usually found me. Not that I don't like this fellow—it's just that he's very talkative. "Oh, there you are," and hence I was countered by the Cultured Campus Cat, as I have named him.

We sat down at a table, I in my corduroy jacket and khakis, and he in his charcoal brown flannel suit with tan vest. As we attacked vigorously our sparse Lent meal, I secretly wished it large, for in a few minutes he began describing his recent date, an inexpensive affair at the Art Museum on the Parkway. It seems it features a Modern Art exhibit. The Cat dotted his conversation with names like Dali, Picasso, Rousseau. Frankly, I was impressed. He elaborated by explaining that aside from the modern art there are works of Rubens, Botticelli, Renoir, and Corot. I nearly choked on my coffee but bravely withstood the onslaught.

His date delighted in the fashion display and the Salvador Dali jewel collection. He rattled on about the Museum's free lectures, tours and movies—my ears came to listen for the word free. The Cat knows I'm always looking for a cheap date: hence, not resisting. I asked what hours the museum keeps. "Everyday, 9 to 5," I learned. I filed the fact for future reference.

By means of several drags on cigarettes we transversed some 20 tables and 100 students to the door of the Pie Shoppe. The devine intervention of time having forced us to part, he bade me good-bye with, "See you at the concert Saturday!"

I turned, shaking my head and musing an unanswered thought, "Blessed are the cultured for they shall inherit the . . . ?"

Strictly Opinion..

By Frank Hartmann

Last week we discussed and mentioned several good, in our mind, places in Philadelphia in which to eat. Now for a list of the later evening spots.

If you go to a movie or show in town, you usually try to stop somewhere for something to eat or drink before dropping your date off. Do you like Jazz? Try Billy Krechmer's Jam Session. It's a small place situated at 1627 Ranstead St. (between Market and Chestnut) with Billy Krechmer leading a really good Dixieland combo. There's a $2 minimum per person, and they check cards.

If you're looking for nationally prominent jazz, look into the Rendezvous. They often feature such names as Sarah Vaughn, Louis Armstrong, Muggsy Spanier and Sidney Bechet. The prices here are pretty stiff, though, and Krechmer supplies just as good music.

We mentioned Maurice's on Quince St. behind the Forrest Theatre last week and it deserves note again. It's great for a late bite to eat but its dry. All its sandwich creations are named for great composers to blend in with the classical music background.

The Pub at 1421 Sansom St. has nice surroundings, a good crowd, and moderate prices.

McGillin's Old Ale House at 1312 Drury St. (which is between Sansom and Chestnut) has been operated at that same place by the same family since the Civil War. Over the old white ash bar are liquor licenses dating back as far as 1860. It has exposed rafters of old smoke-saturated wood which gives the place something of the feel of an English Pub. The table tops resemble those of the G. A. in New York with initial and names dug into them. McGillin's could be the spot in Philadelphia for a college crowd to go. If you ever do end up there, take a group and ask the waiter to turn out the electric lights and light the gas jets. It's really great with the gas flame flickering ator the chandliers, but you'll have to ask them to do it. It's small, inexpensive, and they like Villanova.

Heading along the Hotel trail (with Hotel prices) you have the Drake Cocktail Lounge at 15th and Spruce with its giant old fireplace or the Warwick Coach Room at 17th and Locust.

If you know your date well and aren't worried about impressing her, there's always Smokey Joe's on 36th St. near Penn. The crowd there will be predominantly Penn.

If you have any suggestions of other places that you've been to and know are good (and preferably cheap) why not pass them on to me and we'll see if we can't scrape another column together for the benefit of the social-minded Villanovans.

Spanish Missionary Depicts Life In China

By Bob Ford

The Communists are being foiled in China. This is the belief of Rev. Florentino Garcia, O.S.A., a Spanish missionary who has spent more than half his life in that country.

Father Garcia explained that most attempt of the Communists to woo the Chinese have failed because of the firmness of faith of the Catholics there.

"The harsh materialism of the Reds runs counter to the nature of the Chinese. When movie-going was curtailed, the people spent their evenings in the churches," Father pointed out.

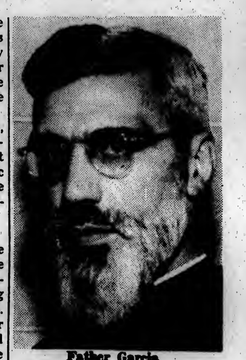
Father Garcia was born in Santa Croya de Tera, a small town in the Spanish province of Samora, on June 10, 1908. After a public grade school education, the 13-year-old left for Valencia de Don Juan, where he attended the Augustinian preparatory school of St. Joseph. Following this he spent four years studying philosophy, theology and the humanities. The last of these years, 1929, was spent in Manila, where he was ordained Dec. 19, 1931.

"Several months later, "Father relates, "we left Manila for Hanchow, China, where I remained for four years, learning Chinese and English."

Saw No War

In March of 1936 Father Garcia travelled inland to Hunan province, remaining there until 1948, when he was sent to Shanghai. Because he was so far inland he saw none of the ravages of war. Although he never even saw an enemy, he pointed out that other missions were not so fortunate. Generally the priests were treated rather well, although the Chinese priests might have had more difficulty," he added.

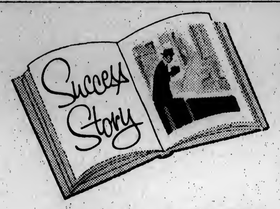
During the War, as today, Catholicism was on the upswing principally as the result of the good example of Catholic soldiers and the kindness of the missionaries toward fleeing refugees.



Reds Fill Churches

Today, in addition to those positive reasons, there is the materialism and absolute fatalism of the Reds which bring the people closer to the church. In the peaceful days just after the war the churches were filled only on Sunday, but today the churches are filled even on week-days.

Father describes the average Chinese as a person with high morals and fine and strong customs. He has the highest respect for religion and the Catholic priest, particularly a Chinese Catholic priest. He is intensely nationalistic and because of this is resenful of foreigners, including the Communists. "Missionaries will admit that China has progressed less than other nations, "Father explained, "but they love it there because of the character and love for life of its people."



Imprisoned Nine Months

After many months of house arrests, Father Garcia was taken by the Communists and imprisoned for nine months and nine days. During this time he was very polite and told them only "nonsense." Here again Father claims he was very fortunate, because he was never tortured. However, his quarters were small, 5 by 8, and occupied by 19 others. They were not allowed movement or conversation and their food was insufficient.

Father Garcia

Despite having been banned from China forever, it is Father's hope that he will return there shortly; the time he spent in prison he feels to have been well spent: now he is equipped to make his sermons more practical in answering the needs and the problems of the Chinese.

Variety Production Sunday:

Villanovan Jim Michener Directs Immaculata Show

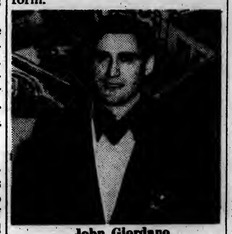
Terminating six months of planning and preparation, the Regional NFCCS Variety Show will be presented at Immaculata College, Sunday, Mar. 13, at 8 p. m. Jim Michener, C & F senior and regional treasurer of the NFCCS will be the show's director.

Representing V. U. in the production will be John Giordano, Jack Erdlen and Ed Murphy. Giordano ended his football career last fall and is presently cast in Turf and Tinsel's "Jessica James." He will handle a singing chore in the show.

Night Club Work

Erdlen, an experienced comedian, has worked in night clubs in Philadelphia and the Pocono resort areas. One feature of his act is an impression of Sid Caesar's day-off, which should be a highlight of the evening.

On Ed Murphy's shoulders falls the task of M-C'ing the entire show. Fans of WVIL will recognize Murphy as the "640 Club" disk jockey.



La Salle College will send two acts to Immaculata, both comedians. St. Joseph's College will present an instrumentalist, and Manor College a vocalist. Immaculata will contribute three acts: modern ballet, a vocal duet, and a pianist.

A dancer and vocalist will come from Chestnut Hill College, and a singer from Gwynedd Mercy Junior College will complete the cast.

Something New

According to Michener, "Philadelphia is introducing something new in the way of collegiate entertainment. Philadelphia has never seen a show composed of more than acts from more than two colleges. But now we have combined the best talent available from seven schools in the area."

The show's second performance will be at La Salle College on March 19 at 8 p. m. As an added attraction, Bob Schiller and the Villanovans will perform.

IRS Plans Debate, Nominations for Meeting Tonight

The International Relations Society will hold a combined business meeting and debate in 201 C&F tonight. The business of the evening will consist of the nomination of officers for next year.

After the nominations have been made, the Villanova Debating Team will meet the Haverford College Debating Team on the issue, "Should Communist China be admitted to the UN?"

Although only present members will be able to participate in the nominating, everyone is invited to be present, Bill Quinn, preident of the organization emphasized. Those interested in becoming members are particularly welcome, he added.

Seniors Nominated For Arts Honor Number Sixteen

Names of 16 seniors selected to compete for 10 places in Delta Epsilon Sigma, national honorary arts and sciences fraternity, have been released by Rev. Robert M. Sullivan, O. S. A., Dean of the School of Arts and Sciences.

Candidates for the honor will choose a book from a list to be released by Father Sullivan by Friday and they will submit a typewritten review of that book by Mar. 28.

Final selections based on the reviews will be announced before Eastern vacation, and induction will take place May 16, according to Father Sullivan.

Candidates

Nominated were: Joseph Blimm, Patrick Buttarazzi, Robert Chmielewski, Jaspar Collura, Edwin Daly, John Gilligan, Gaetano Gumina, John Lee, Mark McCormick, Don McGahan, Joseph McLaughlin, Thomas Mentzer, Patrick Nolan, Kenneth Pyle, James Sullivan and Richard Winfield.

Required for nomination is a 3.0 cumulative average.

DRIFTERS JOIN CAS

In keeping with its policy of presenting all-around entertainment for its listeners, WVIL presents Cactus Cas Bianowicz and the Drifters, an aggregation devoted to Western music, every Sunday and Monday night from 8:30 to 9.

The show comes to its listeners live and deals equally with the five major types of Western music: hick, country, novelty, polka and ballad. A flair for the unusual melodies has rocketed the show to campus fame, according to Cactus Cas.

Since the show's advent to the Villanova airwaves about three months ago, Cas stated he has received numerous requests for selections.

Cas relates that the group is really starting to work smoothly now and is looking forward to future engagements, which he has booked in the local area. The Drifters, besides Cactus Cas, include guitarists Joe Burns and Jack Emmerick, singers Jack Beatty and Dick Costa and Jim Kite on bass.

WVIL SCHEDULE

WVIL program schedule for the week of March 6 is as follows:

Sunday through Friday except Yawn Patrol:
7:30-8:30 a. m.—Yawn Patrol
6-6:30 p. m.—Jazz
6:30-7—Dixieland Parade
7-7:30—640 Club
7:30-8—Record Rendezvous
8-8:07—News
8:07-8:15—Sports
8:15-8:30—Down Memory Lane
8:30-9—Production Show (Tuesday: Quiz Show)
9-10—Wax Works (Tops in Pops)
10-10:30—Career Hour (Classical)
10:30-10:45—Old Gold Filter King Dream Date

Campus organizations desiring announcements over WVIL should contact Station Manager Bernie Coyne.

Junior Jack Downing, co-chairman of the Junior Queen Contest with Bob Ford, looks over some pictures of movie stars and wonders if the anticipated stack of entries from Juniors will be as comely. The contest opened last week and will continue through April 20, with a Queen, her lady-in-waiting and four members of the Queen's court to be chosen. Judges for the competition will be named in next week's VILLANOVAN; Juniors are urged to get their lovelies' portraits in as early as possible, so that as many as possible may be published in the Villanovan.

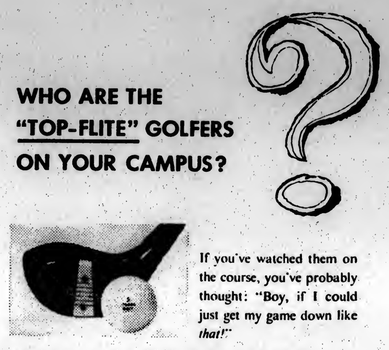
Jazz Band Unveiled

Villanova's Jazz Band made its formal debut at last Monday's Concert Band performance at St. Agnes' parish, West Chester, Pa. The new five man combo entertained an enthusiastic audience during the intermision in the Concert Band program.

Bob Schiller, the Concert Band's Student Conductor and leader of the jazz ensemble, said the group may become a permanent feature of the concerts.

Stemming from last year's well-received "Wildcat Seven," the group consists of Schiller, Pat Briody, Jack Gilfillan, Mike Guido and Jim McCarthy.

Villanova's Jazz Band may next be heard this Friday afternoon on F M Radio Station WFLN at 4:30. The half-hour "Young Pennsylvanians" program will feature both Dixieland and modern jazz, and will be repeated on Mar. 13 at 3 p. m. over WNAR-AM.



Schiller also announced that the Concert Band would perform on this Monday evening at Reading Catholic High School, Reading, Pa.

The VILLANOVAN will spotlight the Concert Band next week as "The Feature Activity of the Week."

WHO ARE THE "TOP-FLITE" GOLFERS ON YOUR CAMPUS?

If you've watched them on the course, you've probably thought: "Boy, if I could just get my game down like that!"

Constant practice is the answer, of course, but getting the best from your equipment is just as important, too.

That's where Spalding TOP-FLITE' clubs have the edge. They have more to offer in precision balance that gives an absolutely uniform swing-feel with every club in the matched set.

That's the secret of Spalding SYNCHRO-DYNED' clubs. And, it will pay off for you from the first round. You'll make the same shots with new uniformity. The perfect balance of these clubs lets you swing through the ball with confidence. Without "choking-up" or "compensating." You get the ball away cleaner, longer, and with more shot control.

These are the clubs that have lowered handicaps by as much as ½: Spalding SYNCHRO-DYNED TOP-FLITE clubs. Your Golf pro has them now. And, now's the time for you to start playing better golf.

Trainor Leads New Philosophy Club; Thirteen-Piece Navy Orchestra Formed

Under the leadership of Gino Gallina, the Villanova Commodores, a thirteen piece dance orchestra, has been created from midshipmen of the NROTC Unit and other Villanova students.

The purpose of the orchestra is to provide smooth music as only a large dance band can. In this way the band hopes to give good music for dances in the Main Line vicinity, which formerly could not afford a large dance orchestra.

Early in February auditions were held for positions in the orchestra, and after several hours of tryouts, final selections were made.

Unique Dance

Several local campus engagements have been lined up for the near future. Also, there has been proposed a unique type of dance to be sponsored by the Midshipman Officer Social Organization here at Villanova. This type of affair has never been attempted at Villanova in the past, but it is felt that this dance will be a social must in the years to come.

In addition to the sweet strains of the dance orchestra, a dixie land combo has been formed within its nucleus to provide for the jazz enthusiasts.

The ultra-smooth saxaphone section stars Charles O'Donnell as first alto, Mike Martinelli as second tenor, and Dave Borcik as third alto. The trumpets feature Alex Urban as first trumpet, with John Chabay and Don Rice supporting the melody as second and third trumpet respectively.

Sliding the bones are Paul Bowers and Tom Ulrich. Slamming the drums is LeRoy Sykes and strumming the strings of the vitamin-sized violin is Barry Kotler. Tickling the ivory keys is Tom Inglese.

Jo Ann Lapin is the featured songstress, nicely rounding out the orchestra.

Dr. Monahan

With impetus from students in the Ontology course and the support of Dr. Edward Monahan of the Philosophy department, a Philosophy Club has now been established.

The club plans a program of weekly meetings aimed at providing informal discussions to deal with practical problems of morals and philosophy.

Frank Trainor, a senior philosophy major, is presently the Acting President of the club, and has announced that informal discussion of "Angels" will be held this Friday at 3:15 p. m. in 203 Mendel. "Predestination" was the topic of the club's first meeting on Mar. 1.

Trainor emphasized the urgent need for junior and sophomore members, saying that not only would the members "profit immensely" from the club's activities, but also would be helping to establish an important campus organization.

Belle Masque To Give "Romancers"

Eight Belle Masque members will enter inter-collegiate competition tomorrow night at Harcum Junior College in the presentation of "Romancers."

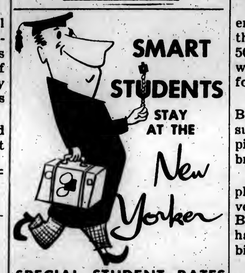
The play, skillfully written by Rostand, is of the single act variety and is placed in seventeenth century France. In composition, the show is judged to be a delicate satire on Shakerspeare's "Romeo & Juliet."

Setting of the comedy is novel, since it comprises two gardens separated by a wall over which the fast moving action is presented.

The plot evolves around a feud between two fathers living as neighbors, who are trying to arrange a marriage with the daughter of one (Sylvette) and the son (Percinet) of the other. The play becomes rich with hilarity as it becomes apparent that the two "Romancers" actually love each other beyond the knowledge of their egotistical parents.

Abductor takes Highlight

Humor reaches a highpoint when the two match-makers hire a "professional abductor" to fake the kidnapping of Sylvette. Percinet, the male lover of the rectangular plot, stops the intruder and wins the hand of Pasquinot's daughter.



Lucille Bell, freshman nursing student, in the part of Sylvette Pasquinot, will add another characterization to her past dramatic experiences, although she will be making her debut for Belle Masque. At Our Lady of Good Council High School, Newark, Lucille starred as "Amy" in Little Women and held leads in two French plays. For her Senior Play last year, she handled the choreography and direction of the chorus.

New Talent Emerges

Stan McGeehan, sophomore engineer, who "has never set foot on a stage before," will come under the spotlight for the first time as Percinet. The part allows for some great humorous interpretation, and will be one of the best instigators of an enjoyable evening.

Walt Doyle, junior English major, will enter the night of theatrics in the person of Bergomin, the father of Percinet. Pasquinot, Sylvette's marriage-happy parent, will be enacted by Paul Gormley, sophomore Arts student. Bernie Finan, senior English major and experienced in Belle Masque and T&T, will cover the character of Straforel, the abductor.

The walk-ons, parts of Ethiopian slaves, are in the capable hands of Jack Lavery, who is co-managing the stage work of "Harvey," and Jim Mink, senior C&F, and Student Council representative for the IRC. The musician for the production is Gino Gallina, junior Education major.

Bambury Stresses Unity During DPM Initiations

That kid with the mismatched shoes wandering through Mendel Hall—he wasn't late rolling out of the rack. He's a pledge in Delta Pi Mu Fraternity.

The highly shined shoe-sneaker combination is only one of the requirements of the nearly 50 freshmen and sophomores who have "hell night" to look forward to next Monday night.

Besides the shoes, the Beau Brummels are sporting berets, sunglasses, white scarves, stick pins, pipes, white gloves—and a brick.

But that's not all. The pledges are memorizing two verses each day of "Face on the Bar Room Floor." And they'll have to collect signatures of all big brothers.

Pledgemaster Jim Bambury said this plan was adopted to help weld a bond of unity among the fraternity brothers and the pledges.

And in slicking up their paddles, pledges have an incentive: Bambury said the owners of the two paddles voted outstanding will get free fraternity beer mugs.

Assisting Bambury with the pledging are Hugh Humphreys, Bill Dunn, Jim Borden, Owen Hickey, Dick Fitzpatrick and Bob Ford.

Under Gilligan's Leadership:

Rifle Team Breaks 1400; NRA Matches Approaching

For the first time in the history of Villanova, the spirited rifle team has hit the big time. Under the forceful and aggressive leadership of John H. Gilligan, the team has reached a new height and expects to go in no other direction than up.

They cracked 1400 points in their last match, beating the powerful varsity team of Drexel Institute of Technology. The fifteen man squad, inspired by their recent success, are determined to make a name for the Villanova Rifle team at the National Rifle Association sectional matches, which are to be held at West Point on Mar. 19.

Jack Kelly
Jazz Concert Chairman

The National Rifle Association Competition is the meeting place of the most powerful teams in the East. The competition will be as rugged as possible. All the area schools and the R. O. T. C. units as well as the dangerous and well balanced military teams at West Point will be present. If the team can make a good showing in this affair they will receive national recognition. This lively squad has great expectations and has the quality of men to enforce them.

Coach Highly Pleased

Master Sergeant John E. Waryha USMC, is highly pleased with the youths under him, but he said, "we can, should, and will do better; this is not the time to sit back and relax, there is always room for improvement." Sergeant Waryha has worked hard with his boys and the results show that his time was not wasted.

Competition for next year will include such power - packed teams as Western Maryland. Other possibilities are Georgetown and Fordham.

Representatives of the squau have been more than successful at the civilian competitions which were held at West Chester and Southampton by the National Rifle Association. Under the banner of Villanova University such sharpshooters as Passeralla and Hank Miller have placed in various matches. Villanova, by the way, is the only college in the area which has entered this fierce competition.

The Pistol team has had its ups and downs this year but they have faced competition which is of the highest caliber. They have competed against service men, police sharp shooters and bank guards with a better than average showing. They have faced men who have been firing for as long as 20 or 30 years. "That type of person just doesn't get disturbed on the firing line," said the Sarge.

Lou Padula walked home with first place in the slow fire contest a short while ago and Caesar Trunzo, captain, captured first place in the rapid fire contest.

candidates. Forgarty polled 127 of the 325 ballots cast. Rudegeair's victory was not quite so decisive, but with 75 votes, he was 31 ahead of runner up Terry Hayes.

Both winners, who are regular midshipmen, thanked all their engineering buddies who helped them win by posting signs and talking up the winning ticket. Fogarty and Rudegeair said they "would try to live up to the faith their classmates had placed in them."

They said they would try to represent the first year men "as they should be represented." The winners explained this by saying they thought their classmates showed plenty of spirit in supporting dances and sports events.

permission barriers that might exist at night. The afternoon sessions also make it a good bit easier for groups of woman's college students to attend in a crowd, or with dates. Afternoon schedules should not interfere on two consecutive days.

Informal Theme

The shows will proceed on a "Jazz-in-the-Round" idea, with Condon's group situated on or immediately in front of the Field House stage, with everyone sitting about in a semi-circle on the gym floor. If attendance requires, the bleachers will also be utilized; there will be no problem of hearing these boys. An entirely informal atmosphere will be the theme of the shows; students are urged to bring pillows to suit upon, if they like, and vendors will sell refreshments through the crowd, since the 10-minute intermission would allow too little time for buying drinks.

Week Complete

The signing of Condon completes the actual preparatory negotiation for Junior Week performers. The rest is all a matter of planning and completion of plans in a myraid of phases. All Juniors are requested to donate their services in some manner by contacting class officers or chairmen of various events.

Oriental Atmosphere

The Field House will take on an Oriental atmosphere for the Shamokinaki. Jake and his crew, including Decorations Chairman Phil Butler, will set up a Japanese archway inside the door to the dance floor.

And a pagoda will be constructed in the center of the floor.

Sinnott and other members of the Shamokinaki committee have promised themselves they will sell 1000 tickets and there's a chance they might do it, according to Sinnott.

Ticket Chairman Jim Michener and his peddlers have urged students to "buy before Friday night." Of course tickets will be on sale at the Field House Friday night.

Other chairmen working on the project are Steve Bernocco, refreshments; Harry Nash, campus publicity; Carl Schreiber, outside publicity.

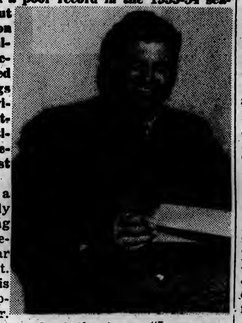
Sports Chatter

Successful Swim Season



By Joe Heaps

Swimming is becoming big-time at Villanova. From the quiet beginning last year, after a twelve year lapse, the sport has grown in importance until now the Villanova swimming program has gained nation-wide recognition.

The foremost cause for this development of interest and prestige is, of course, the Wildcats swimming team, coached by former LaSalle tank star Ed Geisz.

1953-54 Season a Success

As expected, the club had a poor record in the 1953-54 season, winning only two meets out of eleven. However, the season could hardly be termed a failure, because the experience acquired and the interest inspired paved the way for better things in the future. This was evidenced by the 6-5-1 record posted this year, including a startling upset over previously undefeated Georgetown in the last outing of the campaign.

Those who would say that a record which is only slightly over the .500 mark is nothing to get excited about, must remember that the team is far from being a veteran outfit. Every member of the team is a sophomore, except team captain Pat Keane. Pat is a junior.

Coach Geisz has this to say about the team, "I am very pleased with this season's performances. I have high hopes for Villanova's future in swimming."

Couig Shows Talent

Several natators have been standouts for the club this year. The most brilliant performer was Don Couig. A real workhorse for the team, Don has made it a habit of winning two events and leading off for the 300 yard medley relay. Another three-event swimmer is Bob Duffy. A specialist in the sprints, Bob is also a freestyle relay member. Smiling Kean has been a dependable anchor man all season for both relay teams.

Consistent results turned in by all members of the swimming team, though, have been more pertinent to team success than individual efforts. Geisz says that the club has "more harmony," than last year's, and that Lee Sykes, Jim Donnelly, Dennis Rinkacs, Don Nalty, Wally Ulrich, Lse Carson, Paul Donahue, George Sinnott, George Allen and Dick Harris have all been contributors to the improvement of the Villanova tank record.

Even more balance is expected next year, when Coach Geisz will have the benefit of this season's talented frosh swimmers. Among the freshman who will be counted on heavily during the 1955-56 season are Lou Schoener, Mike Klesius, Lou Pinto, Bob McMullen, Mike Rafferty, John Flynn, John Bogan and Tom Wieman.

Several activities held in the Field House pool have also made swimming a better-known sport at Villanova.

Meet Televised

The appearance of the famous Michigan swimming team in an exhibition meet with the Wildcats early in February brought a crowd of 500 to the Villanova pool. In addition, television films, through 62 stations, carried the meet to all parts of the country. Incidentally, Michigan more than lived up to its reputation, setting seven pool records during the afternoon.

Besides stimulating interest by their brilliant performances, the Michigan merman also aided the Villanova swim cause by giving demonstrations in the arts and techniques of championship swimming.

Another important swimming activity held at Villanova was the National Catholic Interscholastic Swimming Championships which was held last Saturday. The purpose of this all-star meet is to promote swimming in Catholic high schools.

We hope that the enthusiasm displayed this year for swimming is a forerunner for added student interest in all school sports, both major and minor.

Frosh End Season With 11-4 Record; Kelly Top Scorer

By Bob Mulcahy

Steady improvement would aptly characterize the progress of Villanova's Freshman basketball team this season. The culmination of the year's efforts was a double overtime tie 91-91 with the Seton Hall frosh in the season's finale which left their record at eleven wins and seven defeats.

Playing their best ball of the year, the Kittens overcame a 14 point deficit in the last eight minutes of regulation time and forced the overtime sessions. The outstanding play of Frank Singsheim and Jack Kelly 28 and 26 points respectively, featured the comeback.

The season was full of ups and downs for the frosh. After rolling up two straight victories including one over the Loyola frosh, they suffered succesive setbacks at the hands of West Catholic of Philadelphia, champions of the Catholic league. Prior to the end of the first semester the Kittens lost two heartbreakers in the Palestra, one to St. Joseph's College Frosh 72-70 in overtime and 80-79 to the Penn Freshmen.

In return engagements, Villanova beat Penn 73-69, as Henry Nichols turned in a fine performance, and lost again to St. Joe's 58-54.

Then the Frosh started rolling and knocked off Brown Prep., Atlantic City Naval Air Station and Perkiomen School, scoring 87 points or more in each game. The season-ending tie with Seton Hall followed.

Muldoon Semester Addition

The late season success could be traced to the fact that Coach Maje McDonnell finally settled on a definite starting five. Tom Brennan, Frank Singsheim and Jack Kelly formed the nucleus of every lineup. Jim Muldoon, former Southern High School (Phila.) star, who enrolled at the second semester, and Ralph DiFronzo rounded out the squad that won consistently in the latter part of the campaign. DiFronzo was slowed down earlier in the year by an ankle injury, but recovered to spark Villanova's late season drive.

Newman Valuable

At various times during the season Connie Newman, Nichols, Jim Hunt appeared in the starting lineup, and turned in capable performances. Against St. Joseph's, Newman played his best game, scoring twenty-six points, and often stealing the ball and starting the fast break.

Singsheim as the play maker and backcourt man on the team. His 28 points was one of the principal reasons for the comeback and tie with Seton Hall. The two big men, Brennan and Kelly, did most of the defensive board work and a good share of the scoring. Kelly led the point parade with an average of 20.1 and a total of 382 points. Eight times during the recent campaign Kelly scored twenty-six points or more in a single game, once hitting forty.

Rebound Ace John Cirino Assumes Starting Role

By Bob Strayton

An asset to any basketball team is a man who has rebounding ability. In the case of Villanova, with its evident lack of height, such a person is almost indispensable. The Wildcats had just the man to fill the bill this season.

Against the many tall teams which Villanova faced during the course of its schedule, John Cirino's rebounding ability proved invaluable. The Fordham game, for example, was evidence enough of Cirino's backboard talents. During that debacle, John contributed three tap-ins to the bucket, aside from pulling down almost half of the defensive rebounds. That, however, is merely one example of John's ability. Seton Hall, Georgetown, N. C. State, and others felt the impact of his ball-snatching.

New York Import

One of the few New York representatives on the team, Cirino is a native Malverne, Long Islander. While playing for his home town high school, John made a name for himself in scholastic basketball circles as a fine scorer and rebounder.

He averaged 17 points a game, and was the district's high scorer, largely on the accuracy of a deadly corner jump shot. He was also noted for his rebounding, which seems to come natural to John; and held all the district records in that department. As a result, he was nominated for an All-Scholatic berth.

Cino did not confine his talents to basketball while in high school. He was an end on Malverne's football team for three year's but quit football in his senior year when he was named captain of the basketball team, a squad which he led to an undefeated record in the 1951-52 campaign.

Paced Frosh

When he came to Villanova, he paced the Freshman team. His rebounding aided the Frosh in winning every game they played.

Last year, when he was only a sophomore, John caught the eye of Al Severance, who promptly installed John as a "member-in-good-standing" on the first team. The green club which Villanova floored that year had three starting sophomores, and John was outstanding in his collegiate debut. He nailed down over 300 rebounds during the season, surpassed only by Captain Andy Devine. He was also the third highest scorer on the team, averaging 9.1 points per game, and scoring 282 markers for the season.

Alternated As Starter

This year, because of the large crop of talented sophomores to join the team this season, John has been alternating at the starting post. Nevertheless, his performances have been consistently superior, and his aid to the team has been invaluable.

In looking ahead to next season, John's outlook is, at best, reserved. In his own words, the friendly popular, Marketing major feels that "the team is certainly going to miss Schaf's scoring ability and John's (Devine's) leadership on the court, but I think that the team will do pretty well, nevertheless."

Jim Moran

sive two and a half month track schedule. He continued it had helped him ward off colds and the flu that had every member of the track team plagued during the season.

The use of weights for trackmen is rapidly becoming basic groundwork in preparation for the coming season says Jim. Runners such as John Landy of Australia, Roger Bannister of England and Mal Whilfield all have used weights and recommend them highly. Of course it must be mentioned that there are particular exercises in which trackmen must perform to gain maximum benefit. The weighlifting program should not be followed unless one has consulted someone who has had experience with them.

Upon graduation in June from the Commerce and Finance school Jim expects to be drafted.

Life-Saving Well Attended; Student Interest Is High

The Intramural - sponsored Senior life-saving course, which is being conducted under the auspices of the National Red Cross, was begun last week at the Field House pool. An unexpectedly large turn-out of 55 students attended the opening qualification session of the course.

Instructions, which are being given by three juniors, Bill Meyer, Roy Zimmerman, and Dick Moore, are tentatively scheduled to be held on four nights during the week. Lessons will be held on alternate nights, a Monday and Wednesday group, and a Tuesday and Thursday group, announced Meyer last week. The reason is that great interest is shown in the course by so many students.

Tests Required

The course, which started last night, is being taken by some fifty students who qualified by completing the required tests given by the instructors.

The course will continue for a period of four weeks during which time students will required to learn such fundamentals as the proper approach, break and carry techniques. At the conclusion of the month's training, the participants will be required to take a written examination on the subjects of pool safety and methods of life-saving.

Completion of the requirements will entitle students to a Red Cross approved senior life-saving certificate, which should prove especially helpful to anyone interested in working as a life-guard or pool attendant during the summer months.

VU Singers: "Look Up, Gentlemen!"

From Honest Toil and a Dean's Perseverance Has Emerged A Choral Group Worthy of a University

Three of the Singers' officers—Vice-president John Janucel, President Conrad Urban and secretary Bob Ford, look over some newly-acquired musical selections.

Dean Reuschlein
Villanova Singers Director

The Singers hold forth at the Palestra with "Halls of Ivy," in collaboration with Penn's Glee Club. Dean Reuschlein is directing the group.

The men in the group double also in secular music, singing for evening chapel and for Masses. Formerly named the Schola Cantorum, the organization now lists some 80 members on its rolls.

The organization also provides chances for informal harmony. Here John Janucci, Joe Valenti, Mike Barry, Lou Cassella, Richie Dunne and Conrad Urban gather around the piano for some pre-practice enjoyment.

By President Conrad Urban

For many years Villanova lacked a good singing organization, but in September of 1952 a glee club was formed, and the following spring this glee club presented their one and only concert: a joint affair with the concert band. It received only polite applause. With this the Villanova Glee Club promptly disbanded.

During that year there was also an organization on campus for the singing of sacred music, the Schola Cantorum. At that time the Schola boasted a membership of 20 men. Under the able direction of Father Saelman this small group made up with quality what it lacked in quantity. The choir had an extensive repertoire of one mass and several short hymns, which they presented at the annual retreat.

The following year returning members found that Father Saelman had been transferred, and so the Schola had no director. Fortunately, however, the Dean of Villanova's newly-opened Law School, Dr. Harold Gill Reuschlein, was discovered to have been an experienced choir director. The group approached Dean Reuschlein and he accepted.

The next step in rebuilding the Schola was a recruiting campaign in order to build a good-sized organization around the small nucleus which remained from the previous year. This campaign raised the membership to 40 singers. Officers were elected, and the Schola Cantorum, for the first time in five years was beginning to look like a solid organization. They added to their repertoire another mass, several motets, and a large number of miscellaneous hymns. Before the Christmas vacation, the Schola made an appearance at the Faculty Dinner. The performance was a mild success, but at least it was a spirit in the right direction. During the second semester, Schola made several appearances, singing for the retreat and for the Mothers' Day Mass during Junior Week. The performances became progressively better.

At the end of the year, the possibility of extending the Schola into the realm of secular music was considered. The plan was to have the Schola act as both a choir and a glee club under the name of the Villanova Singers. Dean Reuschlein and Father McLaughlin, Dean of Student Activities, both approved the plan and the Villanova Singers became a reality.

This year the Singers have increased in membership to almost 80 voices. They performed successfully at the Annual Faculty Dinner and at the Senior Concert-Dance. In addition to these performances, the organization appeared jointly with the University of Pennsylvania's Glee Club at the Palestra. This informal gathering was not a popular success because of poor acoustics, but with more careful preparation it could become a successful annual event. The Singers are planning to entertain at Rosemont, Immaculata, and Chestnut Hill within the next several weeks.

In their capacity as a choir, the group has sung at weekly chapel exercises. They will also sing for the Mothers' Day Mass and for the annual retreat.

As both a choir and a glee club the Singers put in many hard hours of rehearsal, but the members have proven themselves equal to the task.

The Villanova Singers have grown from a poor, disorganized handful of men into a promising organization which in the near future could be one of the best college singing groups in the country.

Goings-On of Fraternities, Societies, Publications, Clubs, Faculty Groups

AIEE - IRE

Villanova's A.I.E.E.-I.R.E. electrical engineering society presented Mr. John Wentworth of R.C.A. Victor last Wednesday night in a discussion of "Color Television."

Mr. Wentworth detailed the problems encountered in developing a "compatible" Color TV system and explained the processes involved in overcoming them. Informal discussion and refreshments followed the meeting.

The AIEE-IRE Newsletter, official organ of the campus chapter, has announced that a field trip to the Pennsylvania Railroad's 30th Street Station in Philadelphia is scheduled for tomorrow afternoon.

CLUBS NOTE:

Campus organizations have been requested to submit nominations for next year's offices to the Student Activities Office by Friday.

Rev. George McLaughlin, O. S. A., Dean of Student Activties, said that names can then be processed immediately. Names are submitted for approval to the dean's office, registar's office and chaplain's office.

Whether elections are held immediately is left up to the individual organization, Father McLaughlin added.

Names of nominees should be listed alphabetically in full, with the University division of which the nominee is a member.

PHYSICS CLUB

Continuing its active program schedule, the Physics Club offers a lecture and film tomorrow morning at 10:30 in the Physics Lab.

Besides the Navy film, "Introduction to Radar," members will hear a lecture by Club President Dave Vachon on "The Operation of the Oscilloscope."

Vachon issued a special invitation to underclass science majors.

DPM

Mr. Donald T. Collins, associate professor in Villanova's Law School, will defend a mock murder trial before a monthly meeting of Delta Pi Mu Fraternity tomorrow at 7:15 p. m. in 201 C & F.

President John De Remigis said orders for fraternity pins may still be placed with Owen Hickey, either at the meeting or in 232 Good Counsel.

FACULTY GROUP

At its last meeting, the Faculty Discussion Group heard Dr. Walter Klein discuss "The Implication of Economic Analysis for Just Prices." A lively discussion ensued, concerning the relations between ethics and economics.

It was pointed out that there are two schools of thought on the subject:

1) that economics is a descriptive science; and,

2) that it is a normative science.

All members agreed that the economist must be aware of the social responsibility of his theories. They gave as an example rent control, and considered the implications of government intervention with emphasis on socialism.

ACCOUNTING SOC'Y

Accounting Society members will complete nomination of officers today during accounting classes. Nominations were held yesterday and today during the three sophomore and two junior accounting sections.

Jim De Maioribus is chairman of the nominations committee.

A representive of the International Business Machine Co. will show a motion picture demonstrating all types of accounting machines at a meeting tomorrow at 10:30 a.m. in C & F Auditorium.

President Joe Dorris also announced the society's annual banquet will be held the night of Apr. 20 in either the Wynnemore Inn or Conestoga Mill. Don Fahey has been appointed chairman of the entertainment for the banquet.

MENDEL BULLETIN

Material for the Mendel Bulletin should be submitted by next Tuesday, according to Editor Robert Chmielewski.

Tom Gumina

MEDICAL COLLEGE TEST

Students planning to enter medical school in the fall of 1956 should make application to take the Medical College Admission Test immediately.

The test will be administered May 7 and Oct. 31. Medical schools reportedly prefer candidates to take the earlier test.

Applications, which must be received by the Educational Testing Service by Apr. 23, may be obtained in 319 Mendel.

LKD

Lambda Kappa Delta Fraternity will nominate candidates for next year's offices at a meeting in the general biology lab tomorrow at 10:30 a. m.

Earlier, President Tom Gumine announced the fraternity's annual dinner dance will be held Apr. 16 at the Broadwood Hotel in Philadelphia.

Dinner will be served at 7:30 p. m. and dancing will follow until 1.

For reservations members should see Gumina, Don Rosato, Henry Sweeney or Floyd Nasuti.

DPM

Delta Pi Mu Fraternity has submitted the names of 29 nominees for six positions to the Student Activities Office.

President John De Remigis said election of president, vice-president, corresponding and recording secretaries, treasurer and Student Council representative will take place "in about six weeks."

DPE

Members of Delta Pi Epsilon have a "startling announcement waiting for them at their next meeting Mar. 22, according to President Bruce Stark.

Although he would not give details about the announcement, Stark said he hoped a larger number of fraternity brothers would turn out than were present at the last meeting Thursday night.

Meanwhile, Treasurer Lou Donatelli announced that deadline for payment of dues is also Mar. 22. Members may leave the dues with the treasurer (207 Sullivan).

Social Chairman John Fitzpatrick is currently making plans for the fraternity's annual dinner dance later in the spring.

T n' T

Turf and Tinsel business staff members will make progress reports at a meeting tonight at 8 in the T 'n T Office, according to Bill Reich, one of the business managers.

ICG Conference At VU Includes 200 Collegians

Very Rev. J. A. Donnellon, O. S. A., President of the University, has acknowledged an invitation to address the delegates to the Southeastern Region Convention of the Intercollegiate Conference of Government of the State of Pennsylvania, to be held at Villanova on Saturday.

Dr. Khouri
ICG Moderator

Father Donnellon will address the morning session of delegates who will represent eleven colleges and universities in the area. The Convention will follow the form of a Model State Legislature. Committee meetings will be held in the morning and a general assembly session in the afternoon.

200 Delegates

Some two hundred or more delegates from Bryn Mawr, Rosemont, Haverford, Swarthmore, Immaculata, Temple, Harcum, Drexel, University of Pennsylvania, West Chester, and Villanova will propose and discuss model legislation in preparation for the State ICG Convention. The State Convention, to be held in Harrisburg April 21-23, will be the 21st annual convention of the model government group.

Recent ICG meetings have been devoted to the drafting of Villanova's bills for presentation on Saturday. Tom Mentzer, Secretary-Treasurer of the campus organization, will preside over the Local Government Committee at the Regional meeting.

Most arrangements for the convention, to be held in the C&F Building and the Field House, are already completed, Chairman Don Seaton stated last week. Phil Taddeo, Ken Pyle, Guy Milne, Basil Sullivan and Frank Psyk, serving as an arrangments committee, have taken care of the various necessities for the meeting.

Dr. Fred J. Khouri, ICG moderator, and three members will represent Villanova at the 1955 Citizenship Clearing House to be held at the University of Pennsylvania on March 25 and 26.

Council Meeting Enlivened by Infirmary Charge

Requests for an investigation of "inadequate" infirmary facilities and a separate retreat for Villanova co-eds have been passed on to the Student-Faculty Committee by the Student Council.

Both motions were carried unanimously and topped a long list of business touched by Council.

Meanwhile a plan suggested by Council to have students reserve rooms in the order of rank in class according to cumulative averages was turned down by the administration after considerable discussion.

Council Chairman Dick Winfield said both Council and the administration decided that the plan was "unworkable this year."

Winfield expressed the hope that the system might prove workable next year.

Gunther Proposes Check

The investigation of the infirmary was proposed by Belle Air Editor Frank Gunther.

Gunther cited, in his motion, lack of adequate number of employees: a problem of meals (breakfast at 8:15, lunch at 11:30 and supper between 2:30 and 3:30); and a lack of facilities (approximately 12 beds available in an infirmary serving more than 110 resident students).

Rev. George A. McLaughlin, O. S. A., Dean of Student Activities and Council moderator, volunteered to bring the matter before the administration.

Well-Advanced Plans in Motion For Junior Week

What with all wide-scale planning and negotiations completed, chairman and officers of the Junior Class got down to more tedious details last week in preparation for a rapidly-approaching Junior Week.

Jazz Times 4-6

Primarily, Jazz Concert chairman Jack Kelly has announced that Eddie Condon's Wednesday-Thursday sessions in the Field House will be held from 4-6 p. m. Advance publicity for the pioneering event via radio, television, newspaper, and posters has been in the works for the past several weeks. Kelly has added that a program on Condon's background and style in particular and the two-day events in general are in the planning stage for the shows.

Father's Day On, Announces Ford

SENIORS NOTE:

Seniors who expect to graduate in June should report to the Office of the Vice-President immediately.

Seniors planning to attend the class' Father's Day, scheduled for April 23, should register in the Pie Shoppe sometime tomorrow between 9 and 2.

Class President Bud Ford announced last week that the celebration, under the direction of Bob Casey, would be held.

There was some question whether the Father's Day would be held after the class went into debt over its Senior Weekend.

Ford Hints

But Ford hinted that the concert dance last month cleared up the debt enough to make the Father's Day possible.

The registration has been set up to give Casey and his committee an accurate count on the number of seniors who plan to attend with their fathers.

In this way, the planning committee will be able to divide proposed expenses for the day and decide a workable ticket price.

This will be the second consecutive time that the day has been held in the spring. In 1953, the seniors entertained their papas for the first time in almost 20 years.

Prominent Speaker

Although Ford announced no definite plans, there is a chance that a prominent speaker will be obtained to close the day's festivities.

In former years, the activities were opened with mass in the Chapel. Then seniors and their fathers took in athletic events scheduled for that day.

On April 23, the Villanova varsity baseball team plays host to St. Peter's of Jersey City.

May Social Event For Sophomores Yet Undecided

The University's Sophomore Class has not yet made definite plans for a proposed social event later this spring.

A date in May has been set aside for the class by Rev. George L. McLaughlin, Dean of Student Activities.

However, Class President Jack O'Rourke said not even tentative plans had been made. And he said he did not know when he would call another class meeting.

The sophomores last convened during examination week in January to decide the blazer question. Rogers Peet, has promised delivery of the jackets by Apr. 1.

Getting back to the class event plans, O'Rourke said some sophomores wanted the affair closed to second year men, but other members of the class wanted freshmen included.

O'Rourke said he favored inclusion of the freshmen.

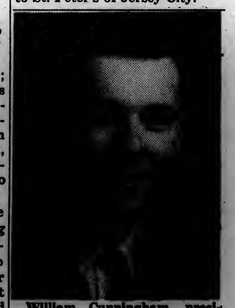
Belle Masque Opening Night Week Away:

"Harvey" Nears Readiness

Tickets for the forthcoming Belle Masque production, "Harvey," got off to a landsliding start of sales in the Pie Shoppe yesterday.

With the entrance of "Harvey" only a week away, Tom Curran, chairman of ticket sales, kicked off the drive with a not too surprisingly optimistic, "There's going to be a sell-out of tickets unsurpassed by any previous shows." The tickets are priced at $1.00 for students and $1.50 for adults. They can be obtained from any member of Belle Masque in the Pie Shoppe from 9:30 to 3:30.

The play, which is in itself fantastically hilarious, is catapulted to greater heights by the highly experienced and able cast.



Proved Talent

Bernie Coyne, who heads the exceptional group, will step into the shoes of Elwood P. Doud, his seventh stellar role for Belle Masque along the course of four years of dramatics. In "Rope," Bernie held the limelight as Granillo; in Julius Caesar, he starred as the crafty Cassius; last year he drew applause as Crichton in "Admirable Crichton" and in "Stalag 17" as Hoffman, the barracks leader. In the Society's last presentation, the well received "Command Decision," he once more came to the fore.

"HARVEY" DATES
Thursday, March 23
Friday, March 24
Saturday, March 25
Students—$1.00,
Adults—$1.50
Curtain—8 p. m.
Field House

Bernie won't be alone in the glory of "Harvey." Sharing the stage are five other headliners of Belle Masque, who have, incidently, held major roles in almost all of the past shows. Bob Erskine will hold down the part of Dr. Crumley. This will be his fourth appearance in top drama renditions.

Lenten Soul-Searching

Next Sunday is Laetare Sunday, the halfway point in Lent.

Now is an ideal time for the Catholic student to pause to consider just how much spiritual profit he is making during this season of penance.

At least judging from the number of Communions every day in the University chapel, we suspect that many Villanovans are making good use of the opportunities that Lent gives. But still the number at daily Mass represents only a minority of the resident students.

It may be argued, and quite correctly, that most of those are not receiving daily Communion are still performing some other form of penance and are honestly trying to make as good a Lent as possible. That is very true. We are not implying that those who are not receiving Communion are not every bit as good Catholics as those who do. We merely wish to suggest that they are unwillingly neglecting the best means of perfecting themselves spiritually.

After all, the graces which can be obtained from the reception of Communion and attendance at Mass are infinitely greater than those which can be obtained by any other form of mortification or good works. The Catholic who wishes to make the best possible Lent should use the most effective means available. At least in the case of the resident students, daily Communion is definitely an available means, and, as we have just said, it is the most effective channel of grace in existence.

The conclusion is inescapable. To make a Lent that will yield the richest spiritual harvest, be at the Communion rail every day for the second half of Lent, even if you weren't for the first half.

New Deadline Cheered

Within the last two weeks we have noticed a number of heads of activities scurrying hither and yon trying to schedule emergency meetings to hold nominations in accordance with the new rule of the Dean of Student Activities requiring that the names of all nominees be turned in by last Friday.

Now that the hurrying and special meetings have ended we can pause and ask ourselves whether or not the change in deadlines was wise. Really, was it worth all the extra work it caused?

For our part, we think the change decidedly a good one. The benefits from it will not be felt immediately but will definitely be appreciated by the time elections are held in May.

First of all, from the administration's point of view, there will be less pressure of deadlines to be made in checking on the acceptability of the nominees.

From the point of view of the students, there are far more important benefits to be gained. There will be more time for the student to evaluate the candidates and determine their views on the organization's policies.

There is also an important advantage for the organizations. The various groups will be free to hold their elections early and can thereby make sure of their heads before the class elections.

Polls Show Mixed Opinions On Villanova Forum Issue

By Bob Ford

A few years ago this institution sponsored the Villanova Forum, an agency devoted to bringing to Villanova speakers qualified in different fields of endeavor. In the spring of 1952, because of poor administrative planning and lack of support on the part of the students, the Forum failed. There has been considerable agitation of late to reorganize the Forum, and it is with this view that we asked this question of Villanova's student body.

Do you feel that a rejuvenated Villanova Forum would receive the support of the student body?

FORHECZ

TED FORHECZ, Arts General Senior—Although the idea of a Villanova Forum has its merits, I do not feel that it would receive the support of enough students to make it worthwhile. We have at the present time quite a few campus organizations which have had interesting speakers at their meetings. Therefore, I doubt whether the addition of one more agency will implant within the typical Villanovan a burning desire to support such a forum.

JIM HEFFERNAN, Pre-law Junior—Very definitely. The Forum would afford the students the opportunity of hearing those experienced in different fields which cannot always be covered in the classroom. These discussions would be beneficial in helping the students to particularize in their fields after graduation. Part of a college education is the broadening of our knowledge and I can think of no better way than through these lectures. I am sure there are many who feel as I do and will support the Forum.

HEFFERNAN

JACK DECKER, Civil Engineer Sophomore—Yes, I do feel that a rejuvenated Forum could get the support of the student body. That is, if the originating student-faculty members really try to get the agency underway and keep it active.

I believe that, given enough publicity and with the proper backing, both financially and physically the Forum would be of great assistance to many of the undergraduate students. It would also give many of the prominent businessmen of this area an opportunity of getting a good look at Villanova.

WILFRED QUINN, Education Junior—It is very doubtful that a Forum would receive a continual and majority support. This judgment stems from the evidence afforded by the interest shown in the past toward similar activities of a non-obligatory nature. This judgement, of course, abstracts from the possibility of combining circumstances initiating a temporary, even though large, support.

The few times each week that I try to hit the books, some joker in Fedigan Hall comes knocking on the door, usually for a bull-session of some sorts, but sometimes with ulterior motives. Furthermore, the day that this character comes hounding around is usually a Friday.

"Hey, Frank,"

"What?"

"Got a date this weekend?"

"Yeah, why?"

"Oh, I just wondered." Silence.

"Frank,"

"What?"

"What are the chances of getting me a date for tonight?"

"Tonight!"

"I know it's a little late, but you know how it goes . . . "

"Will you take any kind of a date?"

"Sure, sure." Twenty minutes and three telephone calls pass.

"Okay, you've got a date. Pick her up at Motley Hall."

Friend exits, re-enters thirty seconds later.

"Frank,"

"What?"

"What's she like?"

"Who?"

"My date."

"What date?"

"The date you just got me."

"Oh . . . she's a nice girl."

A brief pause.

"Frank,"

"What's she like?"

"She's great; all the girls are crazy about her."

"Oh?"

"Yeah, she has a great personality."

"Sure, sure, they all do, but . . ."

Enter third citizen of Fedigan Hall. "They, Frank, I hear that you finally got your cousin a date."

The needy one. "Hmmmm . . . what time . . . do I pick her up?"

"7:30 . . . You do want the date, don't you?"

"Yeah . . . Yeah, Frank. Sure."

lyn. Blue-eyed with brown hair, Kathy is 5' 3½" tall and weighs 118 lbs.

Contest Closes April 9

Remember, Juniors, the Contest closes April 9, just a little over three weeks away. It is necessary to act quickly in order to be eligible for a virtually free Prom and Dinner Dance. Too, those who get their dates' pictures in early will have the opportunity of seeing these pictures published in the Villanovan.

Rules Reviewed

For those who might have forgotten, here's a review of the General Rules of the Contest;

1. All members of the Junior Class are eligible to submit one picture.

2. Pictures, preferably at least 5"x7", must be submitted to the Villanovan office or to the rooms of Harry Nash (242 Good Counsel) or Bob Ford (306 Sullivan) by midnight of April 9. All early entries will be eligible for publication in the Villanovan prior to Junior Week.

3. Judging will be done by pictures only and all pictures will be returned immediately after Junior Week.

4. All pictures must be accompanied by the following information on a separate piece of paper attached to the picture or on the back of the picture: girl's name, address, age, height, weight, color of eyes, color of hair, present occupation, schools attended; also, Junior's name, campus or home address, telephone number, and school in the University (arts, C&F, engineering, etc.).

Sybil Connelly, noted Irish fashion designer, will appear at the Irish Cultural Olympics Mar. 26, according to Rev. Daniel P. Falvey, O. S. A., librarian and director of the Olympics.

The designer, who recently arrived in the United States from Ireland, was featured in a picture spread of a national magazine several weeks ago.

Father Falvey said fashion-conscious Americans had been looking forward to her appearances around the country.

Tickets will be on sale at Villanova and Gimbels.

Saint's Life Provides Model For Marriage

By Tom Mentzer

For a long, long time now, two concurrent phases have usually governed the relationship between men and women. These are the pre-marital courtship and secondly, the marriage state. In different periods of history in different climes, the concepts of what constituted the proper conduct during these two periods of male-female contact varied considerably. The acceptable "free courtship" of a Samoan islander in pre-missionary days was quite different from the closely chaperoned courtship of a prince in, say, 15th century Europe. Likewise, the monagamous marriage of a sixteenth century English merchant was decidedly contrary to the polygamous marriages of an Indian Sultan of the same age.

But in each of these locations and time periods, there must have been a model or a precedent to which the conduct of the two parties conformed. The conduct exhibited by a famous and powerful leader of the past or the pertinent tenets of the ultimate earthly happiness possible to the individuals concerned—this made Joseph's home one to be emulated.

Men from every age in every walk of life have proved the feasibility of choosing such a guide. St. Thomas More, father, lawyer and saint, is but one of the many who has done so.

Still men dispute the wisdom of such choice. On the American scene some of the members of that distinguished group of authorities, the "ologists," urge that a man let his natural desires have full sway. Let him unharness his urges in courtship so that in marriage he will not be "psychologically unsuited" due to unfamiliarity with this other strange creature.

Intelligent Man

In marriage the intelligent man is quick to discover the key to marital bliss. It is not love, that comes later. Initially the man must receive a sufficiently large house in which to raise his two children. A car and courses in "Marital Adjustment" and "Child Psychology" are other musts. These obtained, together with a few other odds and ends such as a summer cottage, and everybody is happy. That's when the environment is suitable for cultivating love.

Such is the situation to a large degree today. A bit harshly presented, perhaps, but not exceedingly so. With materialism and science holding aloft their shining conception of a model for courtship and of the respective religion of the islander or the Sultan may serve as the model for either of them. For the prince and merchant of a Christian Europe, the primary model was—or at least should have been—the conduct of St. Joseph in relation to Mary.

Joseph, A Model

This might appear to be a rather poor and far-fetched example to hold up to the ordinary man Why, Joseph was a saint. A very correct assertion, we agree. But by no stretch of the imagination does it nullify the right to offer St. Joseph as a fitting model for the proper conduct of men during courtship and marriage. After all, he was a human being just like anyone else. His manhood proceeded his sainthood. The temptations that beset every normal male during courtship are not likely to have sidestepped him.

Nor did the many duties that the titles of husband and father bring bypass St. Joseph. Carpentry provided the means whereby he secured the necessities of life for his family. The joys and sadnesses which are the lot of any father of a household were also Joseph's. These items, typical of the true home in any country in any year, are, however, only the parts which make up the whole family life, LOVE. Love that isn't artificial, but real, founded on a true rational basis, love that is productive marriage, the view of St. Joseph as a model is sometimes clouded. Accordingly, one must disperse this cloud before he makes a choice. The decision is yours, and it must be the right one. Why? Easy, the wrong one might lead to hell!

Campus Groups Urged To Submit JW Talent Entries

Tuesday evening of Junior Week is one occasion during that ambitious social week in May that Juniors and other Villanovans alike may breathe more easily financially.

It is on that night that an entirely new idea—an inter-organization talent contest dubbed "Inter-Club Capers" — will be held, with a band concert preceding and an informal dance following.

Any Active Group

Jim Bambury and Dick Peer, co-chairmen of the day, urge all active campus organizations of all types to submit entries for the contest (from one to five men may make up an entry) to their rooms on the third floor of Sullivan, or to Harry Nash's room, 232 Good Counsel.

Since the contest plans were announced March 2, four organizations have come forth with competitors, including a comic monologue, a singer and a musical combo.

March 31 Deadline

Entry deadline is the end of March, unless the quota, 15 entries, is reached before that date. No admission will be charged, and the evening is open to everyone. It is hoped that, in addition to providing expense-free entertainment, the show will serve to stir up increased interest in extra-curricular participation, and sharpen friendly inter-club rivalries.

Fifteen Entries

The rules are simple:

1. Any active member or members of an organization may take part.
2. Only 15 entries—the first 15 submitted—will be accepted.
3. Contest entry deadline is March 31, midnight.
4. Entries must limit their performance time as much as possible.

Individual awards will be given to the winners, and an additional award to the organization represented.

CHEM SOCIETY

On Monday evening, March 21, the Villanova Chemical Society will present Dr. Raymond C. Bard who will lecture on "Careers in Science". Dr. Bard, associate professor of microbiology at Hahnemann General Hospital and chairman of the department of microbiology at Smith, Kline, and French company of Philadelphia will tie together the opportunities in chemistry, mathematics, and physics through his great experience in biology. The meeting will take place in 215 Mendel hall at 7:30 P. M.

John Gilligan, president of the Villanova Chemical Society, pointed out that the meeting will be beneficial to all science majors and engineering students as well as to anyone desiring further information

In other matters, Council members:

Heard that the administration had turned down a proposal for unlimited cuts for dean's list students because it would not be the "reward it seemed to be."

Heard that the administration had agreed to post exam schedules two to three weeks before exams begin May 23.

Voted down an amendment to have delinquent organizations lose representation on Council.

Defeated Licopoli's motion to have certain halls open to certain classes.

Approved a slate of topics and speakers for a rejuvenated Villanova Forum.

rangements are practically complete. Phil Taddeo, John Henry and Jack Padova are the day's assistant chairmen.

As for Tuesday's band concert, talent show and informal dance, a good bit of interest has been shown by organizations wishing to submit entries.

Gehring Arranges

Greg Gehring, prom chairman, met with officers, moderator Rev. Thomas A. Calpin, O. S. A., and associated chairmen last week and ironed out minor details and assignments involved. Bob Fredericks and Roy Zimmerman, who has also contributed greatly in a planning capacity, will handle favors and programs, and Dick Cross, who took care of the orphans' party very efficiently in a similar assignment, will handle refreshments which include punch in place of the usual coke. Miscellaneous chairman Pete Quinn already has arranged for routine details of staging the dance; publicity chairmen Henry Guerrisi and Mario DiVincenzo are well-advanced in plans for posters and other facets of publicity.

Dinner Dance arrangements are all but complete, chairman Dick Fitzpatrick reports. Tickets have already been sent to chairman Nick Mazzoni, and reservations for tables may be made with him. The installment plan is perking up also, treasurer Jerry Guerrisi has announced.

Mike Clark and Drew Higgins will complete their third stellar attempts in college theatrics. Rounding off the line of experienced thespians, Jack Reardon and Jim Borden, who received deserved high rating from their appearances in "Command Decision", will cover the persons of Judge Gaffney and Wilson respectively.

Jean Ward, Pricilla O'Conner, Maryleyn Dondero, Cecilia Gleason and Ann Kaler will all make their debuts on the Field House stage.

Rev. Wm. J. Krupa, O. S. A., is directing the staging and is capably assisted by Charlie Brockman, a sophomore Arts student.

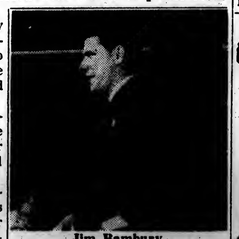
VU Singers Perform For Wives' Group

A social evening replaced the regular business meeting of the Villanova Faculty Wives last Thursday night in C&F Auditorum.

Mrs. Harold Gill Reuschlein, program chairman for the organization, presented the Villanova Singers for a concert and followed with a book report by Mrs. Stanley Morehouse. Mrs. Morehouse's report was delivered on the recent "Doctor to the Island" by Lydia and Tom Davis.

Both parts of the program were well received by an audience swelled in number by the presence of a large group of Augustinian seminarians from Saint Mary's Hall.

Following the social part of the evening, the President of the Faculty Wives Club, Mrs. Creyson ,announced that the annual elections would be held at the next regular meeting.



SHORT STORY CONTEST

The editor of "The LYNX," Rees James, has announced that he is still receiving material for the Short Story Contest which will close April 30. A committee of prominent faculty members is being selected to pick the winners, and the three best short stories will win prizes of $15, $10, and $5 respectively. Anyone who wishes to submit his short story should give it to Rees James, Mr. Mitchell, Dr. Philipson, or any other member of the English Department.

Hazing and 'Hell Night':

Some 60 Pledges Enter DPM; Pledging Reaction Favorable

Delta Pi Mu Fraternity welcomed 59 pledges last night as their week-long "hell week" closed with words of praise from fraternity brothers.

Jim Bambury

Pledgemaster Jim Bambury said big brothers and the vigilante committee established to coordinate the initiation were pleased with the attitude and spirit shown by the pledges.

Reaction of members was especially noteworthy because pledging was kept at a fever pitch despite the length of "hell week."

Last night in C & F Auditorium, the pledges—with paddles for their big brothers in their hands—turned in lists of signatures of all big brothers. Bambury said pledges who lacked signatures were in line for a penalty.

Providing props for the formal initiation were Owen Hickey and Dick Fitzpatrick.

This was the first large scale initiation since the fraternity was reorganized in October, 1953. A large group of pledges were accepted into the fraternity last May, but their initiation was not as extensive as fraternity brothers desired, since the pledging period occurred a week before final examinations.

The telephone was out of order.

Listeners who were attempting to name the "Mystery Melody" during the Wet Wax Works must have felt a bit frustrated when they could not get through to announcer Bill Reich.

The answer, for interested listeners: "Warsaw Concerto" by Mantovani and his Orchestra.

Art Forum and Manuscripts Covered As Olympics Go On

Striking proof of the importance of Villanova's Irish Culturral Olympics came this past week in the form of a telegram from President Eisenhowwer to the Very Rev. James A. Donnellon, O.S.A., university president, which read: "My greetings go to all participants in the opening of this Irish Cultural exhibit at Villanova University. You have my best wishes for success in your effort to increase interest in this part of our heritage."

Added to the President's kind words was a laudatory message from the Minister of External Affairs for Ireland, Liam Cosgrave, as follows: "On the occasion of the opening in Villanova University of the present varied and interesting exhibition of Irish achievement in several different fields, I wish to express my gratitude for your efforts in promoting in America a knowledge of Ireland and of things Irish, and my congratulations on the success which you have attained. I feel sure that your endeavors in this sphere have made known for the first time to many in America the spiritual, cultural, and constructive aspects of Irish life today.

"I send my best wishes for the success of the Exhibition."

From Governor Leader

And from Pennsylvania's Governor Leader came: "It is with a feeling of regret that I will be unable to be with you tomorrow to participate in the initial and original opening of the Irish Cultural exhibit at Villanova. It is my sincerest hope that during the time in which this exhibit is open that the true splendor of the cultural progress of the Irish through the years can be imparted to the maximum number of veiwers. I assure you of my desire for your every success in this endeavor."

The Mayor of Sligo, in Ireland, also sent his best wishes. The Olympics, which includes exhibitions of Irish art, literature, and handicrafts, etc., was opened Mar. 6 with an address by John J. Hearne, Irish Ambassador to the United States.

The schedule of speakers for Olympics in the coming week is:

March 18: Rev. George O'Donnell, L. D., will speak on the "Book of Kells", a discussion of 39 slides on the Book of Kells, covering manuscript illumination, Irish art, Monasticism and reading of manuscripts.

Father O'Donnell is a professor at St. Charles Seminary, Overbrook, and author of a history of the seminary.

Abbey Theatre Talk

Mar. 21: Mrs. Joseph J. Wall talks on the "Abbey Theatre: Its Plays and Players", its importance in the theatrical movement in Ireland, its development into a national theatre, and how it attained international stature.

Mrs. Wall played with the Abbey Theatre for nine years and twice toured this country with the Players.

Mar. 22: Edward J. Monahan discusses "Irish Philosophy" and the Irish contributions to the development and preservation of Philosophy.

Doctor Monahan was born in Canada and received his degrees from the University of Toronto. He is at present on the faculty at Villanova.

Mar. 23: Mr. Gerard Quinn will speak of "Education In Ireland." He will discuss and compare the educational systems in Ireland and the United States.

Mr. Quinn, born in Donegal, received his B. A. and M. A. from University College of Dublin. He is now studying at Penn on a scholarship from the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick.

All addresses start at 8 p.m.

The Library will be open to the public next Sunday and Mar. 27.

Mr. Joseph Ratigan of the English Department speaks on the development of the Irish short story during a session of the Irish Olympics last week in the Library.

Engineers Tour Pennsy Station's Power Systems

A field trip to the Pennsylvania Railroad's 30th Street Station in Philadelphia was held last Thursday by Villanova's A.I.E.E.-I.R.E. electrical engineering society.

Highlighting the excursion were demonstrations of the P.R.R.'s new automatic ticket selling machines, recently installed by the Burroughs Corporation, and the multitude of Intrafax machines used in confirming and making reservations at various stations in the area.

The 12 students were taken on a tour of the traffic and power dispatching units as well as the station's mail-handling facilities.

Accompanying the small group were Rev. John A. Klekotka, O. S. A., head of the E. E. department; Professor John B. Clotheir, and Mr. Raymond Adams, both of the department.

Immediately preceding the group's departure on the field trip, a meeting was held at which 17 men were nominated for the joint society's five offices. Elections are to be held at a later date, announced Chairman Jim Wrzensinski.

There is a meeting tonight on the subject "Owning and Running a Small Electrical Business," announced the society's official organ, the "AIEE-IRE Newsletter." The speaker will be Mr. Cappuzi, owner of the Polyphase Corporation, and the talk will be in 215 Mendel at 7:30 p.m.

Oratorical Competition Set March 30; Aspiring Rifle Team off to West Point

Engage In Tough NRA Matches

University's highly regarded Rifle Team, under the watchful eye of M-Sgt. John E. Waryha, USMC, will leave Friday for the National Rifle Association matches at West Point, to be held Saturday.

Those who will be on the line for Villanova are John Gilligan, Caesar Trunzo, Hank Miller, Walt Gould, Fred Passarella, Stan McGeehan and Al Murgia.

The forthcoming match means much to these men, they feel it is a good opportunity to show what they have. The competition is, however, the strongest in the East.

The team is going to lose two

of its influential members upon graduation in June, Gilligan, who is captain of the squad, and Caesar Trunzo, a spirited member of the rifle team and talented captain of the pistol team.

During the week of Apr. 3, Capt. Martin J. Drury, USN, will judge the pistol matches here at Villanova. These matches are strictly NROTC matches and are held by all naval units throughout the country.

A triangular meet will be held at La Salle Apr. 2. Other teams involved will be La Salle and, Johns Hopkins.

Dick Spangenberg

Engineer Ready

Page proofs and picture cuts for the March issue of the VILLANOVA ENGINEER have been sent to the printer, and the magazine will be distributed sometime this week, announced Editor Dick Spangenberg.

The March issue will feature four articles by four Senior Engineers, one representing each department of the School. The lead article, by Jack Fassett depicts the design and construction of the new Delaware River Bridge in South Philadelphia.

Mike Polgar and James "Spider" McEowen, technical directors of WVIL, have collaborated once again to write an article on the operation of the station's transmitter and broadcasting facilities.

Chemical Engineer Ken Claunch has contributed an article on the re-refining of oil, describing the methods used and the industrial qualifications of the product. Rocco DiAntonio's efforts lead to an exploration of possibilities of a device known as a heat pump. DiAntonio attempts to illustrate how such a device would help conserve our natural resources by utilizing heat present in the air, and he also explains the actually simple principles involved.

In addition, Philosophy major Mark McCormick has contributed a discussion on modern scientific ethics, and the discusion is developed with specific reference to the case of atomic scientist, Dr. Robert Oppenheimer.

Winner Will Go On to Semi-Finals

This year's Villanova Oratorical Contest will be held in the Commerce and Finance Auditorium, Wednesday evening, March 30th at 8. The contestants will vie oratorically for the right to represent Villanova in the semi-final Eastern round of the nation-wide contest sponsored by the New York "Journal American."

Mr. Joseph T. Jonas, Assistant Professor of English, and Moderator of the Beta Gamma Debating Society, who is in charge of the contest, announced that all interested Villanovans are welcome to take part. However, all applicants must make their desire to enter known to Mr. Jonas sometime today.

Each entrant must prepare a five-minute speech on General Robert E. Lee. The subject has been selected in accordance with the regulations of the Journal American Oratorical Committee.

No Villanova winner has ever won the semi-final contest. "Certainly this fact should be incentive enough to any capable student speaker who desires to bring glory to Villanova and himself, "Mr. Jonas commented. Last year's Villanova winner was Thomas Mentzer, Senior History Major.

Past DPM Member Dramatizes Mock Trial for Frat

A former member of Delta Pi Mu Fraternity explained the defense of a murder trial to his fraternity brothers last Thursday night.

Donald M. Collins, associate professor in Villanova's Law School and valedictorian of the Villanova Class of '48, explained the defense of the case of Commonwealth vs. Almeida.

The case, involving a murder during a supermarket robbery in Philadelphia in 1947, took six years to close. It involved arguments in five courts.

Defense counsel for Almeida was Michael Varmershooster.

Mr. Collins took his Bachelor of Law degree from Penn. While at Villanova, he served as chairman of the Student Council and played varsity football.

The speaker was the first Villanova graduate to join the Villanova Law School faculty.

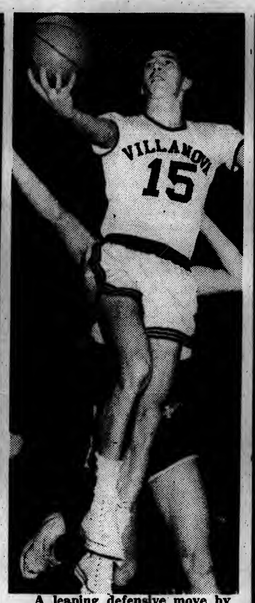
Action in the Garden and the Palestra:



With The Wildcats In The NCAA:

A Picture Story of Al Severance's Lads Against Duke, Canisius and Princeton Photographs by Staff Photographer Richard Schleicher and Otto Guenthoer.

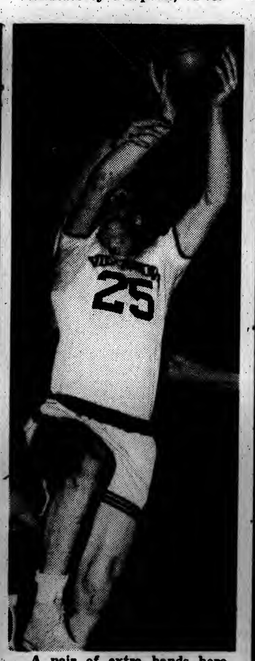
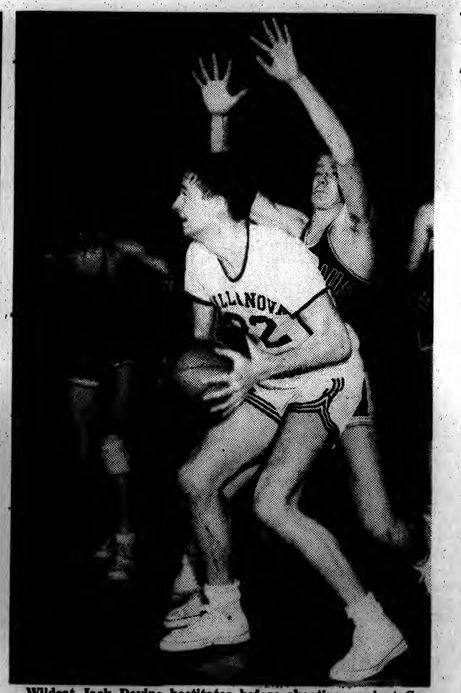
Jack Devine and the basketball are frozen momentarily in action against Princeton's Tigers at the Palestra Saturday night in the NCAA consolation contest, won by Villanova, 64-57.

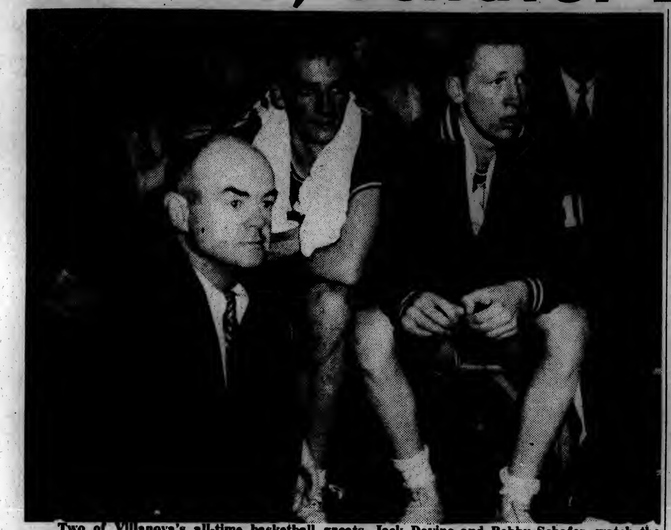


A leaping defensive move by a Duke player fails to deter Villanovan Jack Weissman from his goal—a basket—in the playoffs in New York won by the Wildcats by one point, 74-73.



Bob Schafer has eyes only for the basket as he drives in for lay-up against Duke's Blue Devils in the Madison Square Garden last week in the opening NCAA round.

Bob Schafer's face is contorted as he falls heavily in pursuit of the ball against Duke in New York last week, in victory that brought the 'Cats into the semi-final Canisius battle.



A pair of extra hands here seems to be more of a hindrance than an aid, as Bob Schafer is fouled flagrantly by a Duke courtsman in Garden victory over the Atlantic Coast representatives.

Wildcat Jack Devine hestitates before shooting against Canisius as an opponent makes like a swami behind him in the Field House Friday night.

Devine, Schafer End Careers

Two of Villanova's all-time basketball greats, Jack Devine and Bobby Schafer, watch the final minutes of the Princeton victory Saturday night after playing their final collegiate ball games. Kneeling is trainer Jake Nevin.

Play Final Games Against Canisius, Princeton In NCAA

Bobby Schafer and Jack Devine, the greatest scoring combo in Villanova basketball history, concluded their brilliant careers last week, as the Wildcats were eliminated from the NCAA tournament in the Eastern Regional Finals. Canisius, which proved to be quite a thorn in Villanova's side this season, won a 73-71 thriller from the Severance-men on Friday night, in a game that featured the most weird, controversial finish witnessed this year.

In the dull consolation game the next night the depressed Wildcats played just well enough to win, beating Princeton 64-57. The triumph brought the Mainliners' season log to 18-10.

The Wildcat seniors were both rewarded for their tournament efforts with places on the all-star five. This honor was one of many received by the Philadelphia high school products during their four year varsity careers. Both were placed on the All-City team for the second successive year.

Schafer's Record

Schafer is third in the line of Villanova high scorers, following Paul Arizin and Larry Hennessy, whose career records he surpassed. Bobby created a new Villanova career scoring mark by tallying 33 points against Xavier, and became the tenth player in basketball history to reach the coveted 2000 mark in the LeMoyne game. Schafer concluded his collegiate activity with a total of 2,094. His 632 field goals and 642 fouls are also Villanova records.

Bobby had his greatest single game spree on Jan. 8, 1954, when he scored 15 field goals and 16 fouls at the Palestra to break the record held by Larry Hennessy of 45. Five days earlier the Blonde Bomber tallied 43 in a losing cause against North Carolina State, scoring Villanova's last 23 points. Schafer climaxed his junior year with a total of 836 points, to Cage Coach Al Severance rank second in the country in total points, and fifth in pregame average with 27.0.

Devine Leads Team

Jack Devine captained the Wildcats for the second straight year in 1954-55. John's career was highlighted by defensive work against the opposition's tallest player, and outstanding rebounding, leading the team in his department for the last three seasons. Devine's ever-present nonchalant attitude conceals one of the most alert minds in the game. This was illustrated when the West Catholic grad threw a length-of-the court pass for the game-winning assist agains the fabled Bevo Francis, in Dec. 1953.

John has guarded such giants as Walter Dukes, Dick Ricketts, Bill Uhl, Ron Shavlik, and Ed Conlin, in addition to performing the unhearalded duties of rebounding and playmaking. John's steadying influence has been a major factor in many tense games. He has also scored often enough to become the fourth highest scorer in Villanova history, by accumulating

Veterans, Rookies Vie for Positions On Baseball Nine

By Bill Brown

Unfortunately for one Arthur Mahan, some spring baseball practice doesn't occur within the reaches of winds of the Gulf of Mexico. Mr. Mahan is conducting Villanova's baseball practice in the confines of the Field house, where the cruel north winds have driven him.

The foregoing situation is all the worse since Villanova's opening game is on March 30. Coach Mahan does not yet know whom he is going to send against Vermont on that day. In brief, his problem is this: nine positions (all open) and fifty-two candidates, no outside practice, hence he doesn't know the material with which he must work. He has an unenviable position.

MIDDLE WAS GRADUATED

The positions vacated by Don Sommers, Chuck McGuckin, Bill McCaffrey, and Bob Ricciani must be filled. Fortunately, Dan Severino and Dick Scott have returned to form the nucleus of the pitching staff, Severino, because of his ability with the bat and glove, will probably see double service.

Some Newcomers Shine

No matter how many veterans return, Mahan said that some newcomers always win positions. In mentioning some of the candidates, the coach pointed out that some of the names he couldn't recall. Black, Scalzy, and Nagy will be battling for pitching assignments. First base chores look to be handled by Bruce Martin, Tom Casey, or Jack Helm; the second sack might be guarded by Don Mucchetti or Ed Ortelli. Ron LaMontague and John DiGiallorenzo are scrapping for first-string shortstop. At third it looks like either Dave Hinnigan or Jack Kero. Jack Peters, Bill McGarry, and Dave Burns have returned from last year's outfield. The backstop could be Arnott.

A Long Way to Omaha

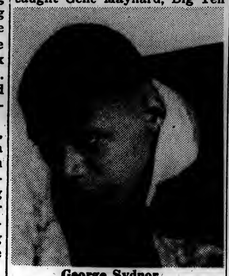
Mahan continued that this year's schedule is probably the toughest that Villanova has ever faced. Because snap judgements and feeling out his squad make the first few games very tough, he said that gaining the NCAA tourney this year would be a long haul.

Indoor Season Highlights

"Why worry about Russia in the coming Olympics when we can send the Villanova track team." The foregoing sentence was a quote from the Manhattan track mentor, Mr. George Eastman. Coach Eastman, long considered one of the leading coaches in this country, told the New York PRESS early in the season that the Villanova track team was loaded with potential. That potential was realized and surpassed as the season progressed.

Names such as Don Bragg, who gave us fine publicity as a freshman, has make an even greater impression in his sophomore year. Consistent vaulting of 14 feet 6 inches and near misses at 14 feet 10 inches account for his high ranking among the best vaulters in the country.

Little more can be added about Charlie Jenkins, our illustrious National and IC4A champion at 600 yards. He possesses the second fastest 600 yard effort of all time—1:10 flat, with the fastest time going to Mal Whitfield.



Alex Breckenridge, IC4A mile champion, showed the best collegiate milers in the country that he is to be reckoned with any time he steps on the track. Johnny Kopil was a short stride behind Alex when they crossed the finish line, to give Villanova first and second honors in the mile.

Boston K of C

After Charley Jenkins had finished his great 1:10 flat 600, he donned the role of anchor man and joined "Walter Mitty" Maliff, Red Heitmann and Captain Jim Moran in setting a new Boston Winter Garden record for the Mile Relay. Five yards in arrars were the National AAU Mile relay champions from Morgan State.

George Sydnor lost a photo finish decision to Rod Richards, of the Armed Forces track team. Members of the press box directly above the finish of the 60 yard dash final all thought that Sydnor was the winner.

Ron Delany, our beguiling Irish ace, won the 1000 yard run setting a new meet record of 2:10.2. His blazing finish caught Gene Maynard, Big Ten

George Sydnor

Champion from Illinois, in the last 30 yards.

Phila. Inquirer Meet

This time Don Bragg brought first honors to Villanova. With his hometown following from nearby Pennsgrove turning out, Bragg equalled his best performance with a mighty vault of 14ft. 6 inches.

Then Charlie Jenkins won the 600, letting loose with a tremendous kick to haul down former Villanova ace, Joe Gaffney. An hour later it was mile relay time, and Jenkins unleased the fastest quarter mile ever run for three laps a blazing 47.9. The other three legs were by Tippy Maliff, Al Peterson, and Capt. Jim Moran who kept Jenkins within striking distance during the first 3 legs. When the smoke cleared, Villanova had once again beaten Morgan State, and in so doing had posted the fastest time ever run by a mile relay in the Quaker City with a scorching 3:21 flat.

Millrose Games

Phil Reavis, Villanova freshman, tied for first place in the high jump a leap of 6 feet 7 inches, to bring his personnal best up an inch and a half.

Charlie gained the first National title of his college career, winning the 600-yard run over Reggie Pearman and Joe Gaffney.

IC4A Championships

This meet is the only one of the Indoor campaign in which a team score is kept. Villanova gave a splendid account of itself in taking second place honors. A point of interest is that only seven men contributed to the scoring. The rest of the team performed creditably with Bill Rock, our entry in the two mile, winning the slower of the two section race. Coach Elliott did such a great job of entrying the team that not one man went unplaced.

The freshman triumphed in the non-scoring medley relay. The team was composed of Roland Simpson-880, Walt Budney-220, George Sydnor-440, and Ron Delany who ran the anchor mile leg in 4:17.4.

Knights of Columbus Meet

Ron Delany closed the indoor season for Villanova with a brilant 1000 yard victory.

Delany unleashed a blazing finish to overtake Fordham's Tom Courtney. The time, 2:10.1, was the second fastest for the 1000 yard run this season; and also a personal record for Delany.

Alex Breckenridge

Life of a Manager

By Bob Strayton

One of the most unglamorous jobs in the sports world is that of being a manager. For the long hours and grueling work which managers put into their job, they receive almost no recognition. Theirs is thankless labor.

Fitting neatly into that category is Villanova's affable Adrian Kilker. Since his sophomore year, "80" has been assisting Wildcat aggregations with his menial performances.

A resident of the upstate town of Girardville, Adrian came to Villanova in the fall of 1951. He spent his freshman year as most frosh do, getting acclimated to the collegiate grind.

In his sophomore year, however, he began to follow Villanova athletic performances rather closely, and became a friend of the 150-lb. football coach, Tom Terranova. It was Terranova who suggested that "80" become a manager for the 150 pound squad. That proved to be the the full measure of encouragement that the small, affable sophomore required. He gladly accepted the task, and has been "completely satisfied" since.

Adrian Kilker

His extensive labors on behalf of the 150-lb. team recommended Adrian for another managerial position, which he received in the spring of his sophomore year, by assuming the behind-the-scenes role for the Varsity baseball team. He has held both positions since that time.

Now that he is a senior, the loquacious youth feels that he is quite sophisticated. His numerous "away trips" with both teams have given Kilker the opportunity to travel from the hinterlands of Villanova to the farthest corners of the East, and he has met such an important person as Albert Einstein, and other world renowned figures.

In his own words, Adrian sums up his trips to the numerous campuses by saying: "A lot of guys at Villanova complain about the way things are being run at VU, and the advantages attached to going to other colleges. Most of those people haven't had a real opportunity to look around and see just how other schools are being run. I think I can safely say that, since seeing many others schools just as they are, Villanova is unquestionably the best."

His numerous and varied tasks include such energy-consuming labors as: ground-keeper, batboy, mimeographer for the Athletic department, (few are the students at Villanova who haven't seen athletic notices posted around the campus with the familiar signature of "80" on them), and assistant to trainer "Jake" Nevins and equipment director Charlie Farnum. All of these endeavors Adrian has attacked with enviable zeal, and his untiring efforts are little realized by the many students who are assisted by his efforts.

Aside from accompanying the baseball team to the post-season NCAA regional play-offs in Allentown last year, "80" laughingly relates that his biggest thrill as a manager came when he was introduced to the warden of the Eastern State Penitentiary in Gratersford, Pa., when the team played a ball game there last year.

Devine, Schafer

1,263 points. John's 27 points against Canisius was his second highest single game output, and hi all around play last Friday was perhaps the greatest game of his collegiate career.

The tournament brought to a close one of Villanova's most unusual seasons. Certainly an unpredictable club, the Wildcats displayed a smooth - working, high-scoring offense at times, while in other games the team was very ineffective. The highlights of the season were the two Carolina State games, the Fordham game, the first half against Seton Hall in the Palestra and the great finish in the St. Francis game. On these nights it appeared as if Villanova could have defeated any college team in the nation.

Snyder Resigns As Coach

Ambrose F. Dudley, Villanova Athletic Director, today announced the resignation of backfield coach Bob Snyder from the football coaching staff. Snyder's decision was based on his desire to accept a position in business.

Although no successor has been named, head coach Frank Reagan is anxious to fill the vacancy as soon as possible. Snyder, a native of Toledo, is a former head coach of the Los Angeles Rams. The remaining members of the coaching staff are Reagan, Ken Kavanaugh, Otis Douglas, and Joe Rogers.

Hot Trotters Play Sullivan Hall in Tournament Final

Hot Trotters and Sullivan Hall reached the finals of the Intramural basketball championship tournament with victories in the semi-final round last week. The teams, which are survivors of play among eight league champions met on Monday for the championship.

Quarter final competition saw Sullivan eliminate the Vandals with a 50-35 triumph. Ed Zipf paced the victors with 10-4-24, while John Lee was high for the losers with 5-1-11. The Hot Trotters thumped the Heads 53-29. Injaian almost equaled the losers' total by scoring 10-6-26. The Wackers overpowered the N.R.O.T.C. champions, Baker I, 63-45, despite a 23 point spree by the loser's Jay Husted. The Lungers won by forfeit over Angeline A.C. to complete the quarter final bracket.

Semi-final action saw Sullivan rally from a two point half time deficit to defeat the Wackers 55-48. Jim Brady and Zipf contributed 15 and 14 points to the winners' total, while Joe Donnelly highlighted his all-around play with 13 points. The Hot Trotters qualified as Sullivan's opponent by edging the Lungers in a 42-38 thriller.

The best ball for your game has the exclusive

DURA-THIN COVER

Here's amazing new durability in a high-compression ball. The DURA-THIN* cover provides this great new Spalding DOT® with real scuff resistance . . . keeps the DOT uniform and true, even on rugged high-iron shots. The new DOT has a greater compactness for truer, more uniform flight. It's actually an economical ball for you to play.

And, with all this new durability, new DOTs still offer the long, long carry every hard-hitter wants.

At school, or on your home course, make your next round a better one with this greatest of all golf balls, Spalding DURA-THIN DOTS.

Inside Belle Masque: A Report

What lies behind the high calibre of Villanova's productions? Here's a propagandist's eye-view

THE COSTUMES were buttoned on, the make-up applied, the stage crew was clearing the set. Father William Krupa strode briskly into the "ready room" just off the wings, spoke a few words of encouragement, then asked the actors, stage crew, and make-up assistants to kneel and offer a prayer to St. Genisius, patron saint of actors.

After the Hail Mary, the group arose. While outside an overflow crowd waited for the curtain to go up, seven actors in grease-paint gathered in a backfield-like huddle, locked hands in the middle of the circle, exhorted each other with "Let's knock 'em dead," and "It's our baby let's go." Then, with a flourish of back-slapping, they took their places on the stage to give another Belle Masque production.

Belle Masque is Villanova's 60 year-old dramatic society. A good deal of the group's success, its members explain, can be traced to (1) a dynamic moderator-director, Father Krupa, and (2) a virile, buoyant unity among the 70 members.

In his eighth year with Belle Masque, Rev. William Krupa, O.S.A., continues to perform his priestly and administrative duties as Procurator of the Seminary while producing two plays a year. The hundreds of Masquers who have worked under him swear by this amiable genius.

And the cameraderie of the society is a tribute to the normalcy of its members; Belle Masque is staffed by a breed of Villanovans unspectacular in action, dress, and speech. There is hardly a ham or a long-hair in its talented midst.

Bill Cunningham, a senior NROTC man from Point Lookout, L. I., is Bell Masque's president. He is an ex-high-school sprinter and winner of a few intramural track trophies. Whereas the average actor or stage hand works between 60 and 80 hours preparing for "Harvey" or "Stalag 17" or "Julius Caesar," Cunningham is likely to work 150 hours.

He is assisted by Secretary-Treasurer Joe Blimm and Student Council Representative Bob Erskine, both Seniors.

The Society's aim is primarily artistic—the staging of top-notch "theater." An accomplishment this, Masquers have already shown talent at the box-office. Belle Masque's $2000.—plus treasury makes it the University's only self-sufficient extra-curricular organization.

Recently it contributed $500. to the Scholarship Fund, and another $500. is on the way. The group owns recorder spotlights, flats, braces, and set materials.

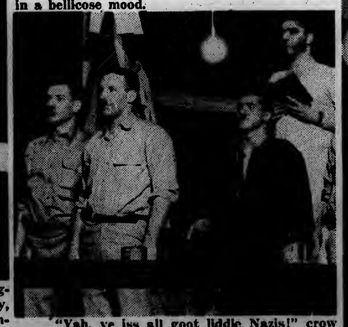
A Masquer can be pressed to admit that no production ever closed prematurely, that over 2000 persons howled at "Stalag 17" last spring, and that the three-act comedy "Harvey" opening in the Field House next week, threatens to break every existing attendance record.

The society has a reputation for non-dramatic, non-financial functions as well. The Belle Masque social season opens in September, closes in June, some 10 parties, picnics, and dinner dances later.

Impetus for the busy social calendar is supplied by a mutual actor lend-lease arrangement between Villanova's Belle Masque and Rosemont's Jest and Gesture and Immaculata's Cue and Curtain. Villanovans appear in Rosemont's and Immaculata's plays: their actresses, in addition to Villanova's coeds, grace our stage.

In competition with players from other colleges, Masquers have distinguished themselves at the University of Pennsylvania, Chestnut Hill College, and Harcum Junior College. Villanova currently counts ten men in the ranks of Alpha Psi Omega, the national dramatic honor society.

They include Joe Blimm, Bernie Coyne, Bill Cunningham, Walt Doyle, Bob Erskine, Skip Killmond, Rev. William Krupa, "Jake" Krupa, and George Minser.



Within recent memory, two recent alumni have achieved further success in dramatics. Tom Hayden, past president of Belle Masque, is now acting with the Main Line Players. Another, Ted Doyle, is an instructor of dramatics at Notre Dame.

War correspondent Drew Higgins pumps a general's orderly, Jim Borden, for operational information in "Command Decision."

The interior of "Stalag 17", last spring's presentation finds Harry Anger and Bob Erskine in a bellicose mood.

"Yah, ve iss all goot liddle Nazis!" crow the prisoners in "Stalag 17."

Veteran Belle Masquers Bob Erskine and Bernie Coyne rehearse a scene from the forthcoming comedy "Harvey."

Here's Where to Look For Notices of Your Group, In Whatever Field

A.S.C.E.

At their regular monthly meeting on Monday night, members of the Villanova chapter of the American Society of Civil Engineers saw two films on bridge construction. The first was concerned with the steel erection on the Golden Gate Bridge, the longest suspension bridge in the world. The second film was on the San Francisco-Oakland Bay Bridge.

Last Thursday morning, a meeting was held for the nomination of officers for the com-year. Nominations were open for a total of six offices, two of them in connection with the Society's newspaper, ON THE LEVEL. Preliminary details on the annual ASCE student convention were discussed, especially in relation to the presentation of papers by the Society.

This year the convention will be held at Bucknell University on April 25. In closing the meeting, President Joe Maggiore issued a last call for suggestions concerning places to visit for the spring field trip. A final decision must be made in the near future so that the necessary arrangements can be made.

On March 9, twenty Junior and Senior CE's attended the annual A.S.C.E. Junior Forum at the Engineer's Club of Philadelphia. Following dinner, they heard a talk on "lift-slab" construction as applied to the new RCA Cherry Hill plant near Camden.

Nominations for next year's officers and plans for an April 2nd Communion breakfast were featured at last Wednesday evening's International Relations Society meeting.

An informal debate between Haverford and Villanova followed the business part of the meeting.

Elections will take place at the club's next monthly meeting.

Reservations for the Communion breakfast should be made immediately, chairman Don McGahan announced, since the Wayne site of the breakfast can only accommodate 40. The I.R.S. treasury will pay for the function.

The debate was on the question: Should the U.S. give diplomatic recognition to Red China? The Villanova team of Mark McCormick and William Byrne had the negative side. The Haverford position was that "our only chance for peace in Asia is recognition of the de facto government," and urged the neutralization of Formosa under U.N. trusteeship. The negative stated that nothing would be gained by diplomatic recognition, and that on the contrary, much diplomatic prestige would be lost! There was no decision.

LYNX

The "LYNX, the campus literary quarterly, will hold an organizational meeting today at 4:30 in room 202 C&F. Anyone who is interested in joining the "LYNX" staff in any capacity is welcome. Editor Rees James announced that there are openings for students wishing to do art work, publicity, typing, or business.

President Bruce Stark of Delta Pi Epsilon Fraternity says he is hoping a larger number of fraternity brothers will show up for a meeting in 201 C & F, Monday at 7:15 p.m.

Members must also have dues paid to Treasurer Lou Donatelli (207 Sullivan) by the end of Monday night's meeting.

Stark has promised members a "startling announcement," but he would not give any details.

A possible piece of business is the fraternity's annual dinner dance, scheduled for later in the spring. Social Chairman John Fitzpatrick is making arrangements.

T n' T

The dance rehearsals, under the direction of George Noake, for T 'n T's April production of "Jessica James" are well under way. Two dances with the 40-man chorus are near completion.

Bob Whalen's music surpasses his previous efforts for Turf and Tinsel. As the title suggests, many of the songs will be Western-style square dances and folk dances.

Last rehearsels are also under way under the direction of Jack Kelly.

The artistic element of the Turf and Tinsel again came to the fore last Thursday night when the stage crew began laying plans for set designs led by Phil Butler, who is working despite a broken arm.

All members of the business staff are to see Bill Reich for their assignments this week.

Panel Discussion

Next Wednesday Evening, March 23, at 7:30 the Villanova Student Chapter of the American Society of Civil Engineers will sponsor a panel discussion of the applications of the sail machanics theory to the design of structural foundations. The group will meet in 215 Mendel.

Mr. Leo Porter, Chief Bridge Engineer of the Pennsylvania Department of Highways, will discuss the problems of adjusting theoretical design to existing field conditions. He will be joined in the panel by Mr. Francis C. Wagman, noted bridge-building contractor. Dr. Louis Berger, consulting engineer and sail mechanics expert; and Mr. A. E. O'Brien, Executive Secretary of the Associated Pennsylvania Constructors.

Professional engineers, A.S.C.E. student chapter members from Villanova and other engineering schools in this area, and all engineering students and faculty members are invited to attend the program, which has been arranged by Mr. Miles B. Potter, Associate Professor of Civil Engineering.

Marketing Club

Five members of the Marketing Club, accompanied by their moderator, Mr. Frederick Burgess, were in attendance last week at a meeting of the Philadelphia chapter of the American Marketing Association.

They had dinner and afterwards listened to a lecture on "Media Selection" by Mr. James Porter of a New York advertising agency.

According to Tom Keller, the club president, nominations for new officers will take place during the last week of March.

The club is presently negotiating for an excursion to the Gretz Brewery, possibly to be followed by a luncheon. If plans materialize, it will take place at the end of March.

PKP

Phi Kappa Pi, Villanova's engineering fraternity, held nominations for its six offices last week.

Heading the list of nominees are George Gorham and Don Tierney, both running for the Presidential post. Nineteen other frat members were nominated for the five other frat positions; Vice-President, Treasurer, Secretary, Student Council Representative, and Sergeant-at-Arms.

First Sorority On VU Campus Elects in April

Move over, men! There's a sorority on campus. The girls of the Nursing division have banded together in the Pi Theta Chi sorority, the Greek letters standing for the motto, "In joy or in sorrow we stand at their side, their light, refuge, guard, and guide."

The idea for a sorority came last year, but there were not enough nursing students to make the project workable until this year. Sisters Alma and Margarella, Directors of the Nursing Program, and the girls formed a committee in October to draw up a constitution for the proposed organization.

Constitution Adopted

In February, at their first meeting as a sorority, the girls adopted the constitution, which was modeled to a certain extent after that of the Lambda Kappa Delta, the pre-med fraternity. Helen Daly was made president until an election could be held.

The sorority, which is open to all full-time nursing students, has as its purpose: To instill the Charity of Christ through the fulfillment of the vocation of Nursing, to promote in its members those professional qualities which are necessary to this profession, and to increase convivality among its members.

At the February meeting com-

May Blazer Ball Soph Possibility

Chances were good this week that the University's sophomore class will hold its Blazer Ball May 13, with the event closed to second year men.

Final approval of the plans must come from Rev. George McLaughlin, O.S.A., Dean of Student Activities.

If the social event is approved, the sophomore class will have another "first" to its credit. This will be the first time that sophomores have sponsored a closed social event.

Another Move for Ball

Earlier in the semester, the Class of '57 became the first sophomore class to order blazers. Blazer Chairman Art Odabash has been promised delivery of the coats by April 1.

The VILLANOVAN learned from an authoritative source that Father McLaughlin favored the sophomores holding their

Belle Air Meets Deadline; Delivery Date Set In May

Frank Gunther, editor of this year's Belle Air, announces that he and his staff have met the deadline for the Class of '55 edition of the yearbook. All the copy is in now and they are working on the galleys and paste-ups.

Tentative delivery date for the book has been set as May 15 and Gunther pointed out that it is to be the largest yearbook in the school's history, excluding only the centennial edition.

Ably assisted by editors Bill Quinn (features), Dick Winfield (layout), Bernie Coyne (activities) and Pete Loos (sports), Gunther has included several innovations in the new Belle Air.

First on this list of new ideas is an entirely different layout and an enlarged intramural sports section. Gunther also mentioned that this year's book would stress graduating class members more than in previous years.

Production of a bigger and better yearbook by Gunther and his staff was helped greatly by the most successful ad drive in Belle Air history, conducted under the direction of Business Manager Ted Clarkson.

Seniors Note:

Seniors interested in attending the class' Father's Day celebration April 23 should attend a meeting tomorrow at 10:30 a.m. in 201 C & F.

Class President Bud Ford said registration scheduled for last Thursday in the Pie Shoppe was cancelled because of the long week end.

Former Teacher Appointed to Conduct Retreat

Villanova's 112th annual retreat, scheduled for April 3 through 6, will be conducted by the Rev. James B. Gallagher, O.S.A., a member of the Augustinian Mission Band.

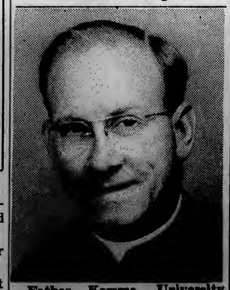
In announcing the retreatmaster, Rev. Joseph Kemme, O. S. A., university chaplain, voiced the hope that "all will go to confession and receive communion at least once during the retreat."

Father Kemme also reminded students that attendance at the retreat—the only religious exercise of more than a day's duration during the academic year — is mandatory for all Catholic undergraduate students.

Instructed Here

The retreatmaster, who was born in Towanda, Pa., taught philosophy at Villanova before World War II. He received his education in Rome and was ordained there in 1928.

The retreat will open on Palm Sunday at 7:30 p.m. in the Field House. Confessions will be heard following the opening conference and solemn benediction.



In order to alleviate crowded conditions due to increased enrollment, students will not attend Mass on Monday and Tuesday mornings in one or two large bodies as in past years.

Three Conferences a Day

Instead, on both mornings residents of Sullivan, Simpson and Mendel Halls will attend the 7 a.m. mass at the chapel while all other resident students will hear mass at 7:45.

At 8 a.m. there will be a Mass for freshman and sophomore off campus students in the Field

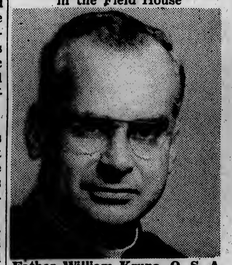
Father Kemme, University Chaplain



Elwood P. Dowd, 47, is on campus this week, and Villanova will never be the same.

Mr. Dowd, in conjunction with his appearance in "Harvey," a three-act comedy, has introduced himself to nearly twenty-five hundred Villanova men, Rosemont girls, faculty members, and perfect strangers.

Calling Card

To a thousand of his new-found friends he has actually given his calling-card, which reads:

Elwood P. Dowd
cordially invites you to meet his friend
Harvey
March 23-26 at 8 P. M. in the Field House

Father William Krupa, O. S. A.
BM Director

Elwood P. Dowd is a mild, eccentric man, completely amiable and a confirmed lover of mankind. Futhermore, his sanity is to be doubted seriously; Dowd is a rum-pot and a crack-pot, and his best friend is a 6'1½" white rabbit named Harvey.

Harvey's A Pooka

Harvey, like most pookas (a pooka is a fairy spirit in animal form, always very large) is invisible to everyone except the ever-smiling Dowd and his psychiatrist, Dr. Chumley.

The rib-tickling adventures of Elwood P. Dowd, his rabbit, and his psychiatrist, are part of the fun beginning tonight in Belle Masque's spring production of "Harvey". The fun will continue nightly through Sunday in the Field House.

Coyne Stars

Bernie Coyne plays the role of his life as Dowd, who seems to commune between Chumley's Rest, a steel-barred asylum, and Charlie's Place, a friendly tavern. An expected two-thousand playgoers will learn in the climax of "Harvey" where he finally winds up.

Advance ticket sales are unusually heavy, said Tom Curran, chairman of the dramatic society's ticket committee. He at-

An Oft-Repeated Request

To most day-hops at Villanova the problem of getting to and from campus with the least possible inconvenience, loss of time, and lateness for class is primary. According to a recent survey made under Student Council auspices, some two-thirds of them meet this problem by coming to Villanova by car.

Unfortunately, this is not as adequate a solution of the transportation problem as it used to be. The parking-lots in which students must park their cars are overcrowded. As a result, the driver arriving for a class after 8:30 can never be sure of finding a parking space. If he does find a space, it may be only after a long search and much waste of time.

The basic answer for the present difficulty is very clearly the expansion of the present inadequate parking facilities. That is something the students cannot do; only the administration can do that.

There is something that students can do before the lots are expanded, however. They can show at least minimum consideration for others by not parking in the driving lanes or in the entrances to the lots. When they are lucky enough to get spaces, they can limit themselves to one, instead of straddling two or three.

It should not be too much to expect of students in a Catholic college to ask that they realize that there are others with equal rights to their own and that they respect those rights. It would seem, however, that there are some individuals who are at least a little forgetful of that fact.

When you use the parking-lot, do not occupy more space than you need. Never park so as to prevent others from reaching some other section of the lot where they might find spaces available. Show this much courtesy for others, and maybe someone will think to do the same for you.

A Catholic's Duties

Last Saturday Villanova played host to some 225 students from eleven different colleges at the Southeastern Region Convention of the Intercollegiate Conference on Government. These delegates heartily voiced their approval of the excellence of Villanova's hospitality. It was, they all agreed, one of the most efficiently-run meetings in recent years.

However, there was one matter which many of the delegates present couldn't quite understand. That was the small number of delegates attending as representatives of Villanova. Of all the delegates, only 12 were from Villanova, definitely a very poor showing for the host college.

Now, this isn't the first time that our students have demonstrated their disinclination to participate with students from secular universities in joint meetings. Other such meetings wherein the topics were technical or educational, and not social, have had similar poor V. U. representation.

This should not be the case. Large groups of Villanovans should be on hand at these meetings to voice the ideas and opinions of their Catholic heritage. By so doing, they adequately prepare the way for their later active participation in life's arena.

Purpose of Education For Rational Man Is Freedom

By Bob Farley

"Ad quid venisti—for what purpose have you come?" If someone were to ask you this question, what would be your answer? Perhaps you would quickly give some ulterior motive for being at Villanova; and maybe if you thought about it for a moment, you would discover that it was the first time you ever had.

Surely you know how it is, high school graduation came along and where do you go from here, why to college of course. And now that you're here, for what purpose have you come?

NOW IS TIME

Is there a better time of year than the holy season of Lent to honestly reflect upon the concept of purpose? Did not man's Ultimate End send down His Divine Son from heaven with the "purpose" of redeeming and saving the souls of all men? Yes, the Crucifixion had purpose behind it, and every human act should have a purpose, otherwise it were better not to have been committed.

MEANS TO END

Purpose presupposes an intellect and is the means by which man fulfills an end. Therefore, every man should have a conscious purpose which is measured by and directed toward his final end which is God, because only in that way will he be acting intelligently and correctly.

Now for the college student his purpose isn't to be an engineer, or lawyer, or insurance man, but it is something more basic and at the same time more general. It is not that these are distinct professions, but their choice is dependent chiefly on the talent and capabilities of the individual, and therefore they are neither basic nor general. The purpose cannot be entirely material but must also be spiritual because in such a way is man composed by virtue of his body and soul. Thus, such a purpose will and must be beneficial to the whole man. It must contain balance and harmony because when man acts solely in pursuit of bodily pleasures, it is to the detriment of the soul and thus his very person.

STRIVE FOR IDEAL

In another sense the purpose of a college education should compliment the purpose of founding such an institution as Villanova, which "was to offer to young men an opportunity of receiving a thorough, liberal education—an education that develops all the faculties of soul as well as of body, and finds its expression in a clear-thinking, right-acting Christian gentleman." This is definitely an ideal to be striven for, but by the term "ideal," we do not wish to connote the popular 20th century meaning of "impossible and therefore concluded in frustration." On the contrary, by ideal we mean reality of the highest degree. All our efforts must be deliberately concerted in view of this ideal, which can only be achieved by strict and conscious purpose.

DISCIPLINE THE SENSES

When the cult of the pleasant and the attractive is disciplined and regulated by a sound understanding and a good will, peace is established between the powers that make up the kingdom of man. The tyranny of sense is overthrown. Character is formed. All the forces in man are harnessed to the purpose of right living. Man is then free to be a man. Hence it may be said that the purpose of education is freedom, because in being formed to a knowledge of the true, a love of the good, and an admiration for the beautiful, a man is liberated from the shackles that prevent him from moving towards the achievement of a Christian personality. Without freedom there cannot be happiness. Herein lies our noble purpose, and may both, teachers and students, realize that this is why we are here and the purpose for which we have come.

Indo-China Remains Primary Asian Issue

By Ed Daly

Recent events in the Formosa area have forced the problem of Indo-China into the background so far as most American are concerned. Despite that comparative obscurity, however, Indo-China remains the most serious trouble zone the United States has to consider in its foreign policy.

The Geneva accord and subsequent support given to the free government of South Vietnam have not improved conditions there. Quite the reverse is true.

Communists Violate Truce

The Communists have not made a very serious effort to observe the terms of the truce. Far from withdrawing from many areas south of the line agree upon, the Viet Minh have actually been consolidating their power in those districts. As a matter of fact, they have extended their authority over some sections they had never occupied before.

Even if the Communists had withdrawn as they promised, the Vietnamese government would still face grave perils. The government is the heir of French imperialism and consequently has inherited the deep anti-French opposition of most Vietnamese nationalists. The army is both unreliable and corrupt. Its leaders are hostile to the present premier. The administration is therefore faced with difficulties of a very serious nature in enforcing its will.

A number of dissident religious sects, opposed to the premier because he is a Catholic, have their own standing armies, which have recently federated with the four-thousand-man army of a gang of former river-pirates. The suppression of these rebellious groups require the services of a strong and devoted army, something that Vietnam lacks.

Can Vietnam Be Saved?

That being the case can the free government in southern Vietnam survive? In other words, can Vietnam be saved, even in part, for the free world?

A few months ago, I attended a foreign policy conference on Southeast Asia. The speakers were all distinguished experts in the field. One was head of the Rubber Tappers' Union in Malaya, a second had served for years with the Dutch in Indonesia, and a third had headed American missions to almost every country in the Far East. All three of these men were asked these questions about the fate of South Vietnam. All of them gave the same answer. "Indo-China is lost."

If this estimate of the Indo-Chinese situation is correct, the free world is faced with a disaster of the most tremendous magnitude. If this prediction is to proved false, it is the government of the United States that must take the steps necessary to keep the Reds from adding one more Asian nation to their empire.

Ah, 'Tis Spring!

By Dave Vachon

Oneday it was twenty. Twoday it was sixty. Threeday it was forty. Spring is here! Spring!

The grass turns green; the flowers send up new shoots; the buds of the tree branches suddenly begin to bulge; the smoke clears momentarily in the tea house, the electrifying word passes through the crowd . . . Spring!

Soon the rains will come. Spring is truly here, and with it sleepy-eyed Spring fever spreads o'er the mudflats, creeping through Belle-Air, squeezing into the Pie Shoppe,, skirting round the Dean's office and gliding down the hill into the Infirmary.

"What is Spring fever?" asked the glub-glub looking up from his jug of jumpin' joy juice.

"Smitten ye doon, lad, and ye shall be illuminated," replied he.

Spring fever is that which transforms scholars into students, students into pupils, pupils into draft bait, and professors in tears.

Spring fever is that which causes a sudden shift in the population ratio at certain neighboring institutions.

Spring fever is that which depopulates the Library, impopulates "the sack," and repopulates the nursery.

Spring fever is that to relieve which cuts are not used but abused.

"Such a tale, such a tale," said the glub-glub to the kapatoo, taking another sip from his jug of jumpin' joy juice, "such a sad, sad tale!"

Strictly Opinion

By Frank Hartmann

May we quote some rumblings heard around the campus of late? What with Spring, and the normal upswing of activities at this time, it's a snap to make up a column of bits picked up here and there.

If you value your life, don't go near the entrance to the chow hall nearest the Navy building at 11:30. The animals stage a blood game there every day at that time. The reward? Getting into the chow hall first. The price? Perhaps an arm or leg. Jim Bambury was first in line at 11:20 one day but when the big push started at 11:30 his belt became hooked on the door hinge and in 45 seconds he found himself 327th in line.

Has any one of us ever gone to a Villanova affair, say a basketball game, play or dance, without seeing Mr. and Mrs. Driscoll? This faculty couple is probably among the most loyal of all Villanova supporters.

Is the gateman at Leary Hall becoming just a bit over-zealous in his work? Two jokers on a bicycle built for two tried to ride on campus the other day but he stopped them with the order, "No unauthorized vehicles on campus." After about five minutes of arguing, during which he almost swallowed his whistle, they finally succeeded in getting onto the campus.

"Hoagies! Cold Drinks!"

It will seem strange next year not to hear the familiar "Hoagies! Cold Drinks!" of Mike Bruno as he makes his nightly rounds from hall to hall. We all complain about the prices and the lack of meat in the sandwiches, but we all seem to buy them just the same. Here in Fedigan Hall, Mike has been supplanted somewhat by the nightly cry, "It's MOOOOO time!"

Looking back on the past few weeks, it would seem that Villanova is the only place in the world where you can be ankle deep in mud and yet have dust blowing in your face at the same time.

With the weather improving every day, the ranks of the "Tea-House Commandos" are becoming visibly swollen. These young braves who make the trek to and from Rosemont several time a week are in dire need of a leader. The search is on. Who is the No. 1 Tea House Commando?

The SAPA (Saturday-Sunday Afternoon Picnic Association) is trying for a new record this spring. They're off to a booming start. I think that the members of this exclusive club constituted most of the brave men who planned to wear Bermuda shorts last Monday, the first day of Spring.

Has anyone seen Harvey?

The Junior class, known among the better circles as the best in the school, is putting final touches on its arrangements for Junior Week. Please don't let it rain on Mother's Day!

SORRY, MR. M!

The VILLANOVAN wishes to make known, in defense of Tom Mentzer's writing ability, that his story on Catholic marriage on Page three of last week's paper appeared partially incoherent because the printer transposed the final two-thirds of the story.

Deadline Approaches In Queen Contest

As the Junior Week Queen Contest rolls into its third week, an increasing number of candidates promises stiff competition before the Royal Court is named.

Deadline Nears

To all those Juniors who haven't yet entered their Queens, a reminder: the Contest ends April 13, just 21 days hence. And the sooner your entry is in, the better are your chances of having the picture printed in the Villanovan.

No Queen Contest entrant's picture is published today because of preparations to mail all the entries received thus far off to the judges, to be named in the next issue of the VILLANOVAN.

Bob Ford and Jack Downing, aware that over 60 portraits of Juniors' girl friends were submitted last year, once again urge all members of the Class of '56 to get in their pictures as early as possible.

Villanova . . . Tomorrow Brochure Looks To Future

"This . . . is Villanova." This is the title of the portfolio put out by the Villanova University Development Foundation. It is an attractive book assembled to convince people who are in a position to help Villanova do so.

In the book is found an outline of the future plans for the Villanova campus. Since not too many of the students have seen it we would like to run through the Villanova of the Future as outlined in the booklet.

Both Sullivan and Dougherty Halls are listed, the former being completed and in use with the later expected to be ready for occupancy by the beginning of the next semester.

Quoting from the book, ". . . The Law School has a top-ranking faculty, a carefully selected student body, and an extraordinary library." It further states that a building for the Law School is urgently needed in the near future. The place picked out for the school in the drawing of the future campus is on the plot of ground behind the Post Office on the site of the old golf course.

"Our engineering school has one of the highest scholastic standings in all America, but present accommodations are wholly inadequate to handle all the students seeking engineering education." The site chosen for this building is directly behind Sullivan Hall on the softball field.

A new seminary building is very desirable and would be put on the North side of Spring Mill Road across from the future site of the Law School. This is an excellent position for the "Sem," as it is convenient to the University yet at the same time is off in ". . . a quiet and peaceful area of retreat."

"The present Chapel accomodates only one-sixth of the student body." As we have seen at the Spiritual Exercise at Villanova, the Chapel problem looms large in the future of a progressive Villanova. A new chapel or the enlargement of the old is a definite necessity.

Finally, looking toward the field of Athletics, we find that plans have been made for an extensive enlargement of the Football Stadium. The North side of the stands would be made into a huge moon-shaped oval and the East end would be enclosed with a grandstand. The enlargement of the stadium would support the trend to bring football back to the campus.

Looking at the ambitious program which Villanova has set out for itself, we must remember that it canot be accomplished overnight. We, the Alumni

Juniors Gets First Crack At Jazz Concert Tickets

Jack Kelly, chairman of the Eddie Condon Jazz Concerts, has announced that an exclusive sale of tickets for the sessions during Junior Week will be held on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday of next week for Juniors only. Following this sale, the tickets will be offered to the other classes. The remainder of the ducats will be on sale to the students of surrounding colleges and universities prior to Junior Week. Tickets may be secured from any of the class officers plus ticket chairman Nick Mazzoni and his committee.

JUNIOR WEEK NOTES:

Prom favors are being investigated by a committee under the direction of co-chairmen Bob Fredericks and Roy Zimmerman. Distinction and appeal are the criteria to be used in the final decision. Several leading jewelry firms have already been consulted but as yet no single object has received a favorable nod.

Programs for this year's Junior Prom are the job of Bob McCaffery. Work has been started on both the patron situation and the design of the program.

Frank Hartmann secured the help of several Rosemont young ladies to complete the Mother's Day invitations which are to be sent to the mother of every Junior . . . Frank sends his thanks to the girls for their aid in the tedious and rather monotonous job . . .

The Mother's Day printed program is nearly completed, Frank and his assistants, Phil Taddeo, John Henry and John Padova have announced.

Officers Plan For French Club

The first phase of the French Club's rebirth appeared in the elections of new officers and plans for the future.

Last night, the growing group played host to Mr. Wilson Frescoln of the University's faculty, who presented vividly the scene of "Rural France."

Newly elected to the offices of president and vice - president were Donald Downs, sophomore Arts, and Donald Mehada, respectively.

The club, under the guidance of Dr. Charles Lombard, Assistant Professor of Modern Languages, formulated plans for coming social meetings at Gwynedd-Mercy and Immaculata Colleges.

Dr. Lombard extended a welcome membership to anyone interested in joining in the functions of the group and in the language.

House and at 8:30 a.m. all junior and senior non-residents will hear Mass in the chapel.

On both Monday and Tuesday there will be three conferences —at 9:30, 11 and 2—and Holy Hour will start at 3:15. Confessions will be heard at 11:30 and 4:15 both days and at 7:15 p.m. on Monday.

Traditional nocturnal adoration of the Blessed Sacrament will start Tuesday afternoon following the Holy Hour and continue until 9 a.m. Wednesday when closing exercises will take place, including Mass before the Blessed Sacrament, during which the Annaul General Communion of the student body will take place.

This will be followed by solemn benediction, renewal of baptismal vows.

mittees were appointed to prepare a ballot for elections to the offices of President, Vice-President, and Secretary-Treasurer; to form a Glee Club; to obtain bandages for the sacred heart home for incurable cancer; and to organize sports. The bandage committee collected a dollar from each girl for the bandage material.

At the meeting held a week ago tonight in Austin Lounge, the ballot committee, consisting of one Sophomore and five Freshmen, presented its list of nominees for the offices at stake, which was promptly approved. Nominated for president were Betty Ann Curran, Helen Daly, and Rita Shigo. Nominated for vice-president were Dolores Cofield, Sister Theolinda, and Cecilia De Muro. These six girls represent the entire Sopohomore class. The elections will be held at the next meeting on the second Wednesday of April.

Awaiting Approval

The constitution is currently awaiting the approval of the Very Rev. James Donnellon, O.S.A., University President. When Student Council approval is obtained, a Student Council Representative will be chosen.

The Sophomore nominees leave the campus in May for hospital work, but those elected to office will be available for the sorority meetings.

Social Planned

In accordance with the last part of the organization's purpose, a social is planned for the May meeting.

Following the business part of last Wednesday's meeting, the girls spent the evening making the gauze bandages for the cancer home.

The moderator for the sorority has not yet been announced.

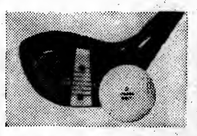
According to the preliminary report of the Sub-Committee, in order to have a well-rounded education and to function as an intelligent citizen in modern democratic society, one needs in addition to philosophical and ethical principles, an understanding and facility in the use of the technical knowledge of the social sciences.

Modern Popes have stressed the obligation of every individual toward the construction of a just and peaceful social order.

The conviction of the Sub-Committee, therefore, is that some knowledge of the social sciences is essential

Next Wednesday is the deadline for submission of applications for this year's Villanova Oratorical Contest, to be held that night at 8 in C & F Auditorium.

Villanovans who are interested in competing and have not entered should see Mr. Joseph Jonas.



Mr. Jonas, assistant professor of English and moderator of Beta Gamma Debating Society, is in charge of the contest.

Winner to N. Y.

Contestants will vie for the right to represent Villanova in the semi-final eastern round of the national contest sponsored by the New York Journal American.

WHO ARE THE "TOP-FLITE" GOLFERS ON YOUR CAMPUS?

If you've watched them on the course, you've probably thought: "Boy, if I could just get my game down like that!"

Constant practice is the answer, of course, but getting the best from your equipment is just as important, too.

That's where Spalding TOP-FLITE® clubs have the edge. They have more to offer in precision balance that gives an absolutely uniform swing-feel with every club in the matched set.

That's the secret of Spalding SYNCHRO-DYNED® clubs. And, it will pay off for you from the first round. You'll make the same shots with new uniformity. The perfect balance of these clubs lets you swing through the ball with confidence. Without "choking-up" or "compensating." You get the ball away cleaner, longer, and with more shot control.

These are the clubs that have lowered handicaps by as much as ½: Spalding SYNCHRO-DYNED TOP-FLITE clubs. Your Golf pro has them now. And, now's the time for you to start playing better golf.

Young College People Hold Democratic Key

Democracy need have no fears as long as college students show an interest in government, delegates to the Southeastern Region Convention of the Intercollegiate Conference of Government of Pennsylvania were told at Villanova, Saturday.

Very Rev. James A. Donellon, O. S. A., Villanova president made the statement in opening the convention, which was attended by some 225 delegates from eleven area colleges—Drexel, Rosemont, Harcum, Immaculata, Bryn Mawr, Temple, Penn, Haverford, Swarthmore, West Chester and the host, Villanova.

In a general assembly in the Field House, Phil Taddeo, Villanova junior, was elected to serve as serg-eant-at-arms at the state convention of the ICG in Harrisburg April 21-23. Don Seaton, chairman of the Villanova chapter, will also attend the convention.

Model legislation proposed during the general assembly included a bill to require registration of lobbyists in the state legislature and penalties for non-compliants.

The measure, introduced by Basil Sullivan—senior political science major at Villanova—passed 149 to 1.

A proposal by Bryn Mawr delegates for compulsory eugenic sterilization was overwhelmingly defeated in committee by Frank Stagnito, of Villanova.

Later, Bryn Mawr was declared out of order on the floor when representatives attempted to enter the measure as a substitute motion.

This action was taken against the Bryn Mawr delegation partly because of the efforts of Villanova representatives after what one delegate called a "hot debate."

Delegates were served a Horn and Hardart box lunch in the Pie Shoppe.

This Friday and Saturday, Dr. Fred J. Khouri, ICG moderator, and three members will represent Villanova at the 1955 Citizenship Clearing House at Penn.

Immaculata Premiere Draws Plaudits

The first annual intercollegiate variety show of the Philadelphia Regional Council of the NFCCS will be displayed in the Field House April 19 at 8 p.m.

At its premiere at Immaculata March 13, the two and a half hour show was capped by seven minutes of applause by the audience.

Directed by Jim Michener, Villanova senior and treasurer of the Philadelphia Regional Council, the Immaculata performance drew promising notices from several observers.

One called it the "best college show she had ever seen in the United States." Another commented: "It looked like a professional job."

Before the tour reaches Villanova, it will stop off for performances at La Salle on Saturday and St. Joseph's April 2. Both shows begin at 8 p.m.

The entire program is accompanied by the Villanovans, under the direction of Bob Schiller, and selected pianists.

Also representing Villanova in the assortment of college talent from the Philadelphia area are John Giordano, Jack Erdlen and Skip Killmond.

Curriculum Study:

Cites Duty To Society

This Friday, at 7:30 p. m., the Villanova liberal arts curriculum study will be further developed in a faculty discussion in Commodore John Barry Hall. This project is under the sponsorship of the Villanova Chapter of the American Association of University Professors and has received the encouragement of the university administration.

The present phase of the study is expected to lead to a more complete examination of the courses of study throughout the entire University.

The current Villanova study is in line with similar research carried on in the post-war period at leading institutions of higher learning such as Harvard University, Carnegie Institute of Technology and Notre Dame in conjunction with the Ford Foundation and similar funds devoted to academic research. These studies are being carried on with equal vigor in all phases of academic endeavor.

The conclusion seems warranted that the community of American scholars is not satisfied with the current hodgepodge of courses which is being offered the student.

It is the feeling of the Committee that the enormity of this task can be met squarely by an institution with the rich Christian tradition available here at Villanova.

This Friday night's meeting will consist of a preliminary report of a Sub-Committee on the Social Sciences and will discuss its recommendations concerning the role of the Social Sciences in the liberal arts curriculum.

This Sub-Committee, under the chairmanship of Dr. Walter H. Klein of the Commerce and Finance Division, embraces members from a wide variety of departments throughout the University. The membership includes: from the School of Law, Professor John McCartney; from the School of Liberal Arts and Science, Professors Bernard L. Bonniwell of the Department of Psychology, Charles P. Bruderle and Fritz Nova, History, Thomas C. Campanella, Education, Edward J. Monahan, Philosophy, and Rev. Richard M. Plunkett, O. S. A., and F. DeSales Powell, Sociology. From the Division of Commerce and Finance, Professors Frederick M. Burgess, Walter H. Klein, George E. Matlin, Cyrus J. Sharer and Charles S. Vogan.

Trackman to Speak on Irish Athletics

Spurred on by an enthusiastic public response thus far, the Irish Cultural Olympics in the Villanova Library continues to present an imposing array of speakers on various phases of Irish cultural life, in addition to the displays still on exhibition in the Library and Commodore John Barry Hall. This week's scheduled speakers are:

March 24: Michael Cavanaugh and Ronald Delaney will get together to talk on "Irish Athletics," and the value of the Gaelic Athletic Association. A movie of the 1954 Ireland final football match between Kerry and Meath will add visual illustration to the discussion.

Irish Born

Captain Cavanaugh was born in Dublin and educated in Ireland. He served in the United States army during World War II and the Korean War.

Delaney was born in Dublin, and now is a Villanova student. Well known on campus, Ron impressed eastern track experts in indoor track this season.

March 25: Owen B. Hunt reveals in "Ireland Today" what a visitor to Ireland would see and how economic and social conditions affect the visitor's views.

Mr. Hunt was born and reared in Ireland. He received a Master of Oratory degree from Pittsburgh College and has been a member of the cabinet of Pennsylvania.

Irish Music

March 28: "Irish Music", its traditions and history, its collections and preservation is the subject of an address by Mr. Edward Lee, born in England of Irish parents, associated with Irish Republican volunteers, and first president of Irish Musicians Union of Philadelphia.

March 29: The Rev. George O'Donnell, LL.D., dicusses the "Book of Kells" with 39 slides covering manuscript illumination, Irish Art, Monasticism, and the reading of manuscripts.

Father O'Donnell, a professor at St. Charles Seminary, Overbrook, is author of a history of that seminary, and co-author of "Midnight Calculator".

Linen and Handkerchiefs

March 30: The representative of the Irish Linen Guild of New York City expounds on "Linen" with the aid of a film on the manufacture of Irish linen and the history and romance of handkerchiefs.

The talks are sponsored, respectively, by the Gaelic Athletic Association, Men of Roscommon, Men of McSwiney Club, Delaware County Irish Association, and the Central Organization of Catholic Women.

All talks start at 8 P. M.

State Dept. Duo To Explain Plan Next Wednesday

Two representatives of the United States Department of State will be at Villanova next Wednesday to discuss new career opportunities in foreign service.

First written examination under the Department's new recruiting drive for the foreign service will be held in June.

Under the revised procedures, the written examination will take one day instead of the former three and it will offer greater opportunities to individuals with specialized backgrounds.

Visiting Villanova will be Mr. Greig Henderson and Mr. Robert O. Blake of the State Department.

Discuss Changes

These men will explain to Villanova students that from now on the written examination will be held in 65 cities and the oral examination which follows will be given in regional centers, rather than being limited to Washington as beforc.

Through the revised program, the State Department is attempting to follow one of the recommendations laid down by Secretary Dulles' Committee on Personnel.

The Committee recommended staffing virtually all officer positions in Washington and overseas with foreign service officers and for integrating Civil Service personnel now filling these positions into the Foreign Service Officer Corps.

New Men Needed

Since almost all vacancies will now be filled from the Foreign Service Officer Corps, there is an urgent need for new officers.

To be eligible to take the examination, candidates must be at least 20 years of age and under 31, American citizens of at least 10 years standing and if married, married to an American citizen.

Starting salaries for successful candidates range from $4000 to $5000 per year, depending on the age and experience of the candidate. Insurance and retirement benefits are granted, along with annual and sick leave.

Chemical Society Elects Fredericks To Presidency

Bob Fredericks, junior chemistry major, was elected president of the Villanova Chemistry Society last week. He will take office in September.

A regular midshipman from Staten Island, N. Y. and Augustinian Academy, he succeeds John Gilligan.

Fredericks said he hopes to schedule meetings at least once every three weeks next year, besides holding communion breakfasts, a dinner dance and field trips.

Two other officers, elected with Fredericks, were Cornelius Downey, vice-president and Herb Rammath, secretary-treasurer.

Also voted into office was an executive committee, composed of two sophomores, Vince Cardella and Charlie Ross; a freshman, Charlie Laier; and an at-large representative, Walt Winoski.

A religious calling is not to be brushed aside by Catholic young people, for "You have not chosen me," . . . . . .

THE PRIESTHOOD

As we hustle through each crowded year we often brush past March without averting to its singular importance. We forget that March is the month of the Incarnation, the month that marks the descent of God to man. At the Annunciation when Mary announced her fiat, the Word became flesh, full and perfect man. The agelong hope of humanity was more than fulfilled—Christ, Our High Priest, had come.

For centuries man had endured the cold, dead pain of his loneliness and isolation, waiting, hoping for someone who would tie the severed strands of his friendship with God. Man and God had not slowly drifted apart as human friends sometimes sadly do; their break had been sudden, final, executed with insult and effrontery. The creature had risen against the Infinite God.

Thrown back on his own resources man was powerless to effect a reunion because he was unable to repair the infinite offense. He experienced to the full the limitations of his finitness. It was then that God in His mercy sent among men His Only begotten Son, Christ, Our Brother. At last we had a mediator, a man like ourselves—a man who could love the beauty of waving fields and the quiet countryside, who could rest contentlly among friends, who could suffer ingratitude, betrayal and death—but a man who was also God. Because He was a man, He could offer reparation and because He was God, that reparation possessed a value more than sufficient to satisfy God's justice. On Calvary, Christ exercised the majestic fullness of His priesthood and prodigal humanity was welcomed again into the house of its Father. There in His blood He wrote the prefect definition of a priest—one taken from among men to offer sacrifice to God for the expiation of sins and to dispense God's gifts to men.

After His Ascension Christ continues to exercise His priesthood, not only by His intercession for us in heaven, but in a visible manner among men. He gives to men a participation in His priestly power. He calls them forth and imprints on their souls the indelible character of His priesthood; He consecrates their very being and gives into their hands His work of redemption. It is through them that the graces and fruits of Christ's death are applied to men and that God receives, by the continual renewel of the sacrifice of the Cross in the Mass, the homage and adoration that is due Him. What a stupendous proof of Christ's love—that He could give to men, mere men, the honor of extending the Incarnation through time, of perpetuating the presence of Christ among men. Such is the power and grandeur of Christ's priesthood.

This honor, indeed, is vested in men who by nature are frail and limited, but their insufficiency serves only to highlight the strength of God. Human brilliance, power of personality, and even sancity, although in themselves most excellent qualities, pale before the important truth—the priest is a man with a vocation. What really matters is that Christ has called him, consecrated him and sent him forth into the world of men as His minister and His representative.

WHAT MAKES AN AUGUSTINIAN DIFFERENT?

The only thing worse than working on a problem for which there is no answer, someone once said, is working on an answer for which there is no problem. And at first glance an article on what makes an Augustinian differ from other religious might seem to be just that, an elaboration on what is already obvious to all—or at least to all who have ever been interested enough to inquire about the matter. For if you ask an Augustinian what sets him apart from Passionists, Dominicans and Catholics in general, chances are he will reply: "Charity, an ardent, vibrant love of God and man, is the special mark of the Augustinian."

To the thoughtful inquirer, this answer raises more issues than it settles. Charity? But charity is what distinguishes all Catholics: "by this will all men know you are my disciples," said our Lord, "if you have love one for another." How, then, can the Augustinian claim this quality as his own?

The answer is that, strictly speaking, he can't; and not only that, he knows he can't. Then why does he? Because he is not speaking strictly, but popularly. Take another instance of the same thing: why does the Franciscan call poverty his characteristic mark? Because popularly and historically that has been the virtue people have associated with his group, and especially with Francis, his Father. And so it is with the Augustinians: the charity of their Father makes him a stand-out even among saints. As the competent historian, Philip Hughes, puts it, "The painters of the Middle Ages represented Saint Augustine with a heart in flames, and the symbol, for once ,really expresses the man's essential distinction." Here, Hughes too is speaking somewhat popularly but nonetheless validly. It must be remembered, however, that the thought cannot be carried to the "logical" conclusion that since this Order is marked by this virtue, therefore no one else can have it.

It's like half a dozen bakers, each manufacturing a distinctive doughnut. They all have to use the same basic materials; if one doughnut differs from another, it can't be in anything essential. Otherwise you don't have a doughnut. Well, that's how it is with religious families, too: they all have to use the same virtues, the same God-given means. No group has a monopoly on any essential ingredient. What makes them differ is that each has its own recipe, its own way of mixing the same basic elements. This recipe is found in the Order's own Rule and Constitutions. It is obedience to his Rule and Constitutions, then, that really distinguishes the Augustinian, because they are what he has and no one else has.

Now each Rule may stress a particular ingredient or virture more than the others, as the Trappist does with silence or the Franciscan with poverty. The Augustinian Rule, as we have seen ,stresses charity, but it also stresses humility (the three most important virtues, Augustine once said, are humility, humility and more humility). These two elements, love and lowliness, are brought to their perfection by following the recipe, obeying the Rule. And the Rule says they should be mixed and combined in a special bowl: the bowl called community life. That is why Augustine's sons say Office together, rather than apart like the Jesuits. That is why they own nothing, unlike the seculars.

In summary, then, obedience to his Rule and Constitutions, an obedience made in the spirit of charity and humility and exercised in community living, is what distinguishes the Augustinian from other religious. It sounds complicated. It is complicated (not to live but to explain). That's why it's so much easier to say: charity.

Father George Krupa, O. S. A., an Augustinian missionary in Japan, gathers about some of his little helpers in his parish in Nagasaki.

Retreat NOTICE

Father Kemme, University Chaplain, announces that all undergraduate students should pick up their Retreat Attendance Card in his office today or tomorrow.

Father John J. Coffee, Villanova seminary director, extends the missal of the Mass to young men taking solemn vows in the Villanova chapel early in their seminary life here on campus.

Cindermen Preparing For Season Opener With Navy

With the close of the indoor season two weeks ago, the Villanova track team has started preparation for the coming outdoor season which begins April 9 at Annapolis.

The numerous sophomore standouts will give this year's club a greater depth than has been available in previous seasons. This extra depth will be particularly helpful in the dual meets. Last spring, Coach Jim Elliott's trackmen lost only to West Chester State Teachers College in five dual meets. The team has high hopes for a perfect dual meet record.

The highlights of the outdoor season will be the New York and Penn Relays, plus, of course, Blue and White Day at Villanova.

Mile Relay Candidates

In the New York and Penn Relays the crack mile relay team will be out to overtake the fast-moving quartet from Morgan State College, which has dominated this event for the past two seasons. Once again Coach Elliott will have a difficult decision in choosing three men from the group of Captain Jim Moran, Red Heitman, Al Peterson, Tippy Maliff, and Al Ligorelli to team with Charlie Jenkins to form the mile relay foursome.

Another top event at the Relay Carnival will be the distance medley. Villanova will have the champion and runner-up in IC4A mile—Alex Breckenridge and John Kopil—as members of this team. Bill Rock, dependable senior, will also probably be on this team.

This spring season should be a good one for pole-vaulter Don Bragg. Performing very well against the nation's best in the indoor meets, Don has consistently improved his heights.

A few missing faces in the spring meets will the sensational Freshman trackmen Ron Delaney, George Sydnor, and Phil Reavis. Villanova fans must wait until spring to see these men in outdoor competition.

READ THE VILLANOVAN

Mahan Drills Ball Nine

Catcher Bill Pearson fouls off a bunt attempt as his colleague with the "tools of ignorance" closes his eyes behind the mask. Snow last week hurt the baseball club's work-out schedules, with much more work set during this week.

With a few positions tentatively filled and most spots still undecided, the Villanova baseball team is being drilled daily by Coach Art Mahan in anticipation of the opener with Vermont on March 30. Despite the typical cool, windy March weather, the team has managed to play an intrasquad game almost every day for the past week.

Battle For Positions

The battle for starting assignments at several positions has produced sharp competition. At first base, holdovers Jack Helm and Tom Casey, as well as big Don McComb, are in contention for the regular assignment. At present it appears that there are five men who are good possibilities for the remaining three infield spots. Returnees Don Muchaetti and Dave Hinnigan, who has a bad foot, are finding stiff opposition from sophs Ron LaMontagne, John DiGiallorenzo, and Charlie DiGiovanni. Almost any combination could be the final result since most of these men can play more than one infield position.

Right field is another big question mark in Coach Mahan's starting lineup. Jack Dirk, Doc Doherty, Dave Burns, and Al Ciarrochi are hopefuls for this job.

Peters Returns

Left and center field and catcher seem to be held down by established veterans from last year's fine club. Jack Peters will probably be in his familiar spot in left. Bill McGarry has shifted from right to center this season, and Bill Pearson has an edge in the receiving department.

The least of Mahan's worries appears to be the pitching staff. Fireballer Dan Severino and crafty Dick Scott are back for another tour of duty and have been supplemented by Bob Scalzy, Don Nagy, and Dick Black—all promising sophomores.

With a break from the weatherman and an absense of unexpected slumps, this season could be a very successful one.

Golfers Elect Charlie Stone; Qualifying Rounds Due

Plans for the 1955 golf season were discussed last Thursday at the first meeting of the golfing team. Charlie Stone, a returning letterman, was elected captain of this year's squad.

Stone announced that qualifying rounds will be played this Saturday and Sunday at a course to designated by him. Eighteen holes of medal play will be held each day, with the eight men posting the lowest combined figure winning team positions.

Weekend Schedule

Tentative parings are as follows for Saturday morning.

9:00 a. m.—Jack Kelly, Bill Jones, Jack McGrath, Ben Klemanowicz.

9:10 a. m.—Joe Gallagher, Dick McEntee, R. McElhaney, Tom Holland.

9:20 a. m.—Lou Blanchet, Don Seaton, James McElhaney, Jack Reardon.

9:30 a. m.—Fred Morris, Skip Killmond, Pete Meehan, Fred Anton.

9:40 a. m.—Tom Thornton (any newcomers)

9:50 a. m.—Charlie Stone (any newcomers).

Anyone, except freshmen, are eligible to play and are invited to submit their name to Charlie Stone, in room 332 Austin Hall, before Friday, if they wish to play in the qualifying rounds this weekend.

Prospects Good

Prospects for this season's club look very bright. Only one man, Bill Albertus, was lost last year through graduation, and a promising group of sophomores are anxious for the opportunity to oust the returning veterans.

Villanova's newly - formed musical group, the Commodores will entertain at a Jazz Concert at the Tea House Sunday.

The Concert, requested after a successful session at the Tea House Feb. 20, will feature the sounds of the Commodores, and the Pied Pipers, of the University of Pennsylvania.

An invitation to the Villanova student body was extended by Miss Anne Stanford, chairman of the Rosemont College Social Committee. The affair will start at 2:30 p.m.

Engaged

Engagement of Art Knowlton, former varsity football lineman, to Rosemarie Pecillo, an education student in the Evening Division, has been announced.

Knowlton, who took his BS in education last June, is stationed in Germany with the Army.

Miss Pecillo teaches in St. Helena's parochial school, Center Square, Pa.

Date of the wedding has not been set.

Hot Trotters Win Title; Beat Sullivan Hall 61-35

Doc Dougherty lays one down as baseball practice moves along under Coach Art Mahan.

King Basketball ended its reign over intramural sports last week when the "Hot Trotters" beat Sullivan. When the fracas ceased, the "Hot Trotters" were the Intramural champs by virtue of a 61-35 victory.

For the winners, Mike Boruch was high man in point production with 22 points. Van Injaian followed with 18. Smith had 9, and O'Sullivan netted 6 The Trotters gained control of the backboards, to leave the court with a 30-17 half time advantage.

As far as the losers were concerned, Jim Brady took the scoring honors with 10 points. Tied for second were Ed Zipf and Joe Donnelly with 8, while Joe Saldutti contributed 6. The usual playmaking talents of Zipf and Donnelly failed to slow the high-geared Trotter offense.

Austin Defends Title

On Monday, intramural water basketball started its tenure, with 14 teams in the league. Returning from last year is the Austin squad, defending champion.

Ed Geisz announced that the intramural swimming championships will be held today at 4:30. To accommodate the latecomers, entries will be accepted until 4:30. The events will include the 50 freestyle, 50 backstroke, diving, 100 freestyle, 100 breaststroke, and the 200 freestyle.

Softball Begins 27th

Next Monday will see the opening of intramural softball. This will be the earliest opening ever for this sport. The Fedigan "Aces" will attempt to protect the diadem they won last year. Thus far, 23 teams have entered the tournament. Teams wishing to enter must have their applications in by tomorrow afternoon.

To the pleasure of the cult d'tennis, the nets are up on the courts. With all the rack(qu)ets on campus, the courts should be crowded.

MVP Award Won By Devine; Whelan Honored at Banquet

Jack Devine, captain of Villanova's 1954 - 55 basketball team, received the Most Valuable Player award at the fifth annual banquet of the Villanova Club of South Jersey on Monday night. Devine was selected by his teammates for the second successive year.

Jack, who was a steadying influence throughout the season, was praised by coach Al Severance for his all-around play. Devine was the second leading scorer for the N.C.A.A. participants with 429 points for a 15.3 average, and repeated as rebound leader with 335.

Seven Lettermen

Seven lettermen were honored with gold basketballs for their fine performances. These included: Bob Schafer, all-time Villanova career record-holder, Devine, John Cirino, Allen Griffith, Bob Powers, Jim Smith, and Jack Weissman.

Whelan Honored

Bob Whelan received a special award as the "person who has contributed most to athletics at Villanova without due recognition." Mr. Whelan was honored for his contributions in the capacity of Business Manager. Other recipients of this award have been Rev. Edward McKee, O. S. A., 1954, and trainer John Nevins, 1953.

Toastmaster for the affair, held at Kenny's restaurant in Camden, was Neil Dieghan, Villanova graduate. Other speakers were President Very Rev. James A. Donnellon, O. S. A., coach Severance, and Thomas F. Devine, National Alumni President.

Villanova Third in Metropolitan Swim --- Couig Sparkles

Villanova University's merrmen finished third in the second annual Metropolitan Philadelphia Collegiate Swimming Championship last week. The Mainliners scored 21 points to trail Penn, 93, and LaSalle College, 45, in the team standings. LaSalle was the defending champion. Temple University, 18, and Drexel Tech, 3, finished fourth and fifth.

Penn's Parland Johnstone was the individual standout, capturing the 150-yard medley, and the 200-yard backstroke. While Villanova did not take a first place, they performed well against seasoned opponents. The individual standouts for the Wildcats were sophomore Don Couig and Bob Duffy.

Couig Sets Record

Couig pushed the Quakers' Parland Johnstone to a new meet record in the 150 individual medley events. This was Don's first defeat in the medley, but he established a school record with the time of 1:38.1. Johnstone tied another record, as he edged Couig in the 200-yard backstroke. Duffy finished third in the 50-yard freestyle event to complete the individual placing for Villanova.

Additional points were gathered in the 400-yard freestyle relay, as the quartet of Duffy, Jim Donnelly, Denny Rinkacs, and Couig finished second to a record breaking Penn foursome. Villanova's regular season log was 6-5-1.

Tennis Team Troubles

By Norm Feldpush

With the close of the winter sports season, Villanova athletic fans can look forward with anticipation to the approaching spring sports program. Villanova will be represented in varsity baseball, track, and golf competition. The highlight of the season will be the annual Blue-White Day on May 7, which will present a day-long sports carnival.

Pete Quinn

However, one sport is noticeable in its absence, tennis. While Villanova has the facilities and the student talent necessary to maintain tennis, the presence of the team has failed to materialize. This activity has been under the direction of the intramural department for the past several years.

There are problems encountered in beginning a new sport. Pete Quinn, junior Arts major, has been investigating these, and believes that a suitable plan can be developed.

Suitable Talent Available

Quinn has learned that talent furnishes no obstacle to the tennis plan, as Villanova has established tennis stars numbered among the student body. Senior Frank Leonard has played on the Junior Davis Cup team, and is regarded as one of the outstanding young players in the nation. Junior Pete Scott held the first singles position on Bucknell University's net squad before coming to Villanova. Vinny Quinn is a sophomore with a vast tennis background.

If the tennis courts were used for team practice only, they might be unavailable for general student use. Pete has revealed that some neighboring schools and colleges have offered the use of their clay and grass courts.

Financial Needs Small

Financial problems encountered are negligible. The golf team is existing on a minimum budget, which is adequate for satisfying their monetary needs. Tennis would be less expensive, as each prospective member contacted has the complete equipment necessary, and is willing to share other expenses.

A university which maintains as extensive a big time football and basketball program which Villanova does, often loses sight of the value of athletics for the student who is not the much sought after high school hero. Villanova's athletic policy is presently one of expansion, as proven by the addition of golf and swimming in recent years. However, tennis is virtually a must at the present time, and should soon be conducted on the intercollegiate level.

St. Pattie's Day Has Passed, But Here at Villanova:

A Good Irishman's Fervor Lingers On

As everywhere it should, in the words of the author, one of Eire's most vehement Defenders

By Kenneth Pyle

Kenneth Pyle, author of this article, is a Senior Political Science major. Presently residing in Germantown, he is known to his friends as one of Villanova's most ardent admirers of all things Irish.

On the 17th of March, many millions of eyes the world over focus on the Emerald Isle. 'Tis then that all the world is Ireland's stage. It is the feast of Irleand's greatest saint, the Apostle of Ireland, St. Patrick.

According to Church historians, St. Patrick was born in Western England (at that time inhabited by Britons—a Celtic people), about 389 A. D., son of a landed Briton of Roman citizenship and Christian Faith. At sixteen, he was seized by Irish raiders and enslaved in Ireland. Later, he escaped to the Continent, entered Holy Orders and, about 432, returned to Ireland as a missionary bishop. There, he labored with notable zeal until his death at 72.

The Ireland of Patrick's day was one of disunity and quarreling among the clans. Patrick instilled the Christian spirit of love and peace and, before his death, he had the satisfaction of seeing almost all of Ireland converted to Christianity. St. Patrick has since become the symbol of national unity, and his feast given to manifestations of that unity.

There are some Irish, such as are personified in Sean O'Faolain, who make St. Patrick's Day an occasion for cynicism and destructive criticism. There are some that feel it is a day to fulfill a sublime duty to taste every available liquor within reach, and once that mission is accomplished, to start all over again. But, to the greater majority of the Irish, and their descendants, it is a day of celebration, to proclaim to the world that they are Irish. The wearing of the green, parades, pipes and drums, shamrocks, shilelaghs and flags, jigs, reels and Irish songs are all manifestations of this proclamation. They are Irish and proud of it, and indeed, they have reason to be—for their's is a great heritage.

It is on St. Patrick's Day that much of this great heritage is recalled. Ireland is a proud nation and has every right to be, for she suffered much to preserve her traditions and Faith. The history of Ireland is packed full of great men and events. O'Connor, MacMorrough, O'Donnell, O'Neill, Sarsfield, Grattan, Emmett, O'Connell, Mitchell, Tone, McCracken, Parnell, Pearse and DeValera are just a few of the many heroic personalities found in the pages of Irish history. Their names are connected with rebellions against the yoke of tyranny from across the Irish Sea. The history of Ireland is the history of man's fight for freedom and self determination against overwhelming odds. It is the history of a brave people, steadfastly keeping their Faith against the most harsh and incredible persecution, and outrages against human dignity.

It is the history of a heroic people who, despite religious persecution, political oppression disenfranchisement, economic exploitation and social discrimination, down through many centuries, have not only perserved their culture and language, but have won their independence and have been one of the major bulwarks of Catholicism in the Western World.

This is the glory that is Ireland's, and one need not wonder why pride swells the Irish heart on St. Patrick's Day, for he has, indeed, been given a great heritage. Erin Go Bragh!

A.S.C.E.

The Villanova Chapter of the American Society of Civil Engineers will sponsor a panel discussion on the applications of the soils mechanics theory to the design of structural foundations tonight at 7:30 in 215 Mendel.

Chapter President Joe Maggiore urges all members of the chapter to turn out for the discussion, which will be attended by professional engineers, ASCE student chapters from other area engineering schools and engineering faculty members.

The panel: Mr. Leo Porter, chief bridge engineer of the Pennsylvania Department of Highways; Mr. Francis Wagman, noted bridge building contactor; Dr. Louis Berger, consulting engineer and soils mechanics expert; Mr. A. E. O'Brien, executive secretary of the Associated Pennsylvania Constructors.

Program was arranged by Mr. Miles Potter, associate professor of civil engineering.

PHYSICS CLUB

The Physics Club will meet twice more before Easter vacation, according to President Dave Vachon.

He said the program for tomorrow's meeting at 10:30 a. m. in the Physics Lab is incomplete, but a discussion by two math majors will feature the March 31 meeting.

James Welch and Fred Heuber will discuss topics in contemporary mathematics at next week's meeting.

Last week, Frank Thornton, freshman physics major, addressed the club on some elements of real and complex variables.

Meanwhile, Vachon's series on the oscilloscope was concluded at last week's meeting.

DESPERATE FOR CASH?

Need a crisp ten spot to cover that long week end?

That's the reward waiting for the winner of Turf and Tinsel's contest to choose a cover for the program of "Jessica James."

Cover ideas must be in the T n' T Office (basement of C & F) by April 12, according to Dick Cooke, T n' T business manager.

An entry should be on 8½"x 11" paper and must contain:

1) name of the show
2) dates of show—April 27 through 30
3) contestant's original idea

If the switch comes off, it will mark the second time in as many years that the date of the Blazer Ball has been transferred.

The Class of '56 sponsored the most successful Ball in Villanova history after the affair was moved from the middle of Junior Week. Previously, the Ball was overshadowed by competing events during the gala social week.

DPM

Delta Pi Mu, in an attempt to work its members into a retreat spirit, will hold its first communion breakfast April 3. Annual three day retreat opens that night.

President John De Remigis said Mike Horan is surveying Philadelphia area Restaurants for the breakfast after Mass. The Viking Inn is a possibility for the affair.

Fraternity brothers should make reservations before next Thursday with either Mike Horan (305 Sullivan) or Don Alton (307 Sullivan).

T n' T

Tickets for Turf and Tinsel's "Jessica James"—set for the Field House April 27 through 30—will go on sale April 11.

This was decided at a meeting of the business staff, according to Business Manager Dick Cooke.

Members of the Publicity Staff will meet tonight at 7:30 in the T n' T Office.

PHILOSOPHY CLUB

President Frank Trainor announced there will be a meeting of the Philosophy Club next Friday, March 25, at 2:30 p. m. in 204 Mendel. All students interested in becoming members are invited to attend.

LKD

Lambda Kappa Delta Fraternity will hold elections of officers for next year in May, President Tom Gumina announced.

Candidates were nominated last week.

Members were reminded that the fraternity's annual dinner dance will be held April 16 at the Broadwood Hotel.

Reservations may be made with Gumina, Don Rosato, Henry Sweeney or Floyd Nasuti.

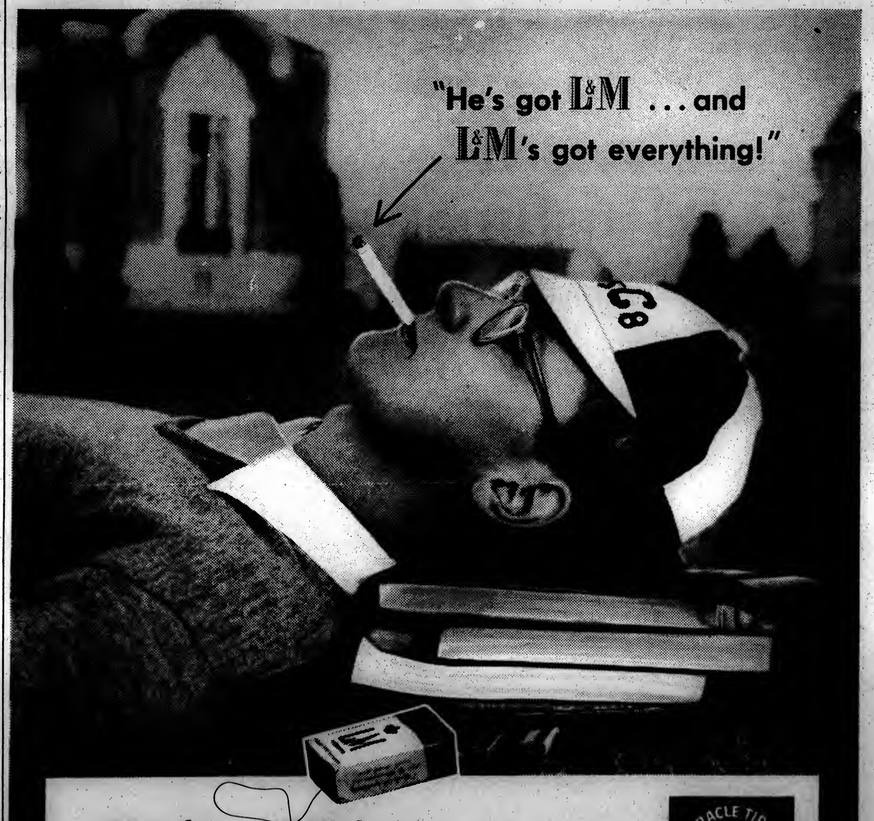
A.I.E.E.-I.R.E.

"Owning and Running a Small Electrical Business" was the topic of the talk given at the A.I.E.E. - I.R.E. meeting last Wednesday evening. The speaker, Mr. Edmund Capuzzi, an owner of the Polyphase Company, listed the factors encountered in successfully establishing a new company in the electrical indutry.



Polyphase Company, begun several years ago by Mr. Capuzzi, produces such products as transistor analyzers, pulse transformers and close-tolerance filters.

Professor John B. Clothier, moderator of the campus' A.I.E.E. group, brought the meeting to a close. Refreshments and informal discussions completed the electrical engineers' evening.

Commencement Speaker Narrowed to Six Seniors

Selection of a commencement speaker from the six remaining candidates will take place sometime after Easter.

Still in the running are: Charles P. Ake, and Joseph Dorris from the C&F School; Thomas Mentzer and William Quinn from the Arts and Sciences School; James Wrzesinski and Joseph Distel from the Engineering School.

These six seniors were chosen last Thursday after a reading test was administered to the original twelve candidates. The selection read was chosen by the individual and was designed to demonstrate his abilities in speech.

Six Prepare Speeches

Judging the test were Rev. George McLaughlin, O. S. A., Dean of Student Activities and Mr. Joseph Jonas, of the English Department.

The remaining six will prepare a five to seven minute speech on a topic of their own choice which would be suitable for delivery at commencement exercises June 6.

A board of judges will pick the commencement speaker after these speeches are delivered May 9.

Eliminated from the runing Thursday were John Gilligan and Edwin Daly from the Arts and Sciences School; Frank Licopoli and Thomas O'Brien from the Engineering School; Thomas Donahue and Joseph Heaps from the C&F School.

Dean Speaks

Rev. Edward M. Dwyer, O. S. A., university dean and professor of philosophy, will address a joint session of the American Catholic Philosophical Association and the National Catholic Educational Association next Wednesday in Atlantic City.

Olympics

Villanova's Irish Cultural Olympics became a part of the Congressional Record last month, when Representative William J. Green, Jr., a Philadelphia Democrat, had an editorial of the Philadelphia "Inquirer" inserted into the Congressional Record Mar. 23. The editorial, which had appeared March 7, described the Olympics and praised the culture of Ireland; which they represented.

Mentzer Repeats As Oratorical Contest Winner

Thomas Mentzer, senior history major, took first place in the Villanova Oratorical Contest for the second consecutive year.

No audience was present in C & F Auditorium and only two other students competed.

Mentzer will represent Villanova in the semi-final Eastern round of the nation-wide contest at St. John's University, Brooklyn, April 23.

No Villanova student has ever won the semi-final round, which is sponsored by the New York Journal American.

General Lee, Winning Topic

Mentzer based his winning five minute talk on Gen. Robert E. Lee on a "War and Peace" theme.

Judges for the contest—all Villanova graduates — were: Thomas F. Devine, '43, attorney and president of the National Alumni Association; J. B. Sanborn, '38, an organization analyst of the Atlantic Refining Co.; and W. E. Schubert Jr., '42, attorney.

Mr. Devine announced the winner.

The contest had been opened by Mr. Joseph Jonas to all Villanova students, but only five originally registered to compete. Two of these entrants dropped out before the competition.

Student Interest Disappointing

After the contest, Mentzer said he was naturally happy to win but that he was disappointed that more students had not participated. He said he hoped more interest would be shown in the contest next year.

Mentzer also complimented his opponents—two freshmen. Runner up was Carmen Basilovecchio. John Derek took third place.

Ken Moore Karavan:

New Drake Hotel Ballroom Scene of Spring Navy Hop

Villanova's NROTC midshipmen will put aside their rifles and textbooks Apr. 15 to dance to the smooth music of Ken Moore's Carvavan.

The Drake Hotel will house the Spring Formal, planned by the Dance Committee, chairmaned by Tom Ulrich and under the control of the Navy Recreation Committee.

Following the dictates of tradition, the dance will be dedicated to the graduating seniors.

Competition for Queen

On the first Tuesday after the return from Easter vacation, there will be inter-company drill competition, the Queen of the dance to be the date of the commander of the winning company. The Queen will have four ladies-in-waiting.

It's a formal dance. Flowers for the girls; service dress Blue Baker for the men. Translated for the non-NROTC Villanovans, service dress Blue Baker consists of dress blues with bow ties and white cap covers.

The Drake Hotel is located at 15th and Chestnut, city-center, convenient for the Philadelphia day-hops.

Seniors Consider Prominent Figure

A nationally prominent speaker will address the father-son banquet climaxing the senior Father's Day celebration April 23, Speaker Chairman Ed Daly announced.

Daly said that he could not reveal the names of any of the possible speakers, but negotiations are under way.

The speaker chairman indicated that the guest might be a prominent poltical or military figure.

Bud Ford

No Word

As far as other plans for the last social event of the Class of '55 were concerned, no announcements were forthcoming from either Class President Bud Ford or Bob Casey, chairman of Father's Day.

This will be the second consecutive year that the event has been scheduled for a spring Saturday. Before the affair was reinstated to the school social calendar in 1953, Father's Day had not been scheduled by any class for almost 20 years.

Money Prizes:

Spring Lynx Competition Still Open

Any budding O. Henrys have until April 15 to take a shot at the $15 first prize offered by the LYNX in its short story contest.

Two other awards of $10 and $5 are on the line. Deadline for entering has been moved up from April 30 to make it possible for the winning entry to appear in the May issue of the LYNX.

Potential entrants still have time during the Easter break to put together an entry.

Stories should be submitted to Editor Rees James, Dr. John Phillipson, Mr. James Mitchell or any member of the English department.

The literary magazine is also on the look out for non-fiction material—essays, poems, humor. This material may be submitted to James or any members of the English department.

Mr. Mitchell.

Phil. Group

The national meeting of the American Catholic Philosophical Association will be held at the Bellevue - Stratford Hotel in Philadelphia next Tuesday and Wednesday.

The meeting is under the patronage of Most Rev. John F. O'Hara, C. S. C., Archbishop of Philadelphia, and the Catholic universities, colleges and seminaries of the Philadelphia area.

Subject for discussion is "Knowledge and Expression." General sessions will be held in the mornings and round table discussions on special aspects of the problem will be convened in the afternoons.

Dr. James F. O'Brien, associate professor of philosophy at Villanova, is president of the Philadelphia chapter of the American Catholic Philosophical Association

Award to Jesuit

At a special session Tuesday evening the Cardinal-Spellman-Aquinas Medal will be awarded to Gerard Smith, S. J., of Marquette University.

The meetings are open to all interested persons.

Sophomores Name Dance Chairman; Blazers Arrive

Appointment of Jack Decker, civil engineer, as chairman of the Sophomore .Class' spring party, May 13, was announced last week by Class President Jack O'Rourke.

With distribution of blazers completed yesterday, the class officers will be able to focus their full attention on the social.

No other plans for the dance besides the announcement of the chairman have been decided, according to O'Rourke.

A Rocky Path

"Suffered under Pontius Pilate, was crucified, died and was buried. The third day He arose again from the dead . . . " During the days of Passion Week of 1955, these words, uttered many times over in the Apostle's Creed, cease to be mere words and become life. The minds of many men are taken back through the centuries to that first Passion Week in which Christ, the Gold-man bore patiently the manifold aggressions of foolish creatures. At the hands of man whom He, God, had created, he suffered the ignominious insult of death on the cross. Lest this chattering humanity regard itself as victorious, He, the Divine Person, arose on Easter Sunday to make known to all the enormity of His executioner's folly.

But some men in our present day and age choose not to let these words of the Apostle's Creed assume the appearance of life. Indeed, they choose not even to hear these words spoken. Perhaps on Sunday they may attend Mass to join in the praise of the Risen Christ. But on Spy Wednesday, Holy Thursday, Good Friday, they, like the apostles, are nowhere to be found. Christ even today must endure His cruel suffering alone.

We hope that this is not the case with the students of Villanova. Tomorrow we shall complete our annual Retreat. The Body and Blood of Christ will warm our hearts. Shall we let the warmth disappear? Shall we shrug our shoulders and say, "No church for me, this is my vacation?"

Don't be fools like the Jews who clamored for Barabbas instead of Christ. Don't choose your own pleasure before aid to Christ. Put into practice some of the noble principles that have been held out to you during these days of Retreat. Walk the path to Calvary with Christ. The unutterable joy as you receive Holy Communion on Easter Sunday will more than repay you for your journey.

Retreat, Hell!

These past few days of Retreat provided us with more than just a religious check on ourselves—they gave us the opportunity to evaluate for ourselves an objective accounting of our scholastic achievement thus far at the termination of three-quarters of the academic year.

This dual evaluation period could not have been more timely. Last week, quarterly exams came to an end, and the mid-term was passed. In this past schedule of Masses, conferences, and confessions, we undoubtedly had time to reflect on both phases of life.

Perhaps the statement from the motion picture "Retreat, Hell!" ". . . we're just advancing in another direction," is more than appropriate at this time. We are recalling now where we took the wrong steps, and from that point the issue is between God and us; certainly in this realization we are advancing.

Many of us can sit back at this stage of the school term and relax on congratulatory marks; many of us are still pouring out every thing we have only to fall short of the Dean's list; many of us are in the red, but only because of our own lethargy.

Need Exists in Education For Principle of Order

By Frank Trainor

The existence of a need for an integrating factor, or principle of order, within the structure of University education is, and has been, recognized. Investigations and surveys in this regard have resulted in a single mutual conclusion—that an integrating factor should exist. The emergent problem, however, is this: What should that factor be, and even more important, does that factor exist, in fact, even where its need has been recognized and ostensibly corrected?

This problem, of course, is immediately perceptible (or should be) to those in authority who are concerned with the ordering of curricula. From another point of view, however, and I am speaking now, of the student, the problem is either dimly perceived, or totally non-existent. Since the principle agent in the art of instruction is the student, I offer these thoughts for his consideration: What is the nature of this problematical entity called an integrating factor? Is it, in fact, in operation here at Villanova?

A Principle off Order

I have called this integrating factor a principle of order. That is what it is in terms of operation—the ordering principle of curricula. Essentially, it is that field of knowledge which is so fundamental as to form the axis of all knowledge.

Knowledge is not, contrary to popular student opinion, a great, static bulk to be eaten of sparingly, or even voraciously, as fancy or practical necessity decrees. It is a vital progression of wisdom, the assimilation of which constitutes education. It is a constant generation and creation of wisdom, aimed, ultimately, at the attainment of that Wisdom which is uncreated. Analogically, we may conceive of it as a continuous stream, emanating from some fountainhead, branching where it will, but always remembering its origin.

Let us consider this proposed integrating factor as the fountainhead from which, and around which, flow those fields of knowledge which ordered curricula offer for the student's assimilation.

What of Villanova?

We have examined the nature of an ordering principle in curricula and seen what it should be; next, we might ask: Is such a thing in operation here at Villanova?

In seeking an answer our first logical recourse is to the catalogue of studies prescribed by the university. We are immediately aware of the threefold division of Villanova into the Schools of Business, Arts and Sciences, and Engineering. The division alone suggests an enormous problem: Is an integrating factor possible in the face of the modern educational trend toward specialization and individualism, the existence of which seems to be diametrically opposed to the existence of a universal principle of order? This problem points up, rather firmly, the exacting requirements to be met by any proposed principle of integration.

English the Integrating Factor

Via further examination of the catalogue we might determine, by the stress laid upon it in required credit-hours, what field of knowledge poses, at least, as an integrating factor.

Such examination seems to point to English as the principal nomination for this position, with history next, and philosophy and religion running bad thirds.

The question next asked, in view of the foregoing, is: May it be validly elected to such an exalted, and equally demanding office?

(In my next article I shall offer some suggestions aimed at a solution of this problem, involving a proposed integrating factor, and its defense.)

India Not Committed In Cold War Battle

By Ed Daly

Nehru's India remains one of the greatest prizes in the international sweepstakes known as the "cold war." Most of the other prizes have either gone to the winner or are on the way. India, with its four-hundred million people and strategic location, is still on the shelf.

To some Americans India is already on the list of enemies. To these observers Nehru appears as an ally of Moscow, perhaps not a Communist, but certainly a fellow-traveler.

To other Americans, notably former Ambassador Chester Bowles, Nehru is the representative of generations of Asian hopes and dreams, a wise leader who is really a friend of the West, but who is frightened away by the specter of Western colonialism.

Nehru a Good Politician

Somewhere in between these two representations is the real Nehru. On the one hand, Nehru is no Communist; on the other, he is not merely the victim of some vague fear of colonialism.

Jawaharlal Nehru is a highly-educationed and intelligent man; he is very well aware of the realities of the world situation. Whether he speaks and acts according to this knowledge is another matter.

To begin with, Nehru is an Indian politician. To remain in power, he must cater to the prejudices of his countrymen. The most bitter hatred of most Indians is directed against colonialism. Therefore, Nehru, for purely political motives, could be expected to oppose the French in Indo-China or even the Americans in Korea.

Internal Improvements First

There are somewhat higher motives for Nehru's position, of course. Nehru is sincerely interested in advancing India. To achieve this goal, he feels that he must aviod any commitments that might involve heavy expenditures for defense instead of internal improvements. Furthermore, Nehru wishes to leave India free to act in a crisis in accordance with her own interests. He feels that to commit India to either side would destroy this freedom of action.

Despite all of these reasons why Nehru will not only not link India to the Western system but will even oppose policies deemed necessary for an effective defense against communist agression, there are still reasons to be hopeful.

Suspicious of Communists

First of all, Nehru is not going to let the Communists take over India. His recent strong stand against them in Andhra state elections is proof of that.

Secondly, Nehru is becoming more suspicious of Communist motives than before. Several of his recent public statements have been sharply critical of the Chinese Red policy.

Thirdly, Nehru is far closer to the Western position than to the Eastern. If a situation developed in which India had to make a clear choice between the two camps, he would almost certainly choose the Western.

Peering . . .

By Dick Peer

Around Mendel Hall one day I noticed a huge oil slick flowing beneath the door where the IBM machine is kept. I looked in and found the almost-human machine in a state of collapse. It seems the poor thing was so overworked these Spring days keeping track of cuts that it just gave up and had a nervous breakdown.

At the recently revived street light in front of Sullivan Hall. It certainly is helpful and you can see all over the place. If you happen to live in the Hall you can save the college lots of money by studying by it. It even has charm during the day, with its beautiful mosaic base.

At the result of the Irish Olympics which are now in. I see Villanova made out quite well; in fact they took every event—that was worth taking. Most spectacular, though, was the victory Robert Emmet hung up in the Dublin necktie party.

Here and there —

Whoever has the crutch concession on campus is really doing well these days. You're just not with it if you haven't broken something recently, and I don't mean the commandments.

Strictly Opinion

By Frank Hartmann

Villanova's Belle Masque has done it again. Last year it was "Stalag 17," and this year "Harvey" adds another laurel to their many.

What's a Pooka?

Under the direction of Father William Krupa, Belle Masque took the well known play by Mary Chase and turned it into one which was well enjoyed by all those attending. It's great story to work with, this tale of an invisible rabbit. Elwood P. Dowd, a middle-aged "rum-pot," has as his companion a Pooka, the rabbit. Pooka as described in the encyclopedia consulted by Wilson of the sanitarium staff: "Pooka. From old celtic mythology. A fairy spirit in animal form. Always very large. The pooka appears here and there, now and then, to this one and that one at his own caprice. A wise but mischievous creature. Very fond of rum-pots, and how are you, Mr. Wilson?" This line could very well symbolize the action and comedy of the whole play, a laugh from start to finish. Mr. Dowd's rabbit was as real a character as any other in the play.

Probably the one person who contributed most to this illusion was Elwood P. Dowd as portrayed by Bernie Coyne. Bernie, with Mr. Dowd's simple expression on his face, time and time again pleased the house with his skillful rendition. "Harvey" was Bernie's last appearance with Belle Masque and we have all appreciated his many characterizations with that organization.

If Jeanne Ward, a 2nd year Villanova Law Student, ever decides that Law isn't for her, she might do well to think of a stage career. She did an excellent job in the part of Veta Louise Simmons, Elwood P. Dowd's sister.

Jim Borden, in the part of Wilson, the sanitarium attendant, brought on laughs from his first cue to his last exit.

Ann Kaler, in one of the minor roles, impressed with her complete ease and naturalness on the stage.

Bob Erskine, well remembered for his part as 'Animal' in "Stalag," did another fine job in playing Dr. Chumley.

Sissy Gleeson, as Myrtle Mae Simmons, did her part effectively and with sincerity.

John Reardon distinguished himself in the part of the pompous Judge Gaffney. Much is expected of John next year.

Two of our Freshman Nurses, Priscilla O'Connor and Marilyn Dondero added materially to the excellent cast.

Drew Higgins was well cast in the part of Dr. Sanderson, while Mike Clark turned the climax of the play with his portrayal of the cabdriver.

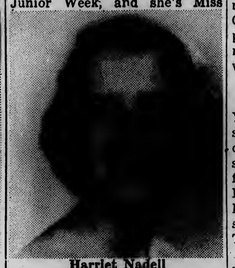
Steve Allen Group Judges For Jr. Wk. Queen Contest

By Bob Ford



Contest to End April 13; Number of Entries Rises

When Steve Allen and his troupe receive the Junior Week Queen Contest entries they will have a real problem facing them—but it will be a pleasant one. With just one week remaining in the Contest, Juniors are rushing to submit their entries. As these pictures attest, competition is strong and good.

Dick Moore has a date for Junior Week, and she's Miss

Ann Shoup

Harriet Nadell

Alice Leiser

Ann Kennedy

Alice Leiser of the Bronx. Alice is a 21-years old registered nurse from Lenox Hill Hospital, N.Y.C. Standing 5' 2", she weighs 112 lbs. and has brown eyes and auburn hair.

Sullivan Hall's Marty Slyboom offers Miss Miss Harriet Nadell, a comely, blue-eyed, brown haired young lady from Paterson, N. J. Harriet is 5'4" tall and a high school senior.

Margaret DeLong

Popular Ann Kennedy is the date of Pete Alberse. Ann has appeared at many Villanova functions with her favorite junior. She is a 5' 4" medical secretary and a graduate of Lasell Junior College of Auburndale, Mass.

Jack Jannucci, of Mainliners fame, has invited Miss Margaret DeLong, an attractive student nurse from St. Peter's, New Brunswick, N. J. Marge has brown eyes which set off her auburn hair. She is 5' 3" tall and weights 112 lbs.

Chestnut Hill's representative (and Paul Downey's, too) is Anne Marie Shoup, a blue-eyed brunette. This pert 19-year old stands 5' 7" and weighs 132 and just loves boys from Albany.

The pressure's on, Juniors. With just eight days remaining (the contest closes at midnight April 13) there is still time left. Lest you forget, here's a list of the prizes and the rules of the contest:

Remember that there are six winners, the Queen and her court of five. The Queen receives free bids to the Prom and to the Dinner Dance, and, if an out-of-towner, free hotel accomodations. The ladies of the court win Prom and Dinner Dance bids, but no hotel reservations.

The rules are these;

1. All members of the Junior Class are eligible to submit one picture.
2. Pictures, preferably at least 5" x 7", must be submitted to the Villanovan office or to the rooms of Harry Nash (242 Good Counsel) or Bob Ford (306 Sullivan) by midnight of April 13.
4. All pictures must be accompanied by the following information on a separate piece of paper attached to the picture or on the back of the girl's picture: girl's name, address, age, height, weight, color of hair, present occupation, schools attended; also, Junior's name, campus or home address, telephone number, and school in the University (arts, C&F, engineering).

"Animal Farm" As Reviewed By CampusCrier

Having finished reading the front page headlines, I turned to the entertainment section with Saturday's data in mind. I glanced over the usual array of "spectaculars," westerns, and thrillers, portrayed as "the year's finest" or "10 years in the making." It looked hopeless—the selection seemed poor and the stage shows were too expensive.

I was about to leave when a voice interrupted me. "May I borrow your paper?" I looked up—it was the intellectual giant of our English seminar. I had unjudiciously dubbed him a bookworm because of his amazing scope of knowledge of classic and modern literature.

"Sure, I'm finished." His eyes searched the theatrical page eagerly then fixed, accompanied by a shy smile. Curious, I glanced over his shoulder. A cartoon of a frowning pig glowered at me. Above it "Animal Farm" was boldly printed.

"What's that?" I questioned.

He turned, slightly embarrassed, "Oh, 'Animal Farm' is sort of an animated cartoon. It is based on George Orwell's book of the same name."

Testing him, I probed further. "What's it about, pigs?"

"Well, no, yes." He laughed softly, relaxing a little. "Actually it's a satire—political—on communism. Orwell uses these pigs to represent the leader of the farm animals revolt against Farmer Jones, the owner of the farm. But these pigs by their nature become gluttons, gluttons for power, and they rule the other animals badly.

"Thank you for the paper," he called.

As I pushed through the Villanovans in leaving the Pie Shoppe, I imagined the grunts and groans of the cartoon that he described and the anticipation of seeing "Animal Farm" was firmly grounded.

Successful Irish Cultural Olympics Come to Close

Last Friday brought to a close a successful month-long run for the Irish Cultural Olympics at Villanova. Wishes for success from President Eisenhower, Governor Leader, and the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Ireland greeted the start of the Olympics, March 6, and the many hundreds of pleased attendants at the talks and exhibitions attested to the fact that the Olympics were indeed a success.

Eighteen talks on all phases of Irish life by experts, and twenty-eight exhibits were the main attractions for the many visitors.

Father Daniel P. Falvey, O.S.A.

Special Lectures

Of special interest was the talk on the Book of Kells by the Rev. George O'Donnell of St. Charles Seminary which was given twice during the course of the Olympics. Ron Delaney, a Villanova student who has won a recognition in track, contributed his efforts in a talk on Irish sports. Several other of the talks were delivered by members of Villanova's faculty.

The many exhibits were distributed over the several floors of the Library and the Commodore Barry exhibit was housed, appropriately enough, in Commodore John Barry Hall. Some of these exhibits of special interest were the Abbey Players exhibit, the Book of Kells, the Joseph McGarrity collection, and the beautiful Waterford Crystal exhibit.

Fashions Favored

Sybil Connelly and her Irish Fashions were another highlight.

The Library itself provided new interest for the many visitors to the exhibits and talks.

New Sorority

Another sorority has emerged on Villanova's campus with the formation of Alpha Delta Chi, a graduate nursing society.

Announcement of the organization of the sorority followed formation of Pi Theta Chi for the girls in the undergraduate Nursing Division.

Helen Ozorowski, president, heads a slate of four officers. Other officers who will serve next year are Joan McAllister, vice-president; Anne Dolente, secretary; Elizabeth Moore, treasurer.

Florence Nightingale Day

Plans to revive the significance of Florence Nightingale Day, May 12, are being considered by the sorority.

Purpose of the organization is three-fold:

1. To promote professional and social unity among those graduate nurses aspiring to the baccalaureate degree in nursing.

2. To sustain and promote the highest ideals and traditions of the nursing profession.

3. To be a vitalizing force in the promotion of the best interests of its members.

Motto of Alpha Delta Chi is "Walk worthy of the vocation ye have chosen."

Two Engineers Awarded Trip To Ohio State

A prize paper contest and election of next year's officers were on the agenda of the joint A.I.E.E.-I.R.E. student branch meeting last Wednesday evening, Mar. 30.

Senior Jim Wrzesinski, Chairman of the electrical engineering group, won the contest sponsored by the American Institute of Electrical Engineers by delivering a paper on "Functional Color," written by himself and Bob Simonic. Wrzesinski and Simonic were awarded a trip to Ohio State University, where they will compete in the A.I.E.E. Second District contest.

Color and Culture

The paper, dealing with the effects of color on culture and industry, was chosen by a large audience as the best of the three presented.

Dick Burke delivered his paper, "The Bell Laboratories' Solar Battery," elaborating on the function and importance of the new device. Tulvio Durand presented a discussion of "Tape Recorder Design" on which he and Rudy Gangemi collaborated, and described some innovations in the machine's drive mechanism.

Preceeding the talks, balloting for the society's five officers for next year was held. Jack Downing was elected Chairman of the joint branch and George Ahearn, Vice-Chairman.

A.I.E.E.-I.R.E. Secretaries

A.I.E.E. Secretary will be Bob Hollinger, and I.R.E. (Institute of Radio Engineers) Secretary will be Jim "Spider" McEowen. Leonard Powell was elected Treasurer of the branch.

The "A.I.E.E.-I.R.E. Newsletter" announced the group's next meeting would be held on April 13 in 215 Mendel at 7:30 p. m. and would feature Mr. Wilmon Ware of the Philadelphia Electric Company speaking on "Power."

Speaks on Communications April 13:

Prominent McGraw Hill Editor Addresses A. I. Ch. E.; Claunch Wins Sunoco Award

Ken Claunch, Chairman of Villanova's A.I.Ch.E. society, has announced that Mr. Sydney D. Kirkpatrick, Editorial Director of McGraw Hill Publications, and prominent man in the publishing field, will speak here on April 13 on "Communication—the Neglected Unit Operation."

The meeting will be at 7:30 p. m. in the Chemical Engineering Building.

Hugh T. Sharp, class of '53, former editor of the VILLANOVA ENGINEER, and now Assistant Editor of Chemical Engineering magazine, will also be present at the meeting.

It was also announced that Claunch had won third prize in the annual Zeisberg Awards sponsored by the Sun Oil Company for the Middle Atlantic chapter of the A.I.Ch.E. He had submitted two reports on "Shell and Tube Heat Exchangers" and "Humidification Chambers."

At a meeting held last Wednesday, John Salvo was given an award for having the highest scholastic average among the junior chemical engineers. At the same meeting nominations were held for the society's four officers, and 16 names were received.

Here's Complete Coverage of the Week, Answering Just About Any Question...

"This Is Junior Week"

This is the line-up of seven (so far) straight days of uninterrupted enjoyment for Juniors and all Villanovans

Mother's Day Plans Are All But Complete

If weather permits, this year's Mother's Day will include the first outdoor Mass in Junior Week history, chairman Frank Hartmann has announced, adding that just about all other preparations for the big day for Mom and Junior are complete.

With assistance from Jack Padova, John Henry, Bruce Martin and Phil Taddeo, the entertainment, tree planting, and the flower angles have been arranged.

Outdoor Mass

The outdoor Mass and Benediction will take place at the shrine of the Blessed Mother behind Alumni Hall. The luncheon will be held in the priests' dining hall and the student cafeteria, the banquet in the evening at the Field House.

Hartmann also announced that John Stangl will handle the chores of receiving and laying out the Diaper Dan pictures, which have already begun to come in from Mothers of Juniors. The judges for the annual contest to name the cutest Junior (of about twenty years ago) will be announced later.

Good Entertainment

The Villanova Singers, the Mainliners Quartet ,the Concert Band and a group from Turf and Tinsel will entertain at the Field House banquet. All catering arrangements have been completed by John Henry, who has made plans for a roast beef dinner. The speakers at the banquet will be Rev. Thomas A. Calphin, O.S.A., class moderator Hartmann, and class president Harry Nash.

SYMPATHY

The staff of the VILLANOVAN expresses its sympathy to Robert Fredericks, junior chemistry major, on the death of his father.

Eddie Condon:

Class of '56 Jazz Seats Reserved

Jazz Concert chairman Jack Kelly has announced plans for a special reserved section for Juniors, whether with or without dates, on both afternons of Eddie Condon's performances in the Field House Junior Week.

"That's one of the reasons we had that three-day advance sale for Juniors," said Jack, "so we could get an idea of about how many seats we should plan to reserve both days."

Good Response

Tickets for the Wednesday-Thursday sessions went on sale last Thursday to all Villanovans and the general public, and the response was good, especially in view of the fact that concerts are still a month away.

Everybody is urged to get tickets as soon as possible—there's no problem about which day to go—if a student buys a Wednesday ticket and decides later he wants to go Thursday, he may just switch tickets by contacting any of the sellers.

Those Juniors peddling tickets are Kelly, his assistant chairman, Phil Keane, Bob McCaffery, Steve Bernocco, Jack Gerrard, Tom Meaney, Joe Schultz, Joe Jackson, Vinnie Buffano, Harry Nash, Jerry Guerrisi, Nick Mazzoni, Dave Burns and others.

Record Crowd Seen For Dinner Dance at Palumbo's

A fine Class of '56 response for tickets in the past week and a half indicates a record crowd for the Junior Dinner Dance in Junior Week, chairman Dick Fitzpatrick and ticket head Nick Mazzoni report.

Over 120 Juniors reserved seats for the affair at Palumbo"s through last week-end, and many more did so yesterday and today in the Pie Shoppe. There were already some 50 reservations in prior to last week.

The actual fundamental preparations for the Saturday night tradition have long since been completed. Fitzpatrick, with aid from Bob McDonnell, Jim Hippler and Joe Morris, has lined up the combos to play in addition to the featured Tony Desmond, the menu has already been set, and the floor plan agreed upon. The floor show program will be completely planned within the next two weeks.

Reserve Now

All Juniors are urged to get their $10 in to Mazzoni or Fitzpatrick as soon as possible, so that the better seats may be obtained.

Two floors will accommodate what is expected to be about 450 couples attending. The evening's program includes dinner, a floor show, speeches, and dancing, lasting until 2 a. m. The affair will begin at 6. Palumbo's is located in downtown Philadelphia on Catherine Street; mimeographed maps of directions to the club will be distributed to all Juniors beforehand.

Deadline the 22nd

Tickets for the Dinner Dance will be on sale after return from Easter vacation, but the absolute deadline for buying tickets and making reservations is April 22, one week prior to the opening of Junior Week, in order to allow for final arrangements depending on attendance to be made efficiently.

A booth will be set up in the Pie Shoppe for a week prior to the closing of sales—from Monday the 18th of April through Friday the 22nd.

Mazzoni lives on the second floor of Sullivan Hall, Fitzpatrick on the third floor.

Interest Perking Up:

"Inter-Club Talent Show" Promises Color, Rivalry

Talent Show co-chairmen Jim Bambury and Dick Peer, encouraged by a responsive submission of entries last week, have announced several new developments regarding the new event on Tuesday night of Junior Week.

First of all comes the news that the new campus musical group, the 14-piece Commodores, will play for the informal dance following the Band Concert and Talent Show in the Field Show.

Judges Selected

Peer and Bambury have also been hard at work lining up the program and judges—two of which have already been chosen, George Noake and Bob Whalen, very successfully connected with Turf and Tinsel's many top hits. The third choice, a prominent Philly disc jockey, will be announced later.

A third development will bring the Rosemont College octet to the Field House for a guest appearance during the judging period after the competition. This group was very well received in its recent performance with the Rosemont and Villanova glee clubs on the girls' campus.

Band Concert

Preceding the Talent Show, of course, will be the annual University Band's performance, with Bob Schiller directing; the Band, moderated by Father Burns, has traveled very successfully through an ambitious concert schedule this year.

Some 12 entries have been submitted, and the co-chairmen, extending the March 30 deadline in hopes of getting 15 contestant groups, urge campus organizations to get their entries in immediately.

Plaque to Winners

A plaque will be awarded to the winning entry for the organization it represents, and individual medals will be given to the members of the victorious group. Any type of talent is included, with between one and five men taking part.

Belle Masque, T n' T, the Physics Club, WVIL, the Villanova Singers, DPE, the University Band, and five other organizations are those to submit entries already.

Romantic Mood Set for Prom; Many Contribute

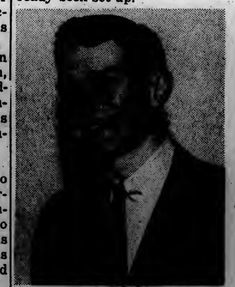
An ambitious decorative theme that will completely transform the Field House on the night of May 6 is moving along nicely in its preparations, reports Junior Prom chairman Greg Gehring, who adds that the emphasis will be on the creation of a romantic atmosphere.

"Decorations chairman Phil Butler has been working for a long while now with his staff of Juniors, and things are moving right along," said Gehring. "Those boys have proved their ability in the past in this field, and we are looking forward to their greatest effort come the big night."

Regaining Prominence

The band that was No. 3 in the country in 1948-49 and is now making a bid to recapture that popularity, Buddy Williams, will be the featured, with intermission music by the local favorite, Mike Pedicin's band, the first such high-caliber group to perform during Villanova prom intermissions.

Refreshment chairman Dick Cross, who did an excellent job in a similar field for the orphans' party, reports that his plan of action is wel-advanced, and adds that ,instead of the usual Coke, a ginger ale-orange ice punch will be available for prom-goers.



Posters Ready

Publicity posters for the prom have already been secured by Mario DiVincenzo and Henry Guerrisi, publicity heads, who report that these any other hand-produced signs will be posted after return from the holidays. Gene Bilan is assisting the committee in this regard.

Bob Fredericks, favor chairman, has completed the deal with a Philadelphia company for the prom favors, which will be "different, functional, and very attractive to the young ladies, I believe."

Work on Programs

Class secretary Bob McCaffery, Jim Bambury and Tom Mullen are among those collection patrons for the prom program, and have had fair success thus far. The actual page line-up for the program has already been set up.

He will discuss "Modern American Drama."

Meanwhile, fraternity brothers gathered at the Viking Inn Sunday for a communion breakfast after attending 9 a. m. Mass in the Chapel.

May Elections Announced

President John De Remigis announced at a meeting Thursday that elections for next year will take place during the second week of May.

Thirteen members have been approved by the administration to run for six offices.

Candidates: for president—Frank Adams and Owen Hickey; for vice-president—Bob McCaffery and Phil Taddeo; for corresponding secretary — Joe McCullen, Bob McLaughlin and Tom Smith; for recording secretary—Jack Eddinger and Jim Judge; for treasurer—Brendan Flynn and McCullen; for Student Council representative—Bob Ford and Den Rinkacs.

First NFCCS Variety Show Set Here

The first annual Intercollegiate Variety Show of the Philadelphia Regional Council of the NFCCS will be displayed in the Field House, Tuesday, April 19 at 8 p. m.

At two successful shows at Immaculata and La Salle, the performers drew compliments from spectators.

The newly - formed Navy Dance Band, the Villanova Commodores and the Villanovans will provide music to accompany the acts. The fast-catching band on the Main Line, the Commodores, is under the direction of Gino Gallina.

Commoders, Smooth and Hot

Their feature—smooth dance music—mixed with jazz should add to the show.

Villanova contributions are John Giordano, Edward Murphy, Jack Erdlen and Skip Killmond.

Chairman for the show, Jack Monihan, anounced completed plans for the Villanova show. Assisting Jack are Frank Collins, publicity; Jim Greenlee, posters; Paul Donohue, tickets; and George Sinnott, production.

The entire show is under the direction of Jim Michener, regional treasurer of the NFCCS.

Tickets will go on sale in the Pie Shoppe immediately after Easter lay off. They may also be purchased from committee—men or from any member of the NFCCS.

"The scholar is a man of no more account in the street than another man; as the sound of a flute is not lounder than the noise of noise of a saw. But as the tone of the flute is heard at a greater distance than any noise, so the fame of the scholar reaches farther than the credit of the banker."

Emerson

Pictured are members of the drill teams of Penn State and Villanova, talking over the announcement that the local unit has become a member of the Pershing Rifle Team.

Drill Team In Pershing Rifles

Villanova's NROTC drill team on Mar. 25 became the first All-Naval R.O.T.C. unit to become a member of the Pershing Rifles Organization, according to Dick Schleicher, Public Information Officer for the Villanova group. The unit forms Company W of the 5th Regiment of the Pershing Organization which has twelve regiments in the United States. Twenty-one Companies form the 5th Regiment.

Walt Gould is Captain of the Villanova company. Bill Doyle is first lieutenant; Steve Lyons, the only senior of the group, is First Sergeant; and Dick Schleicher, Owen Hickey, Karl Scheetz, Dave Oberholzer, Paul Lukas, and Jack Essig are Second Lieutenants. There are thirty members of the company all together.

Initiated by Penn Staters

The V.U. company was initiated into the "Rifles" by a student committee from the Penn State unit in Commodore John Barry Hall.

The Villanova team will take part in drill and rifle competition at Penn State, April 30. Walt Gould, Dick Schleicher, Karl Scheetz, and Stan McGeehan are set for the competition with a fifth man still to be selected. Nine of the twenty-one units of the 5th Regiment plan to be there. There will also be a Student Officers breakfast.

General John (Black Jack) Pershing founded the Pershing Rifles Organization to stimulate drill and rifle competition and build espirit d' corps. The organization consists mainly of Army R.O.T.C. units.

ICG Moderator, Member Attend Penn Convention

Frank Sabia, Guy Milne and Frank Stagnitto, representing the Intercollegiate Conference on Government, accompanied Dr. Fred Khouri, ICG moderator, to a two-day convention sponsored by the Citizenship Clearing House, at Penn.

Students and faculty representatives from 35 colleges and universities in eastern Pennsylvania were invited.

Purpose of the Clearing House is to acquaint students with politics as a profession.

Political Insight Gained

Villanova's ICG representatives said the convention was a "fine insight" into the real character of the visiting politicians. They also commented that the panel discussions and speakers offered an accurate and "not too rosy" picture of politics as a career.

The assembly of 250 delegates was divided into five panels for discussion of such questions as "What type of work is available on an avocational basis?" "Are there career opportunities in politics?" and "What type political work can students do while still in college?"

Garbarino Editor:

School's First Law Review Publication Is Distributed

After five months of intensive work, the preliminary edition of Villanova's Law Review was distributed last week.

Editor-in-chief of the mimeographed "training issue" is Robert Garbarino, top-ranked man in the second year class. Thomas Brady, a St. Peter's (Jersey City) graduate, is Case & Comment editor, and Joseph Glancey, Villanova '52, is Article and Book Review editor. The latter two also are instructors of Business Law in the undergraduate school.

Dean Rouschlein

This issue and one to be published May 6, are intended to give editorial experience for the first printed edition, to be distribute Jan. 1956, said Garbarino.

Review Composition

This review is composed of what is known as the student section of a full review, i. e., it contains only student work. A full printed Law Review will contain, in addition to student Case Notes and Recent Decisions, articles and book reviews by leading authorities among the judiciary and the teaching professions. Plans for the inclusion of these features in January's issue have been made, and a summer schedule of work has been prepared for the editors.

Our Law School's Review is a "'student' review, rather than a 'faculty' review," said Garbarino, pointing out that the approach to topics and selection of cases, outside contributors, etc., will be made by the students rather than by the faculty, ar it is the accepted case in some schools.

Editor Selection

Editors are picked from a small top percentage of the class. The editor-in-chief is picked not only on the basis of marks but also on consideration of his ability at leadership and excellence at legal writing. This year's staff was picked by the faculty, but it is expected that in future years the outgoing editors will make the selection, basing their judgements on the above points.

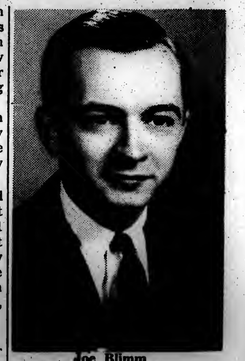
The other members of this year's editorial board are: Arthur Flores, James Garland, Donald Grieshober, Neale Hooley, Arthur O'Neill and Regina Ward. Faculty advisor is Mr. Francis Holahan, who was editor-in-chief of Pittsburgh's Law Review before receiving his Law degree.

Articles are usually contributed solely by the editors, he said, although students not on the review who submit articles which are printed are given masthead recognition in that issue.

Junior Week Pin Money Awaits Tn'T Cover Artist

Anyone want to pick up an easy $10? If so, all he has to do is pick up a paint brush and easel, and design a new cover for the 1955 program for Turf and Tinsel Club's spring show, Jessica James.

Rules of the contest, which were announced last week by business managers Dick Cooke and Bill Reich, are relatively simple.



First, the illustration should concern a hillbilly theme. It must be submitted on an 8½x11 inch sheet of paper, and must contain the name of the show (Jessica James), dates of the performances (April 27 through 30), and Turf and Tinsel Club, Villanova University.

Tuesday Deadline

Second, all program cover ideas must be submitted by not later than next Tuesday to the T n' T Office in the basement of C&F.

Judging will be held the following week, and the winning illustration will gain a ten dollar bill for the designer. Selection of the cover will depend upon neatness, originality, pertinence to the subject, and compliance with the above rules.

The show itself, which will run from April 27th to April 30th, is the hectic story of the family of Jesse James, one of the bad men of western folklore. The plot of the show centers around the love life and ethics of Jesse's alternately sophisticated and hillbilly daughter Jessica.

Hilarious Show

As usual, the combination of George Pequinot, George Noake, Jack Kelly and Bob Whelan has again come up with a hilarious musical comedy, typical of Turf and Tinsel's productions for the past several years.

A member of Ithaca's baseball club is nipped at first base as Wildcat Jack Helm takes throw. The visitors rallied in the late innings to defeat Art Mahan's club, 5-3.

Team Splits In Two Games

By Bob Mulcahy

Villanova University's baseball squad opened its 11955 season with an even split in two games last week. After defeating Vermont 5-4 in the season's opener, the Wildcats dropped their first game to Ithaca College 5-3 at the Mainliner's campus.

Dick Scott's home run was the deciding marker in the 5-4 defeat of Vermont. His home-run gave Villanova a 5-1 lead going into the seventh inning. However, the visitors came back with three runs in the top of the seventh before relief pitcher Dan Severino stemmed the tide by striking out the last batter.

Villanova Scores

The 'Cats opened the scoring in the bottom of the third on Scott's triple and shortstop Ron La Montagne's single. They added three more in the fourth to set the stage for Scott's blast and the Vermont rally.

In the loss to the powerful Ithaca team which was undefeated last season, Villanova lost a two run lead in the seventh inning when starting pitcher Dan Severino was blasted for a triple, double and single in rapid succession all after two were out. This tied the score at 3-3 and brought in reliefer Bob Scalzi who gave up the winning margin.

Although the New Yorkers scored first Villanova came back in the bottom of the second with two runs when Jack Helm doubled down the right field line and scored when the Ithaca catcher ropped a third strike and threw wildly into left field attempting to get Helm at third. In the fourth the 'Cats increased their lead to 3-1 on a walk, a passed ball, and a single.

Ithaca Wins in 8th

Ithaca then tied it up and went ahead in the top of the eighth on a single, a steal, and a fly ball.

The inability of Villanova to hit in the clutch cost them the game. With the tieing run on thir base in the bottom of the eighth and only one out the Wildcats could not score.

Record Number of Teams Participating in Softball

With a record forty-eight teams utilizing the facilities of Austin, Mendel and Simpson fields, the intramural softball competition began last week in a flurry of hits, runs, errors and sore arms.

Thus far, there have been too few games to last season's champs, the Austin Erfs.

Water Cats Win

One champion in the water basketball leagues has been determined. The Sullivan Water Cats, captained by Mike Russo, are one of the Field House pool victors. The winners of the other league will be determined in the future.

On Tuesday, April 12, the Intramural Department will again sponsor a Learn-to-swim-week. Last year over one hundred non-swimmers participated in the program and learned the fundamentals of swimming.

Swim Meet Due

The intramural swim meet, originally scheduled for last week, was postponed because of the conflict with water basketball. It will be held sometime after Easter. Events include the 50 yard freestyle, the 50 yard backstroke, diving, the 100-yard freestyle, the 100 yard breaststroke and the 200 yard freestyle.

Hot Trotters Beat Penn

Villanova's intramural basketball champions, the Hot Trotters, defeated the University of Pennsylvania's intramural champs, the Newman Club, 27-25 at the Palestra last Wednesday. The victory earned for the Mainliners the George Munger Award. This trophy will be presented on May 17.

John Acri, Mike Boruch, and Van Injaian overcame Penn's great height advantage to pace the victors, who led the entire game. Boruch was high scorer with eight points. After a full schedule in Alumni Hall, the Palestra seemed like a coliseum. Penn employed a zone defense, which the Trotters opposed by playing a deliberate game, making only good shots.

Villanova's N.R.O.T.C. All-Stars triumphed over St. Joseph's R.O.T.C. stars 56-50, to complete a perfect slate for intercollegiate competition. Prestwick led the Middies with 14 points, while Sherry and Husted tallied 11 and 10 respectively.

Was The Ump Blind!

A new twist to the age-old theme of the blind umpire occurred on Mendel Field last Thursday during an intramural softball game.

The speeding baserunner charged down from first and slid into second base. It was a close play—players from both sides glanced anxiously at the ump for his decision.

After a moment's hestitation came the meek reply from the freshman official: "I didn't see the play. Guess we'll have to call him safe."

Sports Chatter

Spring Sports Prospects

By Joe Heaps

It looks as if it is going to be a good spring, sports-wise, for Villanova. Both the track and baseball teams show promise of providing winning records and plenty of sports excitement in the next two months. And the golf team, despite some organizational troubles that stem from the newness of the sport at Villanova and the lack of a coach, is optimistic about this year's chances.

The baseball team has played some good ball, and some bad, in splitting the first two games of the twenty-five game schedule. Coach Mahan is fairly well-pleased with the results of the first two contests. He says, "One must take into consideration the earliness of the season and the fact that several of the players are not yet in top physical condition. There was nothing wrong in the Ithaca game that a couple of timely base hits wouldn't have fixed. I think the team should improve as the season progresses."

Pitching Problem

It seems from here that the success of the ball club in 1955 will depend on several factors. One of the main determinants will be the time required for the pitching staff to get in shape. Except possibly for Dick Scott, all the moundsmen need more workouts and bull-pen practice before they will be able to work nine innings. Dan Severino, John Nagy, Bob Scalzi and Dick Black have all shown flashes of mid-season form in the intrasquad games, but none are conditioned for prolonged activity.

Severino, the righthanded fireballer, will be counted on heavily this year. He is having some trouble with his legs, though, and all probability will not get away to as fast a start this season as last. Speaking of his past experience, Danny says, "I've never gotten off to a better beginning than I did last year. Generally, I'm a very slow starter in the first month or so and gradually reach my most effective condition. It surprised me last year when I got off to a fast start."

Bill McGarry

Double-Play Combination

Another question mark on the Mahan nine is the sophomore double play combination of Ron LaMontagne and John DiGiallorenzo. Thus far, these two have had little opportunity to display their ability to make the twin killings. If they prove a dependable combination, a major replacement problem from last year will be overcome.

Still another very important factor in the season's prospects is in the hitting department. Jack Helm, Bill McGarry, and Jack Peters must be counted on the provide much of the offensive punch for this year's squad. Since the college season is so short, even a minor slump by one or two of these men could have a wide-spread effect on the success of the club.

The agility with which catcher Bill Pearson can keep his bare hand out of the way of foul tips could also prove an important factor inVillanova's baseball future. Twice this season, so far, he has been clipped with foul tips, but fortunately he has been able to shake it off both times.

Track Prospects

Track prospects are the best in the school's history. The squad has more depth than it did last year and has a galaxy of soph stars to call upon. There is a lack of balance, though, because of the unknown ability of many of the field events men. Still, the chances of a good season are very high.

Many of the runners who will perform for Villanova in the dual meets and outdoor relays this spring are already familiar names to track fans throughout the nation. Charlie Jenkins, Don Bragg, the mile relay team (Heitman, Moran, Peterson, and Ligorelli) and Ronnie Delaney will be the features of the spring season.

Water basketball action in the Field House pool.

Don Muchetti

"Steady" Mucchetti Proves Ability

A four year veteran of Villanova baseball, Don "Bugsy" Muchetti is again resuming his third base playing post for the Wildcat nine this season.

Don opened his career as Villanova's third sacker in his freshman year, when he "rode the bench" most of the season, waiting anxiously for his big break. As a rookie, Muchetti saw no action at all, but merely served an apprenticeship.

In his sophomore year, the talented Philadelphian finally got his big break, and played in eight of the twenty-three scheduled contests that year.

When he was a Junior, and an "old pro" in Villanova ranks, Don had third base all to himself. His consistent fielding and ability to get on base made him the perfect choice for Mahan's number 5 player.

Biggest Thrill

Bugsy started and finished every game in last year's slate except two, during which time he was injured. During that time, he performed with outstanding agility, and "was even hitting." It was during the gruelling campaign that Don got his biggest thrill playing ball for Villanova.

Villanova was tied at 3-3 in a game against Army at West Point. Due to a curfew, no inning could be played after a certain time. With Villanova at bat, and time running out in the ball game, Ralph Cecere, who played short for the Wildcats last year, belted a double. Muchetti followed him to the plate, and promptly smashed a long line drive into left center for a game-winning double.

Played At Southeast Catholic

Don gained his initial baseball experience while he played for his high school's ball club, Southeast Catholic in Philadelphia. He was a starter in both his Junior and Senior years, and a polished performer even in scholastic competition.

But baseball seems to be in his blood. Don's father also was an adept baseball player in his younger days, and modest Bugsy attributes his skill to his father's coaching.

Off the diamond, Don is just as accomplished. He was one of twenty-seven Villanova Senior's named to the American Collegiate Who's Who ratings last fall, and is one of the leading students in his major field of Accounting, also.

Rower Joe Greipp Honored In Pan-American Olympics

By Norm Feldpush

Villanova's lone representation in the recent Pan-American Games was in the sport of rowing, which is not part of the university's athletic program. Joe Greipp, a freshman engineer, was a member of Vesper Boat Club's championship eight-oared shell in the Olympics of the Western hemisphere. Joe received the biggest thrill of his brief two-year career, as he "received the gold medal on the victory stand, with the National Anthem playing in the background."

Greipp received his initiation in the sculling sport while a senior at St. Joseph's Prep in Philadelphia. Rowing became a sport at his alma mater for the first time in 1954, and Joe answered the call for candidates with no previous knowledge or experience.

School Boy Champs

Lack of seasoning proved no handicap, as the Prep captured the Catholic League championship in the first try. Joe was a member of the Hawklets victorious eight-oared shell, and was elected captain for the season.

The summer vacation provided the start of Greipp's international travels, as Joe became a member of the Vesper Boat Club. Vesper's eight, with the famed Jack Kelly stroking, won the senior Canadian National championship. Other triumphs included the Washington President's Cup event, and the Middle States title. Joe rowed from the number 7 seat in these races.

Early Morning Practice

Practicing provided some anxious moments for Joe, in preparation for the Pan-American Games. Sessions began at 6:30 a. m., and were followed by a full day's attendance in class. Joe survived these hardships, and made the journey to Mexico City as a substitute. After watching the preliminary rounds from the sidelines, Joe received his opportunity when a regular became ill. A sleepless Saturday night followed, and on Sunday, Mar. 20, Joe was in the bow seat as Vesper rallied to defeat Argentina by six feet.

Official Citation

Vesper received an official welcome last Thursday, as the Philadelphia City Council presented each member with an embossed copy of the resolution at City Hall. A luncheon with the mayor is tentatively scheduled for this week.

Joe hopes to compete in the 1956 Olympic Games if Vesper can win the national title in the summer of '56.

Triangular Meet Set for Saturday; Team Visits Navy

After completing a highly successful indoor season, Villanova's sparkling tracksters will open the infant cinder campaign with optimism in a triangular meet against Navy and Georgetown in Annapolis on Saturday.

Both the Middies and the Hoyas possess a collection of outstanding performers, and will give coach "Jumbo" Elliot a fair chance to determine what should be expected of this highly-regarded squad.

Jenkins, Bragg Ready

Charlie Jenkins will be out to prove to track enthusiasts that he is as capable on the cinders as he was on the boards during the indoor campaign. Don Bragg, sophomore pole-vaulter, who has consistently cleared 14'6", will attempt to better this mark, and increase his national rating.

Alex Breckenridge, John Kopil, and George Browne will be competing in the distance events. Captain Jim Moran, "Tippy" Maliff, Al Peterson, "Red" Heitmann, and Jenkins will be the nucleus of the sprint events and the relays. Villanova's freshman sensations, Ron Delaney,

Trackman Don Bragg

Phil Reavis, and George Sydnor will be unavailable for varsity competition.

West Chester First

West Chester will invade Villanova on April 16, as a tune-up before the New York Relays and the Penn Relays at Franklin Field. La Salle, Georgetown, and St. Joseph's will precede the I. C. 4A. finale in New York.

Golf Team Is Host To Haverford; Open Season Tomorrow

Tomorrow the Villanova golf team opens their 1955 season with a match with Haverford College at Aronimink Golf Course.

Last year the Haverford linksmen defeated the Wildcats 5½-3½ on their home course, Merion. The visitors are led by Grant Morrow, a consistent seventy shooter, and one of the better college players in the country.

Eight-Member Team

Yesterday Publicity Director Bud Dudley and team captain Charlie Stone named the eight-member team. (Note: At the time of printing the eight playing members had not been named.) The men were chosen from twelve eligible golfers whose qualifying rounds were lowest. These twelve men were Jack Kelly, Stone, Ben Klemanowicz, Fred Morris, Fred Anton, Bob McElhenny, Jim McElhenny, Joe Gallagher, Red Thornton, Jack McGrath, Lou Blanchet, and Bill Jones.

The Haverford match is the first of a ten game schedule that includes the Blue-White Day outing with the Old-Timers.

College Band: Sounds Since 1870

From a modest start many years ago has emerged a representative musical outfit, thanks to the enthusiasm of a few

By Joe Valenti

The Villanova College Band had its beginning in 1870, when the College Bulletin listed the Coronet Band as a new organization. This aggregation of brass, numbering between 12 and 20 members, was active at least until 1880. No further mention can be found of a band until the 1926 College Bulletin, when the band was reorganized by Rev. R. P. Fink, O. S. A.

On Oct. 2, 1932 the original Villanovans entertained at a dinner given by the Main Line Alumni Club.

Navy To Villanovans

Father Fink was succeeded by Rev. Bernard Albers and Rev. Joseph Boyle of our faculty, when released from the Navy, Rev. Ralph Handran, with a masters in music, began moderating both the band and the glee club. He worked the band into a very active concert troupe, each spring making a tour of the local girls' schools and nurses' homes.

When Father Handran returned to active duty in 1950, he was replaced by Rev. Joseph Burns, the present moderator. Instructor of the marching band for more than twenty years has been Mr. Paul Teel, bandmaster at Radnor High School.

Concert Band Wins Friends

Although the marching band has seen limited action in the past few years, this is not true of the concert band. These troubadors are second only to the University's athletic teams in bringing Villanova to the public. Traveling to give concerts at such places as St. Joseph's Nurses Home in Reading, Ursuline Academy in Wilmington and St. Mary's High School in Gloucester, N. J., the band succeeds through music in spreading good will for the University.

The nurses homes of St. Joseph's, St. Agnes', and St. Mary's, all in Philadelphia, are annual stops during the concert season. The first appearance by choice and chronology each year is St. John's Orphanage.

Music By Strauss And Sousa

After offering selections varying from "The Chocolate Soldier Overture" by Oscar Strauss to John Phillip Sousa's immortal "Stars and Stripes Forever," the band selects a "guest director" who leads the group in "Dark Town Strutters Ball."

Other old favorites in the repertoire include: "Gremlin's Ball," "Goofus," Sigmund Romberg's Overtures to "Student Prince," and "The Red Mill" by Victor Herbert which are presented with contemporary works, such as "On the Trial" from the "Grand Canyon Suite," and "Guadalcanal March" from Richard Rogers' new composition, "Victory at Sea."

Intermission Entertainment

To add further diversion to the entertainment, Bobby Schiller's jazz band plays during intermission. Also featured at this time are the Mainliners, a barbershop quintette. Playing selected accordion solos is Bob Gaudio.

A certain amount of self-satisfaction, and the refreshments and dance which follow each concert are sufficient compensation for the time that goes into making a successful concert. A large amount of credit is due the moderator, Father Burns. Frank Licopoli is president while Bobby Schiller handles the duties of student director.

A talk by Rev. Edwin T. Grimes, O. S. A., senior class moderator, highlighted the communion breakfast of the International Relations Society, Saturday morning.

After attending the 9 a. m. Mass at Villanova, the members assembled at the Viking Inn for breakfast.

Father Grimes, who discussed the "International Character of the Papacy," is an associate professor of history.

Don McGahan was in charge of arrangements.

FRENCH CLUB

Don Meliado, a sophomore arts student, has been elected vice-president of the French Club.

His name was not listed on the slate announced in a previous VILLANOVAN.

SPANISH CLUB

John Eddinger, a junior English major, was elected president of the Spanish Club at a meeting last Thursday.

Other officers elected were Joseph Kinney, a freshman arts major, vice-president; Joseph Mulhall, a social Science Freshman, secretary; and Joseph Giusti an arts sophomore, treasurer.

Cervantes Night

Carlos Conde was named chairman of the Cervantes night, a social and cultural affair, which will be held sometime next month, culminating the years activities of the club.

The guest speaker will be the Spanish Consul, Don German de Caso. Attaches from the Consulate and their wives will also be in attendance.

Senor de Caso will award the prizes for the essay and poetry contest sponsored by the club. A diploma and medal, donated by Columbia University, and a Spanish American dictionary, contributed by the club moderator, Rev. Lorenzo Lozano, O. S. A., will be given the winners.

LAW SCHOOL

D. Barry Gibbons, a second-year student in the Law School, has been elected secretary of the American Law School Association for the third judical circuit by degelates from all Law Schools within the circuit, which includes the states of Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware.

A Villanova graduate, Gibbons also is chairman of the Board of Honor in the Villanova Law School.

The election took place during the circuit, at Temple Universident Bar Associations within the circuit, at Temple University. Approximately twelve students represented our Law School.

"I have made a great mistake. Our purpose was to give freedom to a multitude of oppressed people. But our method of action created worse evils and horrible massacres. You know that my deadly nightmare is to feel that I am lost in this ocean of blood, coming from innumerable victims. It is too late to turn back now, but in order to save our country, Russia, we should have had ten men like Francis of Assisi. With ten such men we would have saved Russia."

SANCTUARY SOCIETY

A meeting of the Sanctuary Society was held this past week to vote on nominees for offices during the coming school year. Results of the vote were: President, Bob McDonnell, C&F; Vice-President, Gerald Donnelly, Engineer; and Secretary, Tony Tomasulo, C&F.

Sanctuary Society members have been collecting and sorting the IBM cards during this week's retreat.

CLOTHING DRIVE

The annual clothing drive of the National Federation of Catholic College Students will continue until after Easter vacation.

Chairman Frank Collins said collection boxes will be placed in all residence halls and in the basement of C&F.

Assisting Collins are Bob Schiller, Paul Donohue and Jim Greenlee.

RIFLE TEAM

First place in the Philadelphia ROTC Rifle League will probably be decided April 16 when Villanova's NROTC unit competes against the Penn team and shooters from other ROTC units in the Greater Philadelphia Area matches.

Villanova and Penn are deadlocked for the top spot. Villanova's riflemen have dropped only two matches in league competition. One of those defeats was by three points, at the hands of Pennsylvania Military College.

A.S.C.E.

A thesis by three seniors will represent Villanova's student chapter of the American Society of Civil Engineers at the annual A.S.C.E. student convention at Bucknell University, April 25.

The paper is "Investigation of the Bond Strength of Concrete Reinforcement," by Steve McGlynn, Tom Hess and Charles Gutberlet.

President Joe Maggiore of the Villanova chapter said a large turnout is expected from Villanova. He said an announcement about signing up for the trip will appear on the bulletin board in the Civil Engineering Office.

Retreat Ends; Easter Break Begins Tom'w

Villanova undergraduates, after three days of spiritual refreshment, will start a five day Easter break tomorrow after the closing Mass of the University's 112th annual Retreat.

Highlighting the closing Mass tomorrow will be the annual general communion of the student body and singing of the Mass by the Villanova Singers.

The Singers will chant the Mass written by Mul, a Dutch liturgist.

Rev. James B. Gallagher, O. S. A., a member of the Augustinian Mission Band, has been conducting the exercises. Father Gallagher, a veteran retreatmaster, has conducted priests' retreats.

Classes will resume at 8:30 a. m. next Tuesday.

Dad's Day Guest Named; Seniors' Response Is Slow

Maj. Gen. Milton Baker

An address by Maj. Gen. Milton G. Baker, USA, a close personal friend of President Eisenhower and director of Valley Forge Military Academy, will climax the Senior Class' Father's Day Saturday.

Response by class members was called "atrocious" by one class spokesman.

When ticket sales closed Monday, less than 120 tickets—at $9 apiece—had been sold. Bob Casey, chairman of the celebration ,had set a goal of 120, which was less than one-third of the class.

Day Opens at 11

Saturday's activities will get under way at 11 a. m. with Mass in the University Chapel. Celebrant will be Rev. Edwin T. Grimes, O. S. A., Senior Class moderator.

Lunch, in the university cafeteria, will follow.

At 2 p. m. seniors and their fathers will adjourn to the baseball field where Villanova takes on St. Peter's of Jersey City.

The closing dinner will be served in the Field House beginning at 5 p. m. General Baker's address will close the day's activity.

In announcing the speaker, Chairman Ed Daly said General Baker is chairman of the United States National Commission, UNESCO and a special adviser to Secretary of Defense Charles E. Wilson.

Fr. Rongione Press Liason

Rev. Louis A. Rongione, O. S. A., assistant professor of religion, has been appointed to coordinate relations between Villanova and the Catholic press.

In making the appointment, the administration emphasized that Father Rongione will not replace Eugene Ruane, director of public relations for the University.

He will work the Catholic press and give Ruane the chance to concentrate on the secular press.

Fr. Burns Named Dean of Women In Pioneer Move

Rev. Joseph J. Burns, O. S. A., associate professor of education, has been named Villanova's first Dean of Women.

In his new post, Father Burns said he will attempt to be the priest whom the co-eds may turn to when they need information or have objects to be approved by the administration.

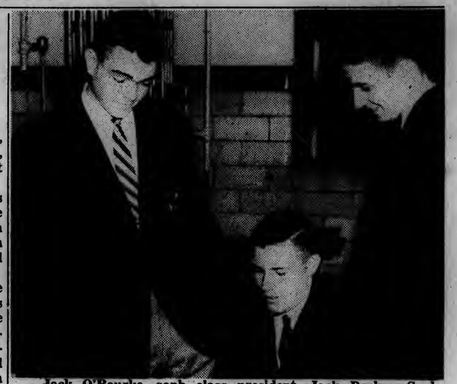
Father Burns would therefore be a link between the co-eds and the administration. He would also be the means of cutting out much of the "buck passing" which Father Burns said the girls formerly faced when there was no dean.

Alumni Prefect

A prefect in Alumni Hall, Father Burns is also moderator of the University marching band and the Concert Band.

He said he did not know whether he would have an office next year, but he said he thought he would eventually.

Father Burns predicted that about 130 co-eds will be studying here next year.



During about half of his teaching career Father Burns has been instructing nurses, mostly in Philadelphia Catholic Hospitals.

A graduate of the Villanova Class of '33, Father Burns was ordained in Washington, D. C., in 1936.

Religion Instructor

For several years afterwards, the new dean served as disciplinarian of Illinois Catholic high schools—at St. Rita's, Chicago and St. Thomas, Rockford.

Class of '57: C & F Auditorium

Class of '58: 207 C & F

Eleven Junior Positions

Juniors will nominate for president, vice-president, secretary, treasurer, alumni representative, and six Student Council representatives (three residents, one from each division; three day hops, one from each division). Four hundred eighty-eight juniors are eligible to vote.

Ted Clarkson and Henry Greenhalgh will be in charge of the meeting.

Sophomores will nominate for president, vice-president, secretary, treasurer and six Student Council representatives (three residents, one from each division and three day hops, one from each division).

Eligible to vote are 693 sophomores.

In charge of the meeting will be George Kuhn, Dick Hepburn and Joe Welsh.

Freshmen, with 898 eligible to vote, will nominate for president, vice-president, secretary, treasurer and two Student Council representatives (one resident and one day hop, from any of the three divisions).

Conducting the meeting will be Dick Winfield, chairman of the Student Council, Dick Peer and Jack Devine.

Eligibility for office is defined on page 55 of the Student Handbook, and students were reminded.

Harry Nash
Takes Villanovan

Harry C. Nash, 20, of Portsmouth, Va., was appointed editor-in-chief of the weekly campus publication by Rev. Louis A. Rongione, O. S. A., moderator. He takes over from Edwin Daly.

Work Awaits Both

Fitpatrick will assume his new responsibilities almost immediately. The baseball season, portraits of Class of '56 members, Junior Week and varsity track and field must be covered before the end of the semester.

A graduate of Brooklyn Prep, Fitzpatrick has had no previous experience in producing yearbooks; he has consistently demonstrated interest and competency in various extra-curricular activities. He is chairman of the upcoming Junior Week dinner dance and handled last year's Sophomore Cotillion in a similar capacity.

Takes Final Issue

Nash, moving up from managing editor, will have sole responsibility for the final issue of the semester. Next year will be his fourth with the VILLANOVAN; he was a reporter as a freshman, and sports co-editor as a sophomore.

Dick Fitzpatrick
Edits Belle Air

Also president of the University's Junior Class and vice-president of Delta Pi Mu fraternity, Nash has also been active in extra-curricular work. He has three years experience with the daily newspaper in his hometown.

Largest Yearbook

The Belle Air this year under Gunther, an Arts student from Baltimore, will be the largest in the institution's history, excluding the 1943 Centennial edition. Fitzpatrick's staff of editors will be released at a later date following screening by the proper authorities. The same is true of the new VILLANOVAN staff.

The VILLANOVAN has been putting out a new ten-page issue weekly since February, and is planning a 16-page Junior Week issue, the largest and most complete ever delivered.

NROTC Aspirants

The ranks of the Villanova NROTC Unit will be reopened to freshmen, Col. Elliot Wilson, USMC, announced last week.

Col. Wilson, executive officer of the unit, stated that Captain Martin J. Drury USN, professor of naval science, will admit a limited number of sophomores next fall into the NROTC program.

All freshmen, including those rejected last fall, who are interested in the program, are urged to contact Col. Wilson as soon as possible.

On Thankless Jobs

An announcement that came out of Georgetown University last week, while assuredly disheartening from a broad viewpoint, might serve to remind us here at Villanova of our good fortune in a like regard.

The development at the Washington institution was simply this: that the University will publish no yearbook this year, because of a sluggish student reaction concerning the annual drive for advertisements, and a lack of intense interest regarding the publication in general.

Surely such a situation does not speak highly for the extra-curricular enthusiasm and go-get-'em attitude of the school's student body, especially in light of the fact that such a vital organ of the University is affected. Language clubs sometimes fail, form groups fade out; yearbooks just do not. Or should not.

All of which brings about a realization that, in spite of occasional reference to student indifference in this field, Villanova finds its extra-curricular life in hands of a competent crew of underclassmen, who want not for enthusiasm. The healthy response annually to what can be a tiresome, thankless task—heading the radio station, the yearbook, the stage crew—can be seen tangibly when the finished product, be it play or publication, comes up for that very thorough collegian inspection.

Certainly in this field we are fortunate . . . and looking, incidentally, for a top-notch Belle Air (the largest in history) come the ides of May.

And A New Job

An indication that "the girls are here to stay" has come recently with the appointment of Father Joseph Burns as Villanova's first Dean of Women. The creation of the new office is the result of the growth of the School of Nursing and the excellent prospects it has for still further expansion.

At the moment the problems that Father Burns faces are probably comparatively simple, but, as the number of female students at Villanova increases, the difficulties connected with them will increase both in complexity and in number. Knowing Father Burns's interest in the problems of the nuns and co-eds who come here to study, we feel sure that he will be successful in coping with what ever difficulties may arise.

We also feel sure that the Nursing Division will continue to be a source of honor and distinction for the University. Villanova, after all, is the only Catholic university in this area which offers an integrated course leading to a degree in nursing. In offering such a course, Villanova is performing an outstanding service to the Catholic hospital system in this archdiocese, which desperately needs well-trained, well-educated young Catholic nurses, who have a complete background in Catholic ideals and ethics as well as the technical points of nursing.

As matters now stand, the young ladies of this very excellent division will be Father Burn's chief concern, since, outside of the Sisters, there aer no female students in the other divisions. We wish both the new Dean and his charges continued success.

Philosophy Seen Key To Integration of Education

By Frank Trainor

In a previous article the fundamental nature of an integrating factor in education was considered. The resultant question was: what field of knowledge is best fitted to assume so exacting a position? It was stated that tradition and a stable continuity are indispensable elements of Wisdom, which, after all, is the goal of education. Still further, I would say that the tradition so necessary to wisdom is a philosophic tradition.

Philosophy, then, considered in its proper sphere, and in its intimate relation to theology, would seem to be best suited to the task of educational integration.

I am not speaking of philosophy as a term to be applied, as it is in modern times, to any system of thinking whose only claim to fame is the novelty and creativity it can boast. Neither am I speaking of it as a term to be applied to museum pieces, or archeological oddities which have outlived their usefulness. Rather, I am speaking of a living, vital system of thought called Thomism.

It is quite a shock to the modern mind to be told of a field of knowledge which applies to the problems of our own contemporary society the same fundamental concepts and principles employed by a so-called medieval esoteric philosopher named Thomas Aquinas, and before him by a Greek named Aristotle, who can be read, if one wishes to boast of his accomplishments.

I wish to point up the importance of tradition, the necessity for tradition in learning in an age that has attempted to cut all traditional ties. It is true that the student is the principle agent in the art of instruction, but how how can education achieve its end, how can the individual mind progress in the research and discovery of truth without a transmission of ideas elaborated on by successive generations of men seeking the same truth? The answer is simple: it cannot be done. Substantial proof of this conclusion can be seen in the spectacle of the so-called "modern mind," the skeptic, the atheist, the unanchored, wandering intellects. It is proof that is weighty and equally tragic.

This vital, living philosophy called Thomism is, then, the most feasible nomination for the position of educational integrator, for in it is contained the traditional and permanent continuity so necessary to Wisdom. It is true that the science of theology posseses a higher order of stability, permanence and continuity, but since theology uses philosophy as the means and instrument of its development, it can be seen that philosophy derives from it the same characteristics after its own fashion.

It is precisely because of this intimate relationship between philosophy and theology that the Christian finds the concept of a permanent, stable, and continuous wisdom easier to accept, for it is perfect keeping with his cultural heritage.

Because other fields of knowledge, notably the sciences, languages and their literatures, and history, do not possess the fundamental nature so characteristic of philosophy, in itself and in relation to theology, they cannot act as ordering principles and be expected to yield the fruits of right education.

It would be gross error to conclude from the above that the sciences, language, literature and history are consequently invalid. Each possesses its particular value, inasmuch as it contributes ultimately to some aspect of wisdom. It would be greater error to conclude that any one, of itself, is capable of producing wisdom, as such.

The sciences, certainly produce knowledge, but in a sort of rectilinear direction, by constant substitution, one theory replacing another. Language and literature in themselves possess no importance comparable to what has been said in them. History ultimately is no more than a record of what men have thought, and consequently of what they have done.

It is apparent, then, that the common, fundamental element in approaching educational integration is that of thought itself under all its aspects. What, therefore could be preferable as the axis of education to the science of thought, which is philosophy?

We Have Truth: Why Not Apply It?

By Mark McCormick

Just as there has always been, there is a need today for directness and plain speech. We still admit that we must find the solutions to our problems and then apply them.

But today we are living a hypocrisy. We live among heresies such as materialism and secularism and by our actions seem to tolerate them; at the same time we know the true system and assert that we are striving to live according to it.

Scientific Vaccine

We pride ourselves on progress in our civilization, but it is material advancement that receives notice. Polio has been dealt what appears to be a mortal blow by development of the Salk vaccine. It is typical of the physical diseases of man that society has marshaled its forces against and put to rout. In relation to spiritual ills, there has not been a similar unity of opposition.

We live in the midst of what more people than Catholics consider spiritual disease, and yet the community has not united itself in an effort to conquer or even oppose this spiritual disease. In fact, we live in a society which treats disunity or "broadmindedness" as virtue and frowns upon moral conviction as something outmoded. The task is to change this attitude, and we have the means if we would but use it.

Spiritual vaccine

The fact of the matter is that we know that our system is true and that Catholic truth can provide the cure for spiritual disease. For some reason, however, this truth seems to lack the positive community appeal that, for example, the scientific truth represented by the Salk vaccine has.

Pseudo-cures of spiritual defect like "ethical culture" and "positive thinking" have been advanced. The tenets of these systems have been amazingly popular.—And this despite the fact that these systems are superficial, incomplete, unrealistic, and erroneous.

They are popular for two reasons, first because they have been elaborated in terms of the evils that they are designed to overcome, and secondly because they have been presented to society in popular and understandable terminology. They attempt to meet the problems, and they offer their solutions simply and plainly.

Herein is implied the Catholic failure and the meeting of our hypocrisy. Catholic thinkers might be accused of failing to admit that what we know can solve our problems. But this is only because we have failed where modern heresy has succeeded, in directness and in plain talking.

This is a basic failure. It is a failure to appreciate the universality of message of salvation and that nothing is practical except truth.

Since we are dealing with truth there is no reason to be hesitant, and there is every reason to be militant.

Peering . . .

By Dick Peer

At some of the brothers who stroll arm in arm about the campus with the coeds. It just goes to prove that spring has a very peculiar effect on some people.

At the fellow in front of me on the chow line who appeared to be having quite a time selecting the proper instrument for the feast. He had spread out before him at least a dozen of the most horribly aligned forks I'd ever seen. Naturally I asked what the trouble was and he explained that it was his practice to pick out a sharp pronged fork, the faster to pin the animal to the table. I couldn't help but agree that it was a fine method, but I'm still a little partial to my harpoon.

Into a Student Council meeting the other night, I heard a vigorous debate about Who's Who and Who Wants to be Who, or something. Just whois who and what to do stumped the learned gentlemen. Word has it that next year's final selection will be made by a board consisting of the General and one cleaning woman from each hall.

Strictly Opinion

Did you know that . . .

. . . the Pie Shoppe got its name from a small store in a corner of what is now the residents' cafeteria, which sold students a piece of pie "about the size of your palm" for a Nickel? It has been traced back as far as 1904 and probably existed before that.

. . . in 1841 the Augustinian Order paid only $18,000 for all the property that now makes up Villanova?

. . . the complete student fee in 1949 was $125, but that the student was required to bring his own "knife, fork, and tablespoon"?

. . . the hours for Villanovans at this time were: Rise at 5:30, classes from 8:30 till noon, from 2:00 to 4:30, 5:00 to 6:00, and 7:00 to 8:00, with the student retiring at 9:00?

. . . Villanova was forced to close from 1857 to 1865?

. . . our present Chapel was completed in 1887?

. . . Villanova has given degrees to two Presidents of the United States? Ex-President Grover Cleveland received an honorary degree of Doctor of Jurisprudence in 1902, the first time such a degree was granted in this country. President William Howard Taft conferred degree upon the graduating students and received the degree of Doctor of Jurisprudence in 1910.

. . . Villanova opened its school of engineering in 1905?

. . . there were once tennis courts where Fedigan Hall now stands?

. . . the Latin inscription on the stage curtain of the Field House, "Otium Sine Litteris Mors Est," means "Leisure without reading is Death?

. . . Vice-President George Marshall, the man who said "What this country needs is a good five cent cigar," received an honorary degree from Villanova in 1913?

. . . one of Villanova's old (1893) cheers went as follows?

Vikn! Vikn! Don't you see?
We're the boys from old V. C.
Unity Unity as of yore
White and Blue forever more.

. . . Varsity football was seriously undertaken at Villanova in 1894?

The following items were found in the "jug book" during the 1860's at Villanova. A "Mr. Fields" caused a disorder in the dormitory and forfeited his meat at breakfast.

W. Donnelly in 1869 received a "licking" for cutting up in Study Hall.

Gus Donovan was punished for making "a disturbance in studies . . . cracking fingers, etc . . ."

Two boys were put on bread and water for a day for being "detected in smoking behind the pig-pen."

And we think that we have disciplinary problems!

On Tall Tales:

Fr. Jenkins: Observatory To Lab . . . Avid Interest

In running down the list of faculty names on page 11 of the Villanova Catalogue one comes across the name, Edward F. Jenkins, O.S.A. The name is familiar to all Villanovans whether it's part of a story about the Mendel Fire or of it's the chemistry prof. who has to be faced several times a week.

Father Jenkins was born on August 17, 1906 in Baltimore, Maryland. In 1910 the Jenkins family moved to Wilkes-Barre, Penna., where Father attended Wilkes-Barre Academy and Coughlin High School. In September of 1923 Father came to Villanova to take a pre-medical course with hope of eventually entering medical school. During the summers he spent some time working in a colliery which is a long way from the mortar and peatle of a chemical laboratory. During his sophomore year he was strongly attracted to the life of the priesthood and so in the following year he switched to an Arts course. He graduated from Villanova in 1927 with a B. A.

He entered the Augustinian novitiate in New Hamburg, N.Y., on September 8, 1927. Having been professed on September 9, 1928, he then came to Villanova to study theology. After a year here he was transferred to the Augustinian College in Washington, D. C. where he studied theology for two more years. He received his solemn vows on April 9, 1931, which was five months early, by dispensation of the Holy See.

Father received all three major orders, sub-deaconship, deaconship, and the priesthood, on successive days, again with the dispensation of the Holy See.

After ordination on June 9, 1931 Father was sent to Catholic University to obtain a Ph.D. in Chemistry. In 1933 he received his Master's Degree and then after two full years and four summer schools he received his Ph.D. in June of 1939. As he started teaching in 1935, this marks Father's 20th years of teaching chemistry at Villanova. For the first three years he taught General Chemistry and Qualitative Analysis. It was in the last year of these three that Rev. Robert Fitzgerald, O.S.A., originator of the chemistry and chemical engineering courses here, fell into ill health, handed Father Jenkins his roll book and told him to take over his Organic Chemistry class. Ever since that first nervous lecture on polynuclear - hydrocarbons, Father has been teaching chemical engineer. Since the class of 1941, he has also taught advanced organic chemistry to the senior chemistry majors. He also teaches scientific German.

Father's latest interest has been working on the observatory situated on the top of Mendel Hall. Father has been interested in astronomy as long as he can remember and still has a book on stars which he had when he was eight years old. After a long time of looking through other people's telescope he decided to build one of his own. At the Franklin Institute he learned to grind mirrors and ground the mirror for the 8" reflector type telescope which now occupies the observatory. Work was started on the observatory two years ago. A professional contractor was hired to frame the building and attach it to the roof so that it might not take leave of Mendel some dark and windy night. Father spent some anxious moments the night that Hazel paid a visit to the campus but thankfully, they were in vain. The observatory dome was really meant to adorn a silo but with a few modifications it now serves its new purpose well.

As the plaque in the vestibule of Mendel Hall will testify the observatory is dedicated in memory of Jane Clark Jenkins. The observatory was financed by Father Jenkins' father and brother. His brother Dr. B. Wheeler Jenkins, is a Villanovan of the class of '31 and resides in Wycombe, Penna. with his wife and six children.

Aside from his interests in the observatory Father still takes avid interest in chemistry and everything associated with it here at Villanova. Father published a quarterly called the "Indicator" which contains news about alumni of the chemistry and chemical engineering departments.

In 1951 and 1953, ably assisted by Drs. George Quam and Robert White, he published a directory of all graduates in chemistry and chemical engineering along with their whereabouts. Most of these Father knows personally and still keeps in contact with. Another issue of the directory is expected this year. Father has had several articles published in chemical journals and is an active member of several organizations most notable of which are Sigma Chi- The American Chemical Society, and the American Astronomical Society.

As for the future, Father looks with interest to starting an Astronomy Club sometime after Easter. He is very thankful for the hard work done by the students who helped him in the observatory. Many of these students have expressed an interest in the Astronomy Club and he is anxious to meet with them, along with any other interested parties, soon after Easter.

It is difficult to put into words anything about Father Jenkins, the man. His appearance, his personality cannot be encompassed by several written phrases. A great many myths which have been built up around him have no foundation in truth. But all great men inspire tales. The greater the man, the taller the tales, I do not wish to assume the role of iconoclast, for as such, my efforts would be futile. Father Jenkins of chemistry and a knowledge of conducting an experiment without separating the ceiling of the lab from the floor, and for a good many years to come his genius will continue to inspire the tallest tales imaginable.

When you smoke Chesterfield it's so satisfying to know that you are getting the one cigarette that's low in nicotine, highest in quality.

A fact proved by chemical analyses of the country's six leading cigarette brands.

And it's so satisfying to know that a doctor reports no adverse effects to the nose, throat and sinuses from smoking Chesterfield.

The doctor's report is part of a program supervised by a responsible independent research laboratory and is based on thorough bi-monthly examinations of a group of Chesterfield smokers over a period of a year and a half.

The Big Week Approaches; Final Touches Applied:

Junior Week: Just Around the Corner

MOTHER'S DAY

The plans for Mother's Day have been completed for the most part. Some of the latest details taken care of were the purchase of the class tree, which is to be planted in front of the Chapel. Phil Keane was instrumental in completing the arrangements for this. The program, which was organized to a great extent by Bruce Martin, has gone to the printers and will be ready in plenty of time. The Diaper Dan contest pictures have been pouring in ever since the first letters were sent to the mothers. John Stangl, aided by Dick Yenni, is taking care of the contest and has said that the judges for the contest will be announced soon. The thing that can make or break the day we can't control. Please pray that it does'nt rain!

CONCERT—TALENT SHOW—DANCE

Talent Show co-chairmen Dick Peer and Jim Bambury have announced that prominent WFIL radio station disc jockey Dick Clarke has agreed to be one of the judges for the "Inter-Club Capers." Bob Schiller will direct the concert band in 50 minutes of entertainment beginning at 7:10. The Talent Show, with the other judges Bob Whelan and George Noake, will begin around 8 and will be followed by an informal dance with music by Gino Gallina's newly - formed group, the 13-piece Commodores. Admission to all the goings-on is free.

Here are Eddie Condon's boys, who delight nightly in Dixieland at EC's Greenwich Village place. This outfit, one of the standards in the musical cosmos of jazz, will rock the Field House come Wednesday and Thursday afternoon during Junior Week, 4-6. Admission is onebill per person.

Mother's Day Schedule

11:15—High Mass at Shrine of Mother of Good Counsel, followed by planting of class tree.

12:30—Luncheon in Mendel cafeteria and monastery dining hall, to be served in three shifts.

2:30—Entertainment in Field House: Concert Band, Villanova Singers, Mainliners' Quintet, Turf and Tinsel skit.

Also at 2:30—Baseball game—Villanova vs. LaSalle.

4:00—Diaper Dan Contest in Austin Lounge.

5:00—Benediction at Mother of Good Counsel Shrine.

6:15—Banquet at Field House.

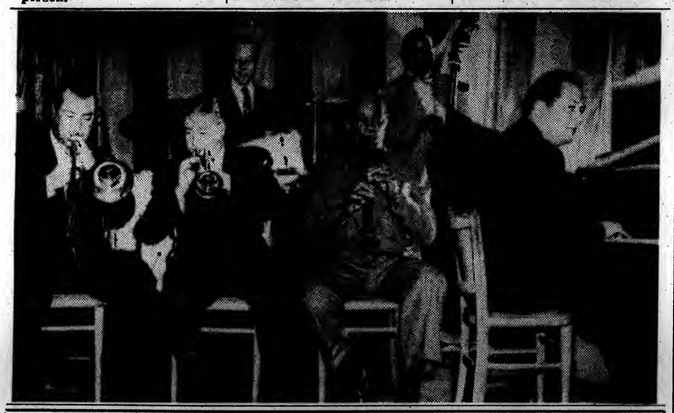
ITEMS: Parking—the lot beside and the one behind the Field House will be used exclusively for Mother's Day cars, as will any vacant spaces in the other lots.

Austin Lounge, where baby shots in Diaper Dan Contest are to be judged, will be open to Mothers and Juniors all day with the pictures on display.

Neither the Mothers or sons are expected to receive Communion, but they are certainly welcome to if they wish. They should, however, consider the fact that they may have to go without food until the luncheon begins at 12:30.

JAZZ CONCERT

With a great deal of help from publicity men Henry Guerrisi and Mario DiVincenzo and ticket heads Nick Mazzoni and Tom Meaney, Jazz Concert chairman Jack Kelly has been overseeing the distribution of posters through greater Philly advertising the coming Eddie Condon. Seats for Juniors will be reserved both Wednesday and Thursday, 4-6. Tickets on sale from officers, ticket men, Kelly and committee. Everybody is urged to buy early before the demand from outside increases.



JUNIOR PROM

The decorations committee, ambitiously at work as usual under the direction of chairman Phil Butler, is well advanced in its preparations for the Junior Prom, chairman Greg Gehring reports. Tickets are on sale from those men whose names are listed on notices posted about the campus; tickets are only six bills. Dick Cross has the refreshment situation well in hand, Pete Quinn is handling the many miscellaneous chores, Bob McCaffery is hawking patrons (don't refuse, even if you and your roommate, have to put up a half-bill apiece), and Bob Fredericks adds that the favors will be delivered before the end of the month. Planning head Roy Zimmerman has worked with Butler in the decorations regard.

DINNER DANCE

Almost 250 reservations, well over half the class, had been made last Thursday for the Dinner Dance, report chairman Dick Fitzpatrick and ticket head Nick Mazzoni. These men urge all interested, and they assume just about everybody is, to get their ten bills paid and seats reserved immediately. Dinner Dance tickets are on sale in the Pie Shoppe this week from 9 till 4, with sales definitely ending this Friday, day after tomorrow. After those Pie Shoppe hours, Juniors may see Mazzoni in his room, 209 Sullivan Hall. All arrangements are complete.

Reception Area of Station WVIL Is Expanded

As a result of seven months of planning and work by the WVIL engineering crew, four more dormitories have been added to the listening audience of the university station.

The crew, under the direction of Bob Brown, has just completed laying 2000 feet of coaxial cable from the station to Alumni, Fedigan, Good Counsel and Mendel Halls and also the Monastery.

Campus-wide reception is expected to be realized in about two weeks, station officials said. These halls, together with Sullivan, make up the present audience of WVIL since the abandonment of the aerial system of broadcasting about six months ago.

The cable is hooked directly into the electrical systems of the building, assuring listeners better reception of WVIL than any other station. Use of the cable limits the broadcast range to the campus, in accordance with regulations of the Federal Communications Commission.

Besides Brown, the engineering crew includes Spider McEowen, Ray Muench and Mike Polgar.

Debaters Attend Forensic Tournament in Virginia

During the Easter recess four members of the Beta Gamma Debating Society, Joe Roddy, Jim Wrzesinski, Mark McCormick, and Bill Byrne journeyed to Fredericksburg, Va., to compete in the Grand National Forensic Tournament sponsored by the Strawberry Leaf Society of Mary Washington College of the University of Virginia. Headquarters of the tourney were in the Tapestry Room of Seacobeck Hall on the Mary Washington Campus.

Approximately fifty colleges and universities were entered in the following events: address reading, after dinner, book review, debate, declamation, dramatic reading, encomium, Exempore, informative speech, poetry reading, original oration, response to the occasion, and situation oratory.

Debate China Topic

Villanova was represented in debate by Jim Wrzesinski and Joe Roddy, Affirmative; Bill Byrne and Mark McCormick, Negative. The question debated was the National Collegiate Debate Topic; Resolved: "The United States should grant diplomatic recognition to the Communist Government of China."

The debate portion of the tournament required Thursday and Friday in which each team faced a rigorous schedule of nine debates.

Some of the teams faced by Villanova's two teams in eighteen debates were: Washington and Lee University, Morris Harvey University, Duquesne, Oswego State Teachers College, Princeton, Emory University, Kenyon College, David Lipscomb College, Penn State, Xavier, Richmond, and Fredonia State Teachers College.

This is one of the largest debate tournaments held in the United States and it is unique in the fact that the debaters themselves act as judges.

The results of the tournament have not yet been received.

Class Nominations

ed by Rev. George McLaughlin, O.S.A., Dean of Student Activities, to check requirements beforehand.

One at a Time

A student does not have to be present at the meeting to be nominated, but candidates are reminded that office may be held in only one campus organization at one time.

By Student Council rule, a student may run for the office for which he is nominated and for that office only.

Names of eligible candidates will be posted on the bulletin boards after being processed by the dean's office, the registrar's office and the chaplain's office.

No public campaigning—posting of signs—is to begin before May 6.

Class of 1957:

Plans Frosh-Soph Party In May, Fall Blazer Ball

Preliminary planning for the Sophomore Class' Spring Party, May 13, has advanced with the appoinment of three committees.

Jack Decker, chairman of the dance, announced these appointments: decorations, Ben Berry and Don Kelly; tickets, Dick McEntee and Jack Fraser; publicity, Tom Smith and Bill Brown.

Final plans concerning ticket price, band or type of decoration to be used in the Field House were not available from Decker.

He did emphasize, though, that the dance, from 9 to 1, will be open to sophomores and freshmen only.

Another class spokesman said the spring party was scheduled after consultation with Rev. George McLaughlin, O. S. A., Dean of Student Activities, and Rev. Dante Girolami, O. S. A., class moderator.

A Blazer Ball, which had been considered, will probably be held next fall the spokeman added.

Officers of the University's Junior Class hinted that the moving of their Blazer Bill from a spot in Junior Week to last fall may have helped unite the class to successfully tackle the tough Junior Week planning.

Sunday Opening

The Library will be open from 2 to 5 on Sunday afternoons for the rest of the semester, Rev. Daniel Falvery, O. S. A., Librarian, announces.

If university officials consider the number of students using the facilities on these Sunday afternoons large enough, the policy will be retained next year, according to Father Falvey.

Earlier in the year, the Student Council recommended that the Library be kept open on Sunday. The measure passed through the Student-Faculty Committee before being approved by the administration.

Jim Mink, Industrial Relations Club representative on the Council, made the original motion that the Library be open on Sundays.

Joe Viverito Villanova's Own Happy Wanderer

When Villanovans want to get home, despite limited financial resources, they look for an expedient way of making the trip.

But to get home for the Easter break, Joe Viverito, senior Education major and former varsity footballer, walked 132 miles and he had $45 in his pocket.

When the retreat ended April 6, Viverito and Lou Casella, a senior in the C & F School, strode off the Villanova campus. Each carried a knapsack containing an extra pair of shoes, a pair of sneakers and medical supplies.

"Video" told one newspaper interviewer that the first day was the toughest. By 10:30 p. m., when he reached Trenton, in the rain, his feet were blistered and Casella had given up the hike.

No Cheating

Taking off from his hotel room around 6:30 a. m. Thursday, Joe made it to Rahway, N. J. by night fall. Friday, when he attempted to sneak through the Lincoln Tunnel, where pedestrians are not allowed, Joe was stopped by police 200 yards from the end.

After police drove him back to the Jersey side, the energetic graduate of Chaminade High School managed to hitch a ride into New York. To make up for the "sissified stunt," he walked down to 34th Street and back to the tunnel.

"I guess that's much more than 200 yards, but I wanted to be sure," reserved Joe adds in his typically calm way.

No Coat or Tie?

He was home in Garden City by 2:32 p. m., although he had figured not to make it until midnight. Incidentally, he had been turned down in four New York City hotel Friday night because of his sloppy clothes.

Viverito has pulled spectacular stunts before (like the time he scaled a 40-foot diving board during a performance of the Aquashow and leaped off fully clothed, making the audience think he was part of the show). This hike, though, took plenty of behind the scenes sweat. He did roadwork for weeks to round into shape.

Riflers

Villanova's NROTC rifle team, which ended up in second place in the Philadelphia ROTC League, finished in the same place Saturday in the second annual ROTC championship rifle tourney.

Penn's ROTC shooters edged the Villanova midshipmen 1388-1383.

Sharpshooting John Gilligan closed out his career with the Villanova riflemen by firing a 285—second high for the day.

Villanova's captain also shot the day's lone perfect score in the prone.

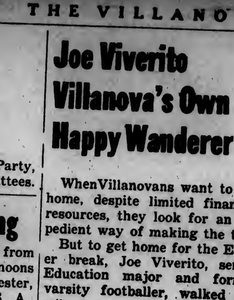
Rounds were fired at the Philadelphia Rifle Club.

Enters Convent

Anne Brady, formerly of the Class of '57, has been received as a novice in the Order of the Immaculate Heart of Mary at the order's motherhouse in West Chester. She entered the order as a postulant last Sept. 8.

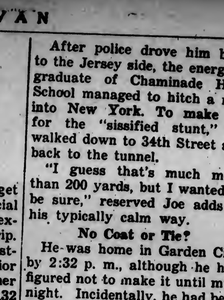
Immaculate Heart sisters staff many parochial, diocesan and private schools in the Archdiocese of Philadelphia.

Miss Brady, a resident of St. Dominic's parish in Northeast Philadelphia, graduated from Nazareth Academy. She is the first Villanova nursing student to enter the religious life.



Junior Queen Contest Ends:

Lovelies: Hats in the Ring



Nearly 60 pictures of Juniors' prom dates were handed in for the Queen Contest competition prior to the deadline last Wednesday night, co-chairmen Jack Downing and Bob Ford announced.

The whole lot of Class '56 lovelies was hustled off to New York over the week-end for final judging by TV personality Steve Allen (Tonight) and his cast, including Skitch Henderson, Gene Rayburn, Edyie Gourme and Steve Lawrence.

The Queen, her Lady-in-waiting and four members of her Court will be decided upon this week, and, under a veil of secrecy that rivals that of the Academy Awards, (Bob Hope said the secretaries were taken out and shot), sent back to the co-chairmen. The announcement of the winners will be made in the Junior Week issue, coming out Mother's Day.

JUDY WAGNER, 19, Beaver College, Port Jefferson, L. I. Height, 5'4"; weight, 115.

JANET COMFORT, 55 E. Maple St., Metuchen, N. J.; Newark State Teachers, Junior. Height, 5'3½"; weight, 118 lbs.

Tom McInerney, day hop, C & F.

Robert Patricoski, Eng.

SANDRA McKINNON, 209 Ogle Ave., Lancaster Village, Wilmington, Del., student University of Del. Height, 5'5"; weight, 112.

PAT CHRISTMANN, 19, Rosemont sophomore. Height, 5'2"; weight, 105, Valley Stream, L. I.

Grey Gehring, off-campus resident, C & F.

JOANNE HARRINGTON, 23, 5614 Houghton St., Roxborough, Pa. Height, 5'4"; weight, 116. Sophomore, Chestnut Hill College.

Al Ligorell, Alumni Hall, C & F.

Awards for the winners, co-chairmen Ford and Downing announce, are many and gracious. First of all, the chosen Queen, if from out of town, will be given free hotel accomodations, and in either case her date will receive free tickets to all Junior Week festivities except, of course, Mother's Day. The lady-in-waiting and her date and the other four couples of the Court will receive gratis ducats for the prom and dinner dance, and the Wednesday-Thursday jazz concert.

Pictures will be returned as soon as possible to the Juniors who submitted them. Both Ford and Downing agree that the entries were of remarkably high quality, and both commented that their classmates are to be commended on their taste in the choice of pulchritude.

Sound Cast, Top Setting Make for Tn'T Success

"Jessica James," T&T's spring production, will bow at the Field House next week, and, according to all reports, it will donate a perinnially good show to an expected large crowd.

Two factors which virtually assure a smash hit April 27-30 are an almost perfect cast for the show, and first-rate stage settings.

Heading the excellent cast in the parts of Jessica and Jesse James are respectively, Don Mattingly, sophomore Arts, and John Giordano, a senior Pre-law student. Frank Kilmond, a T&T veteran, will hold the limelight as Grandma.

Phil Butler, junior Education major, has announced the completion of all sets and the painting of the same this week to finish on schedule.

Tickets for the presentation have already been placed on sale in the 3.1416 Shop at $1.50 for General admission and $1.00 for Students. A sale of special tickets at $.75 per for the Wednesday performance will continue to be sold until Tuesday, April 26.

Junior tickets for the Sunday show may be secured from members of the Junior Week Committee. Juniors and their mothers will be admitted at the $1.00 admission.

The Cover Contest for the program will be judged this week and the results will be published in next week's paper.

No Chapel

Chapel exercises have been cancelled for the rest of the semester, the Chaplain's Office has announced.

Institution of Daylight Savings Time, which cuts attendance, was given as a reason for the cancellation by a spokesman in the Chaplain's Office.

Contest Judges Are Announced

Three members of the English department have been named to judge the LYNX short story contest, which closed Friday.

Rees James, LYNX editor, announced these judges: Dr. Edward McGrath, Mr. Jerome Fischer and Rev. John McShea.

Students who submitted the three best stories will receive prizes of $15, $10 and $5, respectively.

The winning entry may be included in the May issue of the LYNX, James said.

Recreation Rooms Finally Open

If the sun doesn't shine on these spring Sunday afternoons, students now have the recreation rooms in Austin and Sullivan to blow off pent-up energy.

The rooms will be open from noon until 6 p. m. on the rest of the Sundays of the semester, according to an announcement from Rev. Edward B. McKee, O. S. A., university vice-president.

Track Team Defeats West Chester; 4 Records Fall

Villanova's sophomore pole-vault sensation, Don Bragg, listens intently to track Coach Jim "Jumbo" Elliot a few minutes before he pole-vaulted to a record 14'7" in last Saturday's track meet against West Chester State Teachers College.

Jenkins, Bragg, Fahey, Relayers Set New Marks

by Norm Feldpush

Charlie Jenkins

After bowing to Navy and Georgetown in a triangular meet, Villanova halted West Chester's dual meet string at 11, including a triumph over the Wildcats last season. The team scores were Navy (70½), Georgetown (53), and Villanova (38½).

Navy's depth overpowered the Wildcats, despite five first places by the Mainliners. Villanova won only two of the runing events, a Charlie Jenkins 48.1 triumph in the 440, and the mile relay. The winning mile relay quartet was Al Peterson, Jim Moran, Warren Heitman, and Al Liggorelli.

Sophomore pole vaulter Don Bragg set an unofficial record with a leap of 14'1". Jim Brady and Jim Fahey were the only other winners, with triumphs in the high jump and the shot put respectively.

New Mark Set

Four new records were created and another equalled as Villanova scored a 66-63 victory over West Chester State Teachers College.

Jenkins and Bragg once again proved to be the top point producers. Charlie set a record in the 440 with a 48.1 clocking, and tied another in winning the 220 in 21.4. Bragg established a new district collegiate standard with a vault of 14'7". Other Wildcat record breakers were Jim Fahey in the shot put (50' 1¾"), and the mile relay in 3:21.6.

Breckenridge Copes Two

Alex Breckenridge was a double winner, capturing the mile and two mile events. Al Ligorelli provided valuable points with seconds in the 100 and 220 yard sprints, and anchored the mile relay.

The Wildcats are now preparing for the New York relays this week, to be followed by the Penn Relays, one week later.

Grid Practice Resumes Under New Coaches

LastMonday, in their first spring session with the team, football coach Frank Reagan and his staff held the first spring training workout for the entire team, in accordance with an NCAA edict which forbade organized practice prior to that date.

This year, quite a different story should be written than had been the case for the past two years, when the Wildcat gridders sucered badly from a losing malady.

Lack of conditioning, which in the past has proven to be a serious problem, is just that, a thing of the past. All winter long, Assistant coach Otis Douglas has had his linemen and backfield attaches doing various types of exercises, including boxing, wrestling, and weight-lifting.

Another encouraging sign is the abundance of talent found in the backfield during practice sessions. Americo Sapienza, who was a sensation on the Frosh team last fall, has impressed immensely, and has been spoken of as Gene Filipski's successor. The numerous sophomore backs, all off whom were green last year, now have a full season's experience behind them, and should be better equipped to gain yardage next fall.

With the eligibility of the huge freshman team line, which overpowered all comers during season's play, the forwawrd wall will be much bigger, tougher and cometent.

The return from service of Ronnie Gorton, who called signals for Villanova a few seasons ago, will further bolster the quarterback position, which is now being for by John Ferroulo, Art Rohach, Bill McGhee, and John Lammers.

All, however, is not so rosy. Losses to the team through graduation inJune will leave many gaps in the team. Dick Scott, the Wildcats left-handed signal caller, is leaving, as are Johnny Giordano, Jack Helm, Bill McGarry, and John Sullivan.

The line also will feel the loss of graduating Seniors.

Seton Hall and Princeton Victimized by Wildcats

by Bob Strayton

Sporting a record of two victories and three defeats, Villanova's erratic baseball team traveled to South Orange, New Jersey on Saturday, where they met the bucanneers from Seton Hall in a contest at the latter's home field.

Villanova won the ball game, 7-5.

Dick Scott, the southpaw ace, started the ball game for the Wildcats, and was touched for two markers in the first inning. When Bill McGarry and Danny Severino combined their hits for a Villanova score in the second, Scott regained his composure, and held the Priates to just one run until the fifth inning.

Jack Peters

Scott Tires in Fifth

Meanwhile, a display of hitting rarely seen this season gave Villanova a 5-3 edge going into the bottom of the fifth. Then Scotty tired, and was touched for a pair of runs before he was replaced by junior John Nagy, a right-hander.

Navy successfully put out the fire, and for the rest of the game pitched scoreless ball.

Villanova picked up two more runs in the sixth inning, and the Wildcats once again had a two run lead. From then on, neither team was able to score, and the game ended at 7-5 with Villanova in front.

First Hitting Spree

For the Wildcats, it was their first show of hitting strength this year. The team accumulated 15 hits during the game. Jack Peters, the left-fielder, and catcher Bill Pearson picked up three apiece, while John DiGiallorenzo, Ron Montagne, Bill McGarry, and Dan Severino each got two.

Previous to the Setonia win, the Wildcats had beaten Vermont 5-4), and Princeton (2-0), and recorded losses to Ithaca (5-3), Dartmouth (6-3), and Army (8-4).

The Princeton game, played at Princeton on April 7, saw Danny Severino battle it out with Tiger hurler Jim Gibson in a pitching duel which Villanova won, 2-0.

Severino Outstanding

Severino limited the Tigers to seven scattered hits, while at the same time he drove in the initial Wildcat score with one of his two hits of the day. Probably his best performance, talented Dan gave up only two walks and allowed only three men to get as far as second base.

On April 9th, the Wildcats entertained Dartmouth's diamond men at the home stadium, and succumbed to the Indians, 6-3.

Black Stops Rally

Going into the seventh inning, Villanova led in the ball game 2-1, but lefty Dick Scott tired, and he was hit for two-runs before he was relieved by sophomore Bob Scalzi and Dick Black, who were able to stop the rally.

But Dartmouth found the range again in the eight and ninth, and picked up three more runs in those two frames. In the bottom of the ninth, Villanova scored once more on two walks and an error, but wasn't strong enough to overcome the four-run deficit.

Army Collects 15 Hits

A fifteen-hit barrage by the Military Academy baseball team also was sufficient to rout the Wildcats in a game played at Doubleday Stadium at Army on April 13th.

Army took a quick two-run lead in the first inning, but Villanova tied the game up with single tallies in the second and third. The game then turned into a romp ,as the meat of the Army lineup trained their guns on Wildcat pitchers Danny Severino and John Nagy for six runs in the sixth and seventh innings, to win the ball game, 8-4.

VILLANOVA DIVOTEER:

New Set of Irons Makes Big Difference: Blanchet

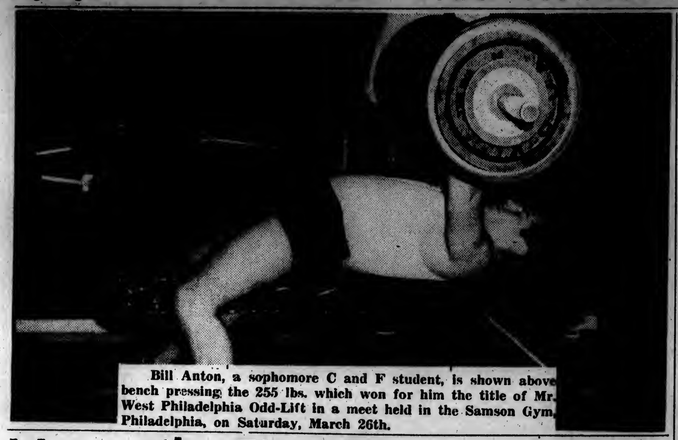
A set of irons may prove the difference between remaining a high seventies golfer, or, becoming an impressive, under-par performer, at least as far as Villanova's Lou Blanchet is concerned.

Lou, a Senior linksmen and four year member of Villanova's golfing aggregation, is a serious minded youth who plays a fine round of golf. In an effort to improve his already competent performance, Lou recently acquired a new set of irons with which he hopes to "improve my game, because they have a good feel."

Alex Breckenridge

Won Numerous Tourneys

Some of the genial Finance major's accomplishments to date are: victories in Junior, Regular and Club tournaments, of which he has won many; and at the mentionof his 68, four under par round at Burnside Country Club, when he recorded five birdies on the back nine for a 37-31 showing, Lou's chest swells with pride. And with good reason too, because a total like that would make all the Bobby Jones' and Ben Hogan's around the country turn green with envy.



Three Year Veteran

The three year veteran of Wildcat links forays got his initial experience during the summer months, when he played constantly. His first journey into a tee came when he was only thirteen years old, and he has had such a keen interest in the game that he plays weekly during the winter months. Lou Marffo, a well-known pro a few years ago, receives credit for being Lou's first tutor, and an able one he proved to be.

Hit 310 yd. drive

The long-ball hitting Villanovamainstay has been a pacemaker for the Wildcats since his sophomore year. He has been attributed with having hit more than one 300 yard drive, and says, with all sinderity, that just recently he drove a ball 310 yards. With such power, it is easily seen why Lou has been such a contender for the number one spot on the golf team.

Versatile First-Baseman Jack Helm Two-Way Threat

by Bill Brown

According to Naval parlance, the helm is that part of the ship which houses the steering mechanism. According to Villanovan parlance, the Helm is that part of the baseball team which occupies first base. Whether a naval or a Villanovan term,, there are those who say that both house the steering mechanism.

There is no doubt that Jack Helm is Coach Mahan's type of player. In fact, he's any coach's type of player. His mastery of the defensive and offensive tools of his trade makes him a terror to all opposing players.

Helm: All-Star

Jack comes to Villanova from Downingtown. It was there, at Downingtown high, that Jack first played organized ball, although he says that he has had a glove on his hand since his diaper days. While at Downingtown, he was a three letter athlete in baseball, basketball, and football. He was elected to the All-County football team for two years.

After graduation, this personable senior in the C and F school will serve two years in the Marine Corps as a result of Platoon Leader Corps training. When the Marine stint has been satisfied, he said, "If I'm one piece, I'd like to play pro ball" Jack added that he has had offers from the Yankees,' Cardinals, A's, and Pirates.

Biggest Thrill

When asked about his biggest thrill in baseball, Jack said it came when "I hit a double in the American Legion All-Star game at Shibe Park. I felt like jumping around the stands like a kangaroo."

Ball players fade away and Jack knows it. He would like to have a law practice set up to make the fading soft. He will try to squeeze law school into his plans.

However, all is not base ball and soldiering with John Helm. There is a girl, back in Downingtown, by the name of Terry Valentino about whom Jack has wedding plans. Jack cautions that the wedding must go through various and sundry channels.

"Large Family"

When asked about the size of his family, Jack succinctly replied, "Mom, Dad, and myself." He added that many were the times when he wished for brothers and sisters.

One can understand Jack's longing for a larger family when one knows of Jack's environment. Downingtown's population is composed mostly of the families of railroad workers and iron and paper mill workers.

Just as the interview ended, someone in Sullivan Hall called for another hand in a card game and, as Jack had an anxious look on his face, this writer bid him a good night.

Golf Team Records Two Victories, One Defeat

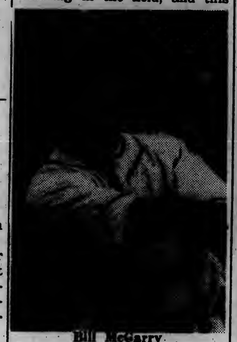
The Villanova Golf Team has a record of 2 wins and 1 loss thus far this season. Although only three matches of a scheduled eleven have been played, the future looks very promising. Team captain Charlie Stone, a junior letterman, spoke very optimistically of forthcoming matches and felt certain, that the teams once setback by St. Joseph's on April 15 will be easily reversed when Villanova plays the Hawks again in the last match of the season.

Klemanowicz Shoots 74

The team members are Captain Stone, Ben Klemanowicz, a promising sophomore, Jack Kelly, Jim and Bob McElhaney, Lou Blanchet, Fred Anton and Joe Gallagher. In the first match the Wildcats beat Haverford College 5-4 on the Aronimink course. Leading the way for Villanova were Klemanowicz, Blanchet and McElhaney. Klemanowicz was low man with 74.

On April 14, West Chester was defeated 6-3 at the West Chester Country Club. The Villanova standouts were McElhaney, Blanchet, Anton and Klemanowicz.

In the third match last Friday St. Joseph's College handed Stone and company their first setback 5-4. Joe Gallagher led Villanova with a 77.



West Chester Nine Hands Villanova Fourth Loss

Tendering a .500 record of three wins-three losses, Villanova's baseball team met West Chester's unbeaten nine at the home stadium, and once again the Wildcats lack of hitting when they needed it turned the tide of battle. West Chester won the ball game, 9-3.

Righty Dan Severino started the ball game, and was touched up for a two run homer in the initial frame. With his confidence shaken, Danny was unable to become efficient, and was lifted for Dick Black, whom the visitors also continued to shell.

The powerful State Teachers team proved able both on offense and defense. Aside from their nine-run barrage, they also were unerring in the field, and this combination was more than sufficient in routing the Wildcats.

Among the big guns in Villanova's hitting department were Johnny Di Giollorenzo, the adept sophomore .second sacker, Bill McGarry, centerfielder, and catcher Bill Pearson, who collected two hits apiece. Aside from the efforts of these three, Villanova's box score was almost devoid of other base-hits.

Villanova EVENING DIVISION

Vol. 30—No. 19 VILLANOVA UNIVERSITY, VILLANOVA, PA. April 20, 1955

Mr. Schaefer on Evening School Faculty 27 Years

A figure familiar to all Villanova business school students, both evening and day, is Mr. Leo H. Schaefer. Mr. Schaefer came to Villanova in 1922, and when the Evening Division was begun six years later, he joined that faculty. He has been here ever since, providing instruction and guidance to over a generation of Villanovans.

Mr. Schaefer attended the University of Wisconsin and graduated in 1917. In his last year as an undergraduate he taught at Madison, Wis., at the first night college in the United States. At age 19 he became principal of a graded school at Mount Hope, Wisc., some 50 miles from his birthplace in Muscatee, Wisc.

At Villanova Since 1922

After a period in service at the close of World War I, he joined the faculty of the University of Montana. He returned to college after two years to complete work for his master's degree in business adminstration, which he won in 1924 at Northwestern University. In the meantime he accepted a position at Villanova in 1922.

Mr. Schafer
Oldest Prof

At this time, too, Mr. Schaefer received two life teacher certificates from Wisconsin, one by examination and one by course study. He has since become a member of the American Accounting Association.

Teaching both father and son is no longer a novelty, he claims. He cited many examples, including Bill Kirschner, a C & F senior and his Dad, William, Sr., who were both taught by Mr. Schaefer, and Jim Harnett, 1953, and his father.

Mr. Schaefer has many memories of the Evening Division, and the growing pains it suffered. He can recall when the Division was transferred to Hallahan in 1934, how courses were added so that certificates and later degrees could be earned, and when, in 1952, the Division was returned to the campus and master's degrees could be won.

Students Travel From Afar

Nurses, corporation presidents, laborers, servicemen, reporters, bricklayers, office boys, plumbers, teachers, truck drivers, and welders are all represented in Villanova's Evening Division. The students travel from Maryland, New York, Delaware, New Jersey and Pennsylvania. Forty-eight have had their jobs less than a year, another has been with his company for 35 years.

The five men pictured above represent five different states. Ralph S. Graff or Woodstown, N. J. has been employed by E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. of Wilmington as a technical sales representative for the last five years.

Man Travels 120 Miles

George E. Grove is employed by New Jersey Zinc Co. of New York City and he travels to Villanova from his home in Williston Park, N. Y. each Monday night.

James M. Hutchison is a construction engineer for Electric Hose & Rubber Co. in his home town of Wilmington. He has been employed by the same company for 18 years.

Development engineer Robert J. Rhoads of Reading is employed by Firestone Plastics Co. of Pottstown.

Carroll E. Stewart travels from Lutherville, Md. by way of Baltimore, where he is employed by Latex & Rubber Co. All these men are enrolled in the Basic Rubber Technology courses in the Evening Division.

Nine Bryn Mawr Nurses

Nurses in the Evening Division are employed by many of the big hospitals in the area, by industry, and by various other institutions, including boards of education and colleges.

Nearby Veterans Hospital has the largest representation, with 10 of its nurses attending night classes at Villanova. There are nine students from Bryn Mawr Hospital, and eight from Mater Misercordiae. Two nurses attend from the Community Health and Civic Center in Ardmore, while one each are employed by the Abington Public Schools, Camden Catholic High School, the Philadelphia parochial schools, and Rosemont College.

"Selective Enrollment" Is Night School Principle

When, in 1928, Villanova instituted the Evening Session, it did it with the purpose of offering "advanced study to as many Catholic men and women as the facilities can provide. "It was designed for "a selective enrollment," with no special announcements, other than the Evening School Bulletin which appears.

In the early years courses were offered in the basic business fields and in certain Arts subjects. For many years the courses were offered to students interested in cultural self-betterment or to students working toward a certificate which was given after successful completion of 36 credit hours.

Because of the nature of the school, classes were transferred from the campus in 1934, to centrally - located Hallahan High School in Philadelphia. Not until 1952 were they returned to the campus.

Enrollment in the early years was limited by transportation difficulties. However, by 1934 there were 120 students enrolled. In 1937 the school had grown to 459 students. The number remained near that figure until the war years, when less than one hundred attended.

In 1946-1947 this figure again reached the pre-war level. Whereas 279 enrolled in the fall of 1946, there was a jump to 431 one year later. This was due to the increasing number of returning servicemen and to increased leisure time on the part of workers.

Rev. Joseph C. Bartley, O.S.A., was placed in charge of the Division at its inception. He had previously headed the summer session, as well as C & F, of which he is still is dean.

He remained as dean until 1950, when he was replaced by Rev. Edward J. McCarthy, who served for two years. Rev. Louis A. Rongione was named to the post in June of 1952, but Mr. Eugene P. Powers took over two months later when Father Rongione was assigned to Rome. Mr. Powers is still the head of the division.

The courses originally offered were concerned primarily with business and a certain number of Arts, but this broadened to include engineering courses and sufficient courses to permit the earning of degrees.

In recent years graduate courses have been added, so that it's now possible to win master's degrees in Chemical Engineering and in Applied Statistics and Statistical Quality Control.

Bachelor's degrees may be earned in accounting, mechanical and electrical engineering and in business administration. It is also possible to gain certificates in these courses and in Basic Rubber Technology.

Professor Gives Paper At D. C. Meet

Mr. Joseph L. Ciminera, an instructor in the Evening School's Quality Control department, delivered a paper, "Methods for Estimating the ED 50 Effective Dose 50)" before the Spring meeting of the Biological Section of the American Drug Manufacturers Association, held in Washington on March 23, 24, 25.

The author explained that ED 50 is a measure of the dose of drug that affects 50% of the animals in a test. It is required in the evaluation of potency and

In addition to teaching his Monday night classes, Mr. Ciminera is a biometrician in charge of expermental design at the Sharpe and Dohme Pharmaceutical Corp. in Philadelphia. He had previously written another paper, "Extended Cross-Over Design in Insulin Assay," which was printed in the magazine, "Biometrics."

Juniors, Sophs, Frosh Nominate Large Numbers

Names of 156 prospective candidates in the class elections have been submitted to a faculty board for approval. Posting of the list of approved candidates was expected before the end of this week.

Frank Licopoli, chairman of the Student Council Elections Committee — which supervised nominations meetings for the three classes, said the 156 men were nominated for 27 offices.

He said it would probably be at least a week before a list of official candidates is released by Rev. George McLaughlin, O. S. A., Dean of Student Activities.

To be eligible to run for class offices, candidates must be approved by the Dean's Office, the Chaplain's Office and the Office of the Vice-President.

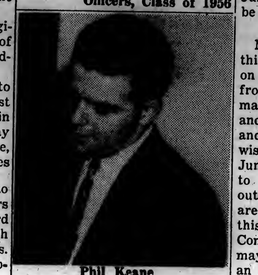
Other requirements for eligibility are listed on page 55 of the Villanova students' handbook.

No public campaigning is to begin until May 8. Signs must be placed on regular bulletin boards but neat billboards may be set up near the Pie Shoppe, the Dean of Student Activities indicated.

Secretaries are requested to leave a list of incoming officers on the newspaper bulletin board (basement of C & F), along with the names of outgoing officers.

All nominations must be submitted for approval.

A Note of Thanks to Juniors



Now that Junior Week is upon us, we want to pause from preparations long enough to let you and your classmates know how much we appreciate your response during the past year.

Right from the start, you have displayed an enthusiasm and co-operation that has made our job a very enjoyable one; our class moderator, Father Calpin, and ourselves have marveled consistently at your work in all projects—Blazer Ball, rings, orphans, and the many others.

Now, with our big moment four days away, we want to thank you—the steering comittee, the chairmen, the committeemen, everybody who's given a hand . . . and that's includes just about all.

You have our best wishes for a truly memorable Junior Week.

Sincerely,
Officers, Class of 1956

Junior Phil Keane Named Editor of C&F Publication

The first issue of the brand new C & F magazine, BUSINESS WHIRL, will appear during the week of May 9, according to Editor Phil Keane.

Some three months ago several C & F students and faculty members felt that since C & F was the largest school in the university, it should have some outlet of expression for its members. The magazine was chosen.

Keane, who was one of the students who planted the seed for the magazine, said about a month of actual work went into this first issue, which is being printed in Galberry Hall, research center.

Tri-Annal Issues

Beginning next year, BUSINESS WHIRL will be issued tri-annually, according to Keane.

Rounding out the staff of the magazine are: Henry Whalen, associate editor; Bob Cassidy, copy; Dick Bellwoar, layout; Jim Clark, circulation; Paul Donahue and Jim Greenlee, publicity; Dick Marvel and Dick Omrod, business; and Frank Scarpa, research.

Keane, who said he did not know whether he would retain the editorship next year, indicated the magazine would deal with current business topics.

Between Lynx and Engineer

He added, however, that BUSINESS WHIRL will be a cross between the LYNX, the literary magazine, and the ENGINEER.

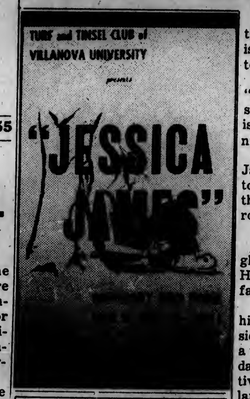
Distribution of the magazine, which is free to all C & F students, will be made during religion classes or during major classes.

Plans have also been made to include a research section on general business along the Main Line.

Scene Is Set: Last-Minute J. W. Work Progresses

Plans that have been in the making for almost a year are reaching the stage of last-minute clean-up preparations for Junior Week, beginning unofficially next Sunday night and running through eight days of varied social activity.

The final preparations are these:



Turf and Tinsel Show Sunday Night—Tickets for this show, admitting Juniors and their early-arriving Moms for a package price of $1.00, are on sale from ticket head Nick Mazzoni, assistants Frank Collins, Paul Porreca and Lou Donatelli, and Harry Nash. This show, the finale of five 'Jessica James' performances put on by T n' T, will be open to everyone but only Juniors and their Mothers will be availed of the special price.

Pie Shoppe Sale's

Mother's Day — Tickets for this most rewarding day are still on sale, of course, for $9.50, from chairman Frank Hartmann, Mazzoni and Tom Meaney and assistants, and class officers and in Pie Shoppe. Hartmann wishes to point out that any Juniors and Mothers who wish to receive Communion at the outdoor Mass at 11:15 Monday are urged to do. The ruling on this situation: When receiving Communion after 9 a.m., one may take liquids up to within an hour of Mass time. In other words, orange and other fruit juices may be taken up until 10:15 without breaking one's fast. The programs for the day have been received, and this brings up another point. In the

"Lock up yore valuables, Zeb, that there Jesse James' lil gal is aridin' into the Field House tonight . . ."

Which is one way of saying "Jessica James," Turf and Tinsel's spring musical production, is opening a five night run tonight at 8:30 in the Field House.

And the rest of the notorious James family will be there, too, to provide a rhythmic twist to the famous history of the bank robbing brothers.

Rumors Are Flying

There's some rumor about ghosts floating around the Field House stage, but, rumors fly so fast around here . . .

Anyway, Don Mattingly — in his T n' T debut—portrays Jessica, the sometimes sophisticated, sometimes hillbillyish daughter. Assisting the talkative little farm boy from Maryland is John Giordano, former varsity footballer, as Jesse and Frank Killmond, as Grandma.

Naturally, T n' T insiders didn't want to disclose too many specific details of the show, but they would say the plot centered around the love life and ethics of lively Jessica.

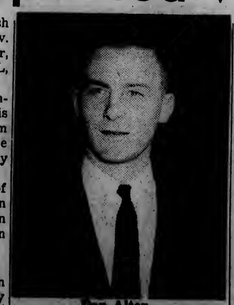
Succeeds Coyne on Radio Station:

Alton Appointed WVIL Mgr.



Don Alton, junior English major, has been named by Rev. Louis A. Rongione, moderator, as station manager of WVIL, succeeding Bernie Coyne.

Alton, a regular NROTC member of the Marine division, is 21 years old and hails from Atlantic City, N. J., where he graduated from Atlantic City High School.

Alton has a large amount of experience, having served on WVIL for three years and on WFPG, a commercial station in Atlantic City, for two years.

New Radio Station

Next year a new radio station will be found in Dougherty Hall, the new Student Union Building.

Don Alton
New WVIL Head

Change in the station will include an FM set-up providing music throughout the day and a teletype of news from all over providing news continuously throughout the day.

The station will also be more commercial next year.

Alton said he intends to be much stricter in his management of the station.

During the past year, Alton has served as program director.

Enter "Business Whirl"

A few months ago, some students of the Commerce and Finance School realized that their school, the largest on campus, was the only one with no literary publication.

They talked it over among themselves and asked the advice of members of the faculty. Giving much of their precious time to this quest, they came up with the Business Whirl—the new product of the C&F School.

The purposes of this publication are to put our business school in contact with industry, to have the students express their opinion on current business topics and to give some medium of expression to the school, which it lacked until now.

The Business Whirl will give voice to the unpublished ideas and theories of students of business and at the same time make the people of the surrounding area realize that within their midst there thrives a C&F School worthy of commendation and ready to give to the world highly trained men in various commerical fields.

The VILLANOVAN welcomes this new campus publication, wishing it success and a long life of service in the promotion of business.

Pity Poor Seniors

Don't look now, but there are now types of people at Villanova:

(1) normal students

(2) Seniors

There was this fellow decked out in a dinner suit at one of the proms last weekend. On his arm was a soul-stirring blonde. Around him whirled those colorful, mad-cap collegians you always read about. And sure enough, he stood out there in the middle of the dance floor talking quite soberly to an insurance agent.

The guy with blonde and the blank expression was, of course, a senior.

Let's face it—anybody who is finishing up sixteen years of doing one thing, in this case education, and is sticking his neck out into something else, Lord knows what, for the rest of his life—well, he's bound to act oddly.

Some take the other extreme. With five weeks to go before graduation and commissioning into the Marine Corps, one desperate young man last year had 27 dates, saw four night baseball games and heard six concerts, closed out three bank accounts, tried to swallow a goldfish and logged in close to 150 hours in the Rosemont Tea House.

The average alumnus - to - be is plagued by a number of problems and decisions. He wonders if he'll pass, if he'll graduate; he's playing footsie with the draft board while deciding whether to work for Consolidated Sewers or Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

You've got to sympathize with the species seniors; he has a great deal on his young mind.

NEXT WEEK IS JUNIOR WEEK!

Solution OF Racial Bias Misses Basic Problem

By Bob Farley

Since the beginning of history, the problem racial relationship and prejudice has been prime, varying only in degrees of intensity dependent upon time, place, and individuals involved. We must admit that very few solutions to this problem have had any real effect, and if they have, the effect hasn't been lasting enough to rid us completely of this scourge.

Just recently in our own nation, which prides itself in the democratic way of life and the equality of God-given rights, we saw the reaction to the Supreme Court's decision declaring segregation in public schools unconstitutional. Once again the "pot of prejudice" has been stirred up. Friction and ill-feeling between the Negro and the white have been increased. Why? From the time of the Civil War the Negro has been advancing to the point where he will receive equal advantages with the white. This has been done by virtue of legislative measures for the most part, but it was done only after much bitterness and dissension. This has resulted in a greater alienation and misunderstanding between the races. Obviously, therefore, the problem is more fundamental, and the solution must be attempted by some other means; and we, as educated men, have an obligation to contribute our energies in this regard.

First of all, no scientifically sound evidence on inherent difference in mental ability coincident with physical differences exists. And secondly, no evidence has been produced to show that one race is superior in intelligence or physical ability to another. Therefore, rational man cannot use racial distinctions as criteria in determining superiority. However, the problem of racial prejudice isn't only interracial but also intraracial and seems to be involved in a false notion of the superiority of not only one color over another but also of one degree of intensity over another. Thus, we see the basis for prejudging one race superior to another and the cause of discord in racial relations. To instruct us in this matter, we have no greater a teacher than Christ Himself in the words of St. John, when He says, "Judge not by appearances but give just judgement."

Now, we understand why legislation is not effective in solving the problem of racial prejudice and in securing proper racial relationships, and why Negro organizations themselves, along with groups of whites, have caused as much repercussion as advancement, for they have failed to cite the real cause and to point out the fallacy. Of course, these circumstances apply to the yellow race as well, but here in the United States, the situation is predominantly black and white. The only solution capable of any finality necessitates the realization on the part of each individual, regardless of race, that the basis of a just judgment requires something other than appearances.

We must not be wanting in Christian charity and good will in helping to stamp out racial prejudice..By doing this we further satisfy the universal desire of man for peace in the world; this is the only proper way of acting as Christian gentlemen in our relations with our fellowmen.

"Mr. Blue" Revisited

By Bernie Finan

To cure that most cursed of contemporary nemeses, anxiety, I can think of no literary remedy as efficacious as "Mr. Blue," a brief work (157 pages) by Myles Connolly which is concerned with a character who might be described as a modern-day St. Francis of Assisi. But yet it does not preach, not in a heavily didactic sense, anyway. Rather it is a wondrous tale of a youth who radically personifies the Christian spirit of admitting no compromise.

In one of the first episodes, for instance, we find Blue in the process of spending, as quickly as he can, two million dollars he inherited unexpectedly. This practice is a highly honored vocation among some members of our American aristocracy, but Mr. Blue gives it the Christian twist by purchasing three or four palatial homes which he staffs with run-down, consequently needy, servants. Another time, Blue charms a building superintendent into allowing him to establish his residence on top of a skyscraper in lower Manhattan.

His shelter for rainy weather on this strange perch is a gaily painted packing case, atop which flies a ragged flag bearing in bold red letters the word "Courage." Here he makes eloquent, passionate speeches about God and how He saved man from the temporality of other creatures, the spiritual intimacy with God which comes from living high in the sky, and the possibility of housing the poor on the un-used roofs of skyscrapers. The reader finds himself gasping for air and wondering, along with the narrator, whether Blue is not mad. But a certain intuition removes this suspicion, and we come to realize that Blue posesses the highest wisdom—the wisdom that causes God in all things.

Many of the ideas in this book are perhaps full-fledged products of an uncontrolled enthusiasm. Yet isn't abandonment to the truth, which is after all a sort of un-checked enthusiasm, a requisite for sainthood? Blue occasionally takes a stand with which we might argue, but in the main we are all for his spirit.

He paints in large, roving splashes of crimson and orange with more energy than care. However, he is trying to cover over the equally intense idea of materialism, with its by-product, religious indifference. Blue says, "Behold the perilous road!" Few heed him so he warns, "You will die, stifled with comfortability and normality, choked by small joys and small sorrows." This interesting book contains an important message—it is a message for today!

Rules for Nominees

Last Thursday nominations were held for next year's class officers and student council representatives. As soon as the administration has completed its screening of those nominated, the official campaigning will begin.

On the basis of what happened last year, we have a few suggestions to offer regarding campaign strategy. The candidates and their campaign managers might do well to halt for a few minutes and think a little about these points.

First of all, do not open any wounds that will not heal. In the heat of the campaign, don't make any statements or pull any deals that will make it impossible for your opponents to work with you if you are elected. It is all very well to campaign vigorously, but a bitter campaign can result in factionalism that may ruin the victor's term of office.

Secondly, make it clear to your supporters that if you are defeated, you will help the winner in every possible way. Such an attitude on the part of the defeated candidates might help prevent a repetition of the cliquishness and division that have plagued the present Senior Class.

Lastly, do not make a number of campaign promises which you know cannot be fulfilled. Be realistic and honest with yourselves and your constituents. Promises of seeing to it that such and such a disciplinary rule will be repealed if you are elected are ridiculous. Such matters at Villanova are determined by the administration, not by the students.

If these few elementary rules are followed, the winner can expect the solid support of his former opponents, of his classmates, and of the administration. If they are not followed, bitterness against him may make his term in office at least unpleasant, at worst totally unsuccessful.

READ YOUR VILLANOVAN

Strictly Opinion

By Frank Hartmann

Have you been through the "malaria pit" (otherwise known as the Railroad underpass to the Post Office) lately? A 4 foot long centipede took off Bob McCaffery's arm the other day as he ran through to pick up his daily letter. The Pennsylvania Railroad is behind schedule; they haven't replaced the light bulb this year.

Is there a split in the History department? Its been heard around campus that one of Mr. Rofinot's colleagues has described him as "the poor man's Arnold Toynbee."

It's spring again, and the Navy has once again scheduled its Tuesday afternoon entertainment for the benefit of the boys in the windows of Good Counsel and Mendel Halls along with all the passersby. Hup, two, three, four.

The 'De Profundis' bell, rung nightly at 7 o'clock, is one of the oldest traditions on the Villanova Campus. It is of ancient monastic origin. Starting in 1944, the intention for its recitation by College students has been in memory of Villanova's Gold Stars of World War II and for all deceased Villanovans.

What has happened to the tea house Commandos? As soon as the search for the "General" was begun, there was a sudden decrease in Villanova activity at Rosemon't social center. Or perhaps its just that the boys are looking for new faces to take to the Junior Prom since Rosemont has such wonderful permissions.

Since we're hunting for the No. 1 Commando, we might as well look for another member of the elite on the Villanova campus—the faculty member who can drive through our campus fastest. Perhaps we could arrange a race from Spring Mill Road to the Fieldhouse through the campus. The Faculty member who wins could receive the trophy of "BOO-BOO OF THE YEAR."

Olympic swim tryouts have been scheduled for this weekend in the Rosemont pond. Get there early men. One of our juniors was seen getting in a little early practice in the pond last week.

It seems strange . . . the students are requested not to walk on the grass (and rightly so), but wasn't it a faculty member who had his big, yellow convertible on the grass behind Mendel last week? Oh well, maybe it's better there . . . it can usually be found right by the door.

For quite a few weeks now, the Field House has been echoing with the sounds of singing and dancing. Take heed, Turf and Tinsel has arrived. Be sure to see it.

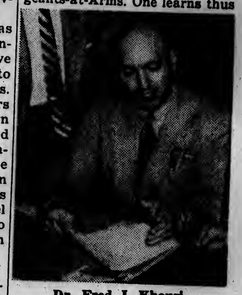
ICG Offers Students Legislative Experience

The Villanova Intercollegiate Conference on Government is now in its third year on campus. The group was formed by Thomas Knestout and Professor Fred J. Khouri of the Political Science Department under the guidance of the Southeastern Region and the insistance of Rosemont. Mr. Henry Rofinot, of the History Department, is moderator of the group on the Rosemont campus. Since that time the Villanovans have been quite active in the regional and state affairs of the group, despite the comparatively small number in the campus club.

Miss Genevieve Blatt, present Executive Director of the Pennsylvania ICG, and recently elected to the post of Secretary of Internal Affairs for the Commonwealth was one of the originators of the body. It had its beginnings in the Constitution Convention days in the Commonwealth. At that time, Miss Blatt, a student at the University of Pittsburgh, travelled to Harrisburg with a group of fellow government students to observe the Convention in operation. Feeling they had derived such interesting information from their trip, they planned a similar trip the following year to see the Legislature. From this rather inauspicious "field trip" beginning has grown an organization which includes most of the colleges and universities in the Commonwealth and several from bordering states.

Ever Increasing Number



The membership in the organization seems to constantly increase. Various influences cause the numbers attending Regional and State conventions to fluctuate from year to year, but the size of the local group seems to reflect a constant upsurge. This is commensurate with the growing interest among college students in the operations of government.

After the original group was organized and expanded, biennial trips were made to observe the State Legislature and to hold Model State Legislatures. In these conventions members drafted and presented their own bills and nominated and elected their own speaker and legislative officers. In years when the Legislature was not in session model assemblies of other kinds were begun. In 1954 a Model National Congress was held to give the delegates experience in the realm of national issues.

Local Group Growing

Despite conflicts and difficulties the Villanova ICG has been growing this year and chairman Don Seaton has bright hopes for next year. "We have a lot more recognition off campus than on," he says. "Often someone who drops in on a meeting or talks to one of the other members says 'this is really interesting; I didn't know we had such a group on campus.' Then we usually have a new member, because its hard to propose a legislative question on which everyone agrees." A chance to express this individual opinion on governmental questions is what the ICG affords its members.

Not only do members draft their own bills, learning how to compose and present them, but they are afforded a chance to take an individual part in the proceedings. At the Regional Convention held this year at Villanova, Tom Mentzer was chairman of the Local Government Committee and Phil Taddeo and Frank Stagnitto served as Sargeants-at-Arms. One learns thus how, not only to present his own ideas, but to guide those of others.

Villanova Honored

Villanova has been accorded great honor in the Region this year. It was chosen as the site of the annual convention over several other schools and received hearty congratulations for the arrangements. Father James A. Donnellon further honored the group by delivering the opening address to some 150 delegates from the colleges and universities in the area. At the conclusion of the State Convention in Harrisburg last weekend Don Seaton was elected Regional Director succeeding Joe Travaglini of Drexel. Ken Pyle and Tom

Two Campus Music Groups Feature of Sophomore Hop

With the signing of two bands last week, the University's Sophomore Class made it plain they mean to have a good time at their Soph-Frosh Spring Party in the Field House May 13.

Jack Decker, chairman of the dance, said the Villanovans and the Commodores will take turns making with the music at the first such event ever sponsored by the sophomore class.

It is probably the first time, too, that two bands have been contracted to provide music for an informal dance, which will be closed to sophomores, freshmen and their dates.

Decker also filled out the last opening on his committee with the appointment of Joe Keffer, a pre-med student, as refreshment chairman.

Supervising the ticket campaign in the Freshman Class will be Eugene Fogarty and Leo Rudegeair, Student Council representatives.

In setting up this phase of the ticket sale, sophomores wanted to let freshmen know they are definitely welcome to join in the activity.

Any sophomores who want to work on any of the committees should contact Decker (211 Alumni) or any of the committee chairman as soon as possible.

The dance chairman said a ticket price had not yet been established. Tickets will not go on sale until May 9.

Originally, the class had made plans to sign only one band but Decker said that the double-treat was formed after consultation with Rev. Dante Girolami, O. S. A., class moderator.

Life is an everlasting struggle to keep money coming in and teeth and hair from coming out!

At Thursday Convocation:

Father McGuire Outlines Progress of Expansion Drive

Villanova's Development Foundation expects to have solicited $400,000 toward the $21 million development program by Dec. 12—the first anniversary of the foundation.

Very Rev. Francis X. N. McGuire, O. S. A., former Villanova president and chairman of the Development Foundation, revealed this information to the final student assembly in the Field House Thursday.

At the present time, $240,000 has been collected, according to Father McGuire, and the Foundation hopes to reach a $300,000 total by the end of the fiscal year.

Father McGuire used these statistics to punctuate a description of the workings of the Development Foundation.

Red Ink Blues

He explained that because most colleges are operated in red ink, students could not expect to get such an education as they do at Villanova for the price they pay if educational institutions were not endowed by business corporations.

Current day students, said Father McGuire, may think the main thing in life is receiving.

But the first president of Villanova University said that the reason busy corporation executives around Philadelphia are willing to give up their leisure to raise funds for such colleges as Villanova is that they have learned the satisfaction of giving.

Before Father McGuire spoke, Rev. Joseph Kemme, O. S. A., university chaplain, congratulated the assembled students on making a good retreat.

He said that the spirit and cooperation of students offset the fact that the Field House was not an ideal environment for a retreat.

Junior Week VILLANOVAN Due Mother's Day

Juniors and their mothers will read the largest and most ambitious VILLANOVAN in history next Monday. The special Junior Week issue will feature a sixteen-page superior paper-stock using magazine format and will be distributed in the cafeteria at lunch, along with the LYNX.

One full page of the special issue will be devoted to each Junior Week activity. Thus special pages will be devoted to the T n' T performance, Mother's Day, Diaper Dan, the Band Concert and Talent Show, the Jazz Concert, Junior Queen, Blue and White Day, and the Junior Prom and Dinner Dance.

Junior Athletes Recognized

In addition there will be a Feature-editorial page, with columns by Juniors Dick Peer and Frank Hartmann, as well as several editorials. There will also be a page devoted to the accomplishments of Junior athletes.

In accordance with VILLANOVAN tradition, the special Junior Week issue will be produced by Junior members of the newspaper staff and by prominent members of the Junior class.

NEXT WEEK IS JUNIOR WEEK!

Nine Seniors Chosen Delta Epsilon Sigma

Richard Winfield

Names of nine seniors chosen for membership in Delta Epsilon Sigma, national honorary arts and sciences fraternity, have been released by Rev. Robert M. Sullivan, O. S. A., Dean of the School of Arts and Sciences.

They are: Joseph Blimm, Patrick Buttarazzi, Jasper Collura, Edwin Daly, Gaetano Gumina, John Lee, Mark McCormick, Thomas Mentzer and Richard Winfield.

Induction of members will take place May 16, according to Father Sullivan.

Required for nomination was a 3.0 cumulative average.

Book Review Competition

Sixteen seniors competed for the nine berths in the society. They submited reviews of a book selected by Father Sullivan. From these reviews the nine were chosen.

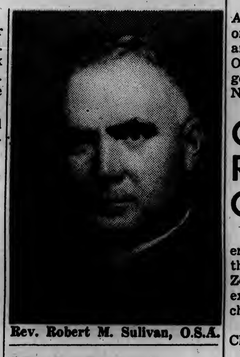
Below is a list of those named with their hometowns and majors:

Joseph Blimm—Plainfield, N. J., English

Patrick Buttarazzi—Rochester, N. Y., biology

Jasper Collura—Lansford, Pa., English

Edwin Daly—Bryn Mawr, Pa., history



Gaetano Gumina—Philadelphia, biology

John Lee—Philadelphia, history

Mark McCormick—Fort Dodge, Ia., philosophy

Thomas Mentzer—Philadelphia, history

Richard Winfield — Valley Stream, N. Y., English

An active nucleus of juniors, Frank Stagnitto, Guy Mines, Bruce Martin, Phil Taddeo, and Frank Psyk hold the future of the organization. It truly is a worthwhile activity for any student, offering him (or even her!) the valuable opportunities of participating in a group functioning with such Parliamentary Procedure as does the ICG.

VU Debaters Tie For Second in Franklin Tourney

Villanova's Beta Gamma Debating Society tied for second place Saturday in the Ben Franklin Invitational Debate Tournament at Immaculata.

The local debaters shared the runner up position with St. Peter's of Jersey City. Twelve teams from the Philadelphia area were invited.

Mark McCormick, Beta Gamma's number one debater, tied with men from St. Joseph's and St. Peter's for the outstanding speaker award.

McCormick, a senior regular midshipman from Ft. Dodge, Ia., and Bill Byrne made up the Villanova negative team, which went undefeated in its four debates. It was the only team to defeat St. Joseph's, the eventual winner of the tourney.

Villanova's affirmative team —called by Mr. Frank Hartman, Immaculata coach, "the best Villanova team I have ever heard"—was manned by Jim Welsh and Joe Morris.

Merit Awards Assembly Is Scheduled

Merit awards will be distributed at a Merit Award assembly May 16 in the Field House, Rev. George McLaughlin, O. S. A., Dean of Student Activities, has announced.

The senior who earned the highest number of merit awards during his four years will receive a gold medal at the assembly.

These awards are presented annually to students who are worthy of merit because of their consistent and effective cooperation in extracurricular activity and who enjoy good scholastic standing.

To have "good scholastic standing," students must rate relatively high academic, chapel and disciplinary records.

Nurses' 'Florence Nightingdale Day' On Campus May 12

Villanova's campus will look like the inside of a hospital May 12 — Florence Nightingale's birthday.

On that day, weather permitting, registered nurses will wear uniforms and caps from their respective hospitals, and sophomore basic nursing students will wear the Villanova uniform, which is blue and white pin striped.

To top off the celebration of the birthday of the famous nurse from the Crimean War, a social for all students in the Nursing Division has been scheduled for Austin Lounge.

During the social, nursing topics will be discussed, according to Joan McAllister, vice-president of Alpha Delta Chi, sponsor of the observance.

The vice-president added that a nursing display in the Library is also planned. Arlene Dahlbeck is preparing the display.

This is the first project of ADC, the graduate nursing sorority, which was organized around the first of April. Helen Ozorowski, sorority president, is general chairman of Florence Nightingale Day.

Claunch Is Recipient Of Ch. E. Award

A senior Villanova chemical engineer yesterday was awarded third place in the annual F. C. Zeisberg Memorial Award for excellence in report writing by chemical engineers.

The award was presented to Charles K. Claunch, Jr.

It was awarded by the Philadelphia-Wilmington Section of the American Institute of Chemical Engineers at a luncheon in Houston Hall, University of Pennsylvania, in connection with the all-day meeting on "Fluid Flow in Practice."

Chapter President

Claunch, president of the student chapter of the American Institute of Chemical Engineers, expects to graduate in June. He has accepted a Reilly Fellowship from Notre Dame for work towards a masters degree in chemical engineering.

Claunch, whose father holds a government post in the Virgin Islands, is a graduate of Woodrow Wilson High School in Washington, D. C., where he was born.

The Zeisberg Award is presented annually to students who submit the best written reports for their regular class and laboratory work in chemical engineering.

The award honors the memory of Fred C. Zeisberg, national president of the American Institute of Chemical Engineers and a prominent engineer of the du Pont Co.

When awards were presented, faculty advisers of the winners were introduced, including Professor Vincent Uhl, of Villanova.

ICG Chairman and Eight Members Attend Model State Legislature in Harrisburg

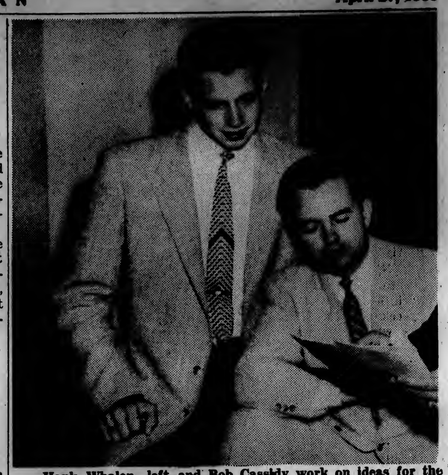
Chairman Don Seaton and eight members of the Villanova Intercollegiate Conference on Government attended the Model State Legislature in Harrisburg last weekend. Basil Sullivan, Guy Milne, Joe Torak, Phil Taddeo, Frank Kleponis, Don Eddington, and Frank Collins attended the three-day convention of the Pennsylvania ICG.

They reported the conference was "one of the most interesting and informative affairs of its kind that we've ever had the opportunity to attend." Sullivan successfully presented a bill requiring the registration of lobbies.

ICG chairman Don Seaton

Governor Leader Speaks

The convention was highlighted by the first night's activities. On Thursday night the delegates from most of the colleges and universities in the state and several from bordering states heard an address by Governor George Leader. The majority and minority leaders of the House and Senate presented a debate on their policies. After the debate the nominating speeches for the Speaker of the Model State Legislature were given.



At the convention's conclusion the Southeastern Region held its executive meeting at which Seaton, chairman of the Villanova delegation was nominated and elected Regional Director. He takes over from Joe Travaglini of Drexel. Ann Harris of Bryn Mawr was elected Assistant Regional Director, replacing Mary O'Hallaran of Rosemont. Seaton and Miss Harris will hold office until after the next annual convention in Harrisburg next Spring.

Honor Accorded

"The Region has accorded Villanova quite an honor by electing Seaton since this actually is only our second year of active participation in the ICG," history Professor Fred J. Khouri, moderator of the organization said.

More than four hundred students attended the three day convention, which was modeled closely on the operation of the State Legislature. Among the more interesting bills presented were ones favoring the increase in teacher salaries and one presented by Bryn Mawr on eugenic sterilization.

The Southeastern Region, one of the largest in the state, sent delegations from Drexel, Rosemont, Haverford, Immaculata, Temple, Swarthmore, West Chester, Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania and Villanova.

Civils Donate Related Books To Library

Following the example given by the Delta Pi Mu fraternity in the fall, the American Society of Civil Engineers has donated to the Villanova library four books on various aspects of Civil Engineering.

The organization set the precedent for what it intends to make an annual donation.

Heading the list of books is: "Mechanics of Engineering Soils," by Leonard P. Capper and W. Fisher Cassie. This book is an introductory text for the engineering of soil mechanics.

Hydro-Electric Power

"Hydro-Power Engineering," by James J. Dolan, is a text on practical engineering regarding the construction and operation of hydro-electric power plants.

"Construction Methods and Machinery," by F. H. Kellog, explains the fundmentals of construction engineering in practice.

The fourth—"Historical Appraisal of Mechanics," by Girbin, is an international text on the subject.

For Fall Show:

Dramatic Society Considers "Caine Court Martial"

Belle Masque, Villanova's dramatic society, may stage "Caine Mutiny Court Martial," the highly successful Broadway production, next fall, Belle Masque's moderator revealed last week.

After addressing members of Delta Pi Mu fraternity, Rev. William Krupa, O. S. A., was asked about the society's plans for next year.

He said that he thought the play would be released for amateur companies by next fall, when Belle Masque would want to do the show.

Broadway Success

"Caine Mutiny Court Martial," which is based on Herman Wouk's best selling novel, "The Caine Mutiny," enjoyed a lengthy run on Broadway. It has been done by road companies, too.

Father Krupa said some members of Belle Masque felt that the Villanova show could not be successful because of the success of the novel, movie and stage play.

However, Father indicated that a larger majority of members thought that the Belle Masque production would benefit from the previous success. They cited "Stalag 17," one of the Belle Masque's biggest hits, as an example of what can be profitted from staging a currently popular play.

Freshman Is Publicity Appointee

Rev. Louis A. Rongione, O. S. A., laison for the Catholic Standard and Times, appointed Clement F. Birch, a day-hop freshman arts student, as publicity editor of the VILLANOVAN.

This is the first appointment of its kind in the history of the newspaper. Birch selects stories from each issue of the VILLANOVAN and prepares them for the consideration of the Standard and Times.

One Man Department

Birch currently constitutes the entire publicity staff of the newspaper. However, an enlargement of the staff and scope of the department is expected.

Some of the departments aims are: to send the names of those on the Dean's list to their respective Diocesan Catholic newspapers, to send happenings of regional interest to the same newspapers, and to develop Villanova's name in the eyes of the readers of these papers.

No Rest . . .

What can these teachers be made of?

That's what a sophomore was muttering the other day. He reported that Mr. Joseph Gilligan, assistant professor of biology, spent six days in the hospital.

He was released at 1:30 p. m. and one hour later he was standing before his afternoon lab section.

Belle Masque's Fr. Krupa Speaks on Modern Drama

Delta Pi Mu fraternity members last week heard Eugene O'Neil credited with making American drama the best in the world.

Rev. William Krupa, O. S. A., Belle Masque moderator, said O'Neil was mainly responsible for lifting American drama to its present position.

He said O'Neil used realistic form, characters drawn from real life and symbolism in his works.

O'Neil's Purpose

In just about every popular drama, the playwright is attempting to solve the problem of man's place in the world, Father Krupa continued.

He showed this characteristic in tracing the development of American drama since 1930.

Describing "Detective Story," one of the best modern tragedies, the veteran of ten years as moderator of Belle Masque said he had once begun staging the play here.

Parents Protested

But he said protests from parents, despite approval by the administration, caused him to cancel his plans. He said the parents complained that abortion was too touchy a subject to be tackled by a college dramatic group.

In answering a question from the audience, Father Krupa hopped on the Marlon Brando bandwagon. The DPM member asked Father what he thought of Brando's performance in the Oscar-winning "On the Waterfront."

Praises Brando

Father said he thought Brando was "great" in the picture. He said the eccentric Omaha-born Oscar-winner had always been a steady performer, but he proved his real acting ability in "Waterfront."

With Vice-President Harry Nash presiding, members talked over mug and pin arrivals with Owen Hickey, and discussed election eligibility for freshmen in the upcoming fraternity elections.

Spanish Club's Cervantes Night Set Saturday; Consulate Guests

Ole! The Spanish Club holds its Cervantes Night celebration Saturday night, April 30, at the L. A. M. Club, a private club in Norristown.

Rev. Lorenzo Lozano, O. S. A., said that the entire Spanish Consulate staff and their wives would be guests at the annual cultural and social affair.

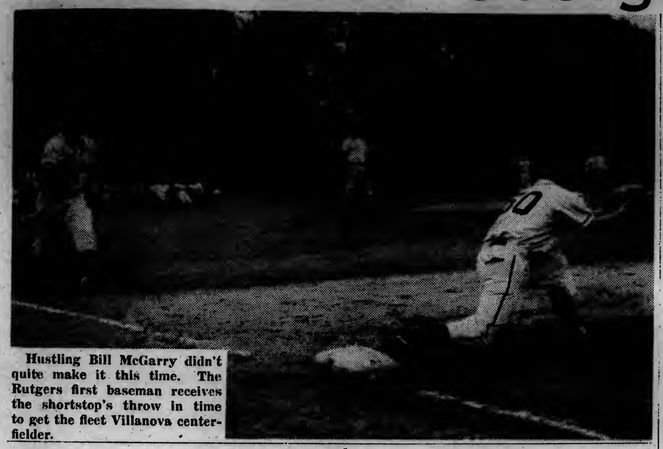
Spanish Musicale

Between the dining and the dancing, members of the club will sing Spanish songs. Accompanying them on the piano will be Louis Hadock.

A thirteen piece band of Villanova boys will provide dance music for the Villanova "Spaniards by inclination" and their dates. A vocalist will also be on hand.

Another high spot of the evening will be the announcement of the winner of the literary contest on Cervantes. The contest ended last Thursday.

Father Lozano received seven prose and four poetry works on Cervantes. These will be judged by the Rev. Robert M. Sullivan, Dean of the Arts School, and the Rev. John McShea of the English department.



Spanish Consul Guest Speaker

Don German de Caso, Spanish Consul, who will be guest speaker for the evening, will present the awards to the winners.

First prize will be a diploma and medal from the Spanish Institute of Columbia University. Second prize is Cervantes' greatest work, "Don Quixote."

Preparations for the entire evening's activities on Cervantes Night are in the hands of Carlos Conde, chairman of Cervantes Night.

Team Faces Georgetown Today

Hustling Bill McGarry didn't quite make it this time. The Rutgers first baseman receives the shortstop's throw in time to get the fleet Villanova centerfielder.

Mahan Nine Visits Capitol To Play Washington Foe

by Bob Strayton

Reaching the halfway point in their baseball schedule this season, Villanova's varsity will face a tough Georgetown opponent this afternoon in Washington, renewing a rivalry which has dated back to the early part of this century, but which was halted a few years ago.

The Wildcats, who recently came out of their hitting lethargy with a rousing three game winning streak over Loyola, Rutgers, and St. Peter's, are a safe bet to be victorious against the Hoyas.

Scott Goes the Route

In the St. Peter's contest, played at Villanova's stadium, Dick Scott completely baffled the visitors with a fine display of pitching ability. The lefty-chucker allowed but five spread out safeties in the lopsided 10-2 game.

A two-run surge in the bottom of the first inning gave Villanova the advantage right from the very start. Hits by Don and Ron LaMontagne started the Wildcats off in spectacular fashion. At the same time, Scotty entertained a large Father's Day crowd with his capable hurling. Not until the top of the ninth inning were the St. Peter's baseballers able to touch Scott for a run.

Six Runs in Two Frames

In the fourth and fifth innings, Villanova's latent hitting power showed itself again, as the booming bats of Muchetti, McGarry Peters, LaMontagne and John DiGiollorenzo accounted for six more markers.

Again in the eighth and ninth, the Wildcats contributed two more tallies to their ten-run uprising. Three of the five St. Peter's errors came in these frames to help Villanova's cause.

By the top of the ninth, the

visitors had a completely new ball team in the line-up, representing just nine of the nineteen substitutions made by St. Peter's coach.

It was this young blood that was able to nick the tiring Scott for two runs in an almost hopeless effort on their part. With such a huge deficit to make up, the St. Peter's team didn't stand a chance, and Villanova won.

Black Allows Only Two

Sophomore Dick Black completely handcuffed Rutgers in a game played at Villanova last Thursday. The rookie hurler gave up only two hits in seven innings as the Wildcats romped to a 12-0 victory over the South Jerseyites.

Helping Black in his cause, Villanova's other eight ball players added sixteen hits during the game, giving the rookie a wide margin for error. He didn't take take advantage of it.

Wildcats Get 8 in 2nd

After scoring one run in the initial frame of the contest, the Wildcats went hit-happy in the second. Bill McGarry, the centerfielder, and left-fielding Jack Peters had themselves a field day in that frame. The two graduating seniors hit a home run and a single, and two doubles, respectively, to add to the eight run splurge which Villanova enjoyed.

A lone tally in the fourth inning, and two more in the eighth ended the Wildcats scoring for the day, and it also ended Rutgers chances for victory.

Blue-White Day Festival To Feature Seven Sports

By Paul Clarkson

On Saturday, May 7, Villanova will become the center of sports activity in this area. This day is Blue-White Day, and this year seven different sports will comprise the best sports bargain in the country. One admission ticket for a dollar entitles a person to watch all the events. Tickets will be sold at the stadium gate on Saturday morning.

Blue-White day started two years ago with a football game between former Villanova players and the Varsity team. Since then the idea has been expanded to include an "Old-Timers"—Varsity basketball game, a track meet between Villanova and LaSalle, and a baseball game with Seton Hall. A soccer match featuring the celebrated Uhrik Truckers, recently returned from an extensive tour, a swimming show put on by the Villanova swimming team, and an "Old-Timer"-Varsity golf match will conclude the program.

Duffy Leads Golfers

Heading the "Old-Timers" golfing team will be Joseph Duffy, '37. His teammates will include William Kelly, Jr., '35, Don Weiland, '50, Abe Hobson, '40, Brad McManus, '40, Dr. Edward J. Burke, '23, Sol Berman, '32, and Tom Carbine, '39. The meet will be at Aronomink Golf Course at 9:30 a. m.

Basketball Stars Return

The events at the Field House will begin at 11 a. m., when the basketball game gets underway on the outdoor courts. Comprising the "Old-Timer" Squad will be Paul Arizin, '50, Bob Schafer, '55, Sam Glassmire, '53, Sky Raiken, '50, Brooks Ricca, '50, Joe Walters, '45, and Joe Hannon, '50. Their coaches will be Johnny Blong, present coach of St. Joseph's Prep and Frosh Coach "Maje" McDonnell.

Twelve noon will see the start of the soccer match between the Uhriks and the Philadelphia All-Stars. This will be followed by a baseball game at 12:30; then the track meet will begin with field events at 1 and running events at 1:30. At approximately 3:00 o'clock, the football game will begin.

Queen To Flip Coin

Before the game, the Junior Prom Queen will make the flip of the coin. Among those playing for the "Old-Timers" will be such past luminaries as Mickey Frinzi, '51, Bob Haner, '53, Dick Bedesem, '53, Joe DeRose, '53, Ed Michaels Sr., '36, Ralph Pasquariello, '50, Joe Rilo, '52, Dan Simeone, '52, Joe Viverito, '55, and Tom Fitzpatrick, '54.

Game officials will be Jim Henry, present LaSalle College Athletic Director, who officiated at the Sugar Bowl last Jan. 1, Bill Christopher and Ed Romanowski, both local high school officials, and Bill Grimberg, a National Football League official. At deadline time, the "Old-Timer's" coach had not yet been chosen.

In attendance will be 120 local high school coaches, as guests of the Athletic Department. This is done to acquaint the area coaches with Villanova and its facilities, both intellectual and athletic.

To close the gala Sports Carnival there will be a banquet at 6:15 in the Field House for the "Old-Timers" and coaches of both squads. During the evening, the outstanding "Old-Timers" of basketball will be chosen by their coaches and presented with certificates of appreciation. The banquet will be followed by a coaching clinic conducted under head coach Frank Reagan and his aides, for the benefit of the visiting coaches.

Villanova University's track team won two first places in the inaugural Queens-Iona Relays at New York last Saturday. In this warmup for the 61st running of the Penn Relays, the Wildcats won the sprint medley relay and the pole vault.

In the sprint relay a great anchor leg run by Charley Jenkins who took the baton in second place and finished winning by ten yards was responsible for the victory. Proceeded by Al Ligorelli, Gene Maliff, and Jim Moran, Jenkins ran the last half mile leg in 1:54.6. The team time was 3:29.2 as the Mainliners beat St. Johns, Morgan State, N. Y. U., and Fordham to the tape in that order.

Clears 14 Feet

The other winner in a varsity event was Villanova's outstanding sophomore pole vaulter Don Bragg. His jump of 14 feet was easily enough to outdistance his opponents.

In the special relays the Wildcats Freshman relay team of George Sydnor, Jim Cochrane, Ray Simpson, and Ron Delaney won the freshmen mile relay in 3:30.7.

Fahey Takes Second

Villanova also placed in four other events, three of them team events and one individual. Oddly enough the Mainliners placed third in all three relays. In two of them, the distance medley relay and the four mile relay, they came in behind Manhatten and N. Y. U. and in the one mile relay they crossed the the line after Morgan State and Syracuse. Jim Fahey threw the shot 49'6.5" to gain second in that event.

Ready for Penn Relays

This Saturday Villanova will compete in the annual Penn Relays where more than 3100 athletes will try to win honors. The Wildcats will have very tough competition. Competing in the mile relay, which is one of the outstanding events, they will have to oppose the likes of Morgan State, Manhatten, Pittsburgh, and Cornell. However, they also stand a good chance in the two mile relay and in the pole vault.

The relays take on added luster this year because it is the year preceeding the Olympic Games.

Golfers Defeat St. Peter's 6-3, Seton Hall 8-1

The Villanova golf team continued on its winning way by sweeping two matches over the weekend. On Friday they defeated St. Peter's 6-3 at Aronimink Country Club. The next day the linksmen had no trouble at all in crushing Seton Hall 8-1 at the Mainline Golf Course.

The team's record now stands at four wins and a solitary loss to St. Joseph's.

Veterans Lead Team

Against St. Peter's, it was the veterans that carried the squad to victory. Captain Charley Stone, Fred Anton, and the McElhaney brothers, Bob and Jim, all looked impressive in winning their matches. Stone posted birdies on holes 12, 13, and 14 to pull away from his opponent.

Soph Ben Klemanowicz, who is regarded as a star of the future, had the misfortune of playing against one of the hottest college players in the area. St. Peter's no. 1 man, turned in a one-over-par performance to whip Benny.

Kelly Posts 74

At the Mainline course Jack Kelly led the Wildcats to their second victory in two days, winning his match easily with a three-over 74. It was Jack's best round of the season.

Two important contest were scheduled for the Villanova golfers this week. Yesterday LaSalle was the opponent and today the linksmen battle Penn in the most difficult match thus far this season.

Letters Presented

The following swimming team members were awarded letters for the 1955 season:

George Allen, Lee Carson, Don Couig, Paul Donahue, Jim Donnelly, Bob Duffy, Dick Harris, Captain Pat Keen, Don Nalty, Denny Rinkacs, Tony Tomasulo, and Wally Ulrich.

Seen receiving swimming awards are Paul Donahue, Don Coulg, and Captain Pat Kean, with coaches Ed Geisz, extreme left, and Dave Rowan, extreme right. Donahue was feted as the most improved swimmer, and Coulg and Kean as the most outstanding and the most loyal swimmers respectively.

By Bill Brown

To say about someone that "he's out in left-field" is, to say the least, derogatory. To say it about Jack Peters is, to say the least, true. Given a chance, Jack would probably blanket the rest of the outfield with the alacrity and adeptness with which he plays his regular spot.

A senior Pre-Med student, Jack has been one of the picket men for Coach Mahan's forces since his freshman year.

Country Boy

The little hamlet of Nicktown, Pa., nestled in the state's western hills, is the home of Peters. Jack tells us that it's a tiny farming community of about 250 people. Nicktown is too small to support a high school, so, Jack went to nearby Spangler High.

Jack Peters

Peters: Versatile Athlete

Baseball, football, basketball, and a little track held Jack's interest during the 4 years prior to his Villanova tenure. To supplement a meager high school schedule, Jack also played ball in a Junior American Legion league. In 1950, he was picked to play in the state's East-West All-Star Legion game. In the game, played at Pittsburgh's Forbes Field, Jack was spotted by Jocko Collins, a Phillies scout. Collins recommended Peters to Art Mahan. Despite the request of several other scouts, including one from the Dodgers, Jack chose Villanova. Needless to say, it has been a profitable association on both sides.

Georgetown Bound

Following graduation, Jack will proceed to medical school at Georgetown University. The United States Army will then be the subscriber to Peters' medical knowledge. Jack says he will complete his internship with the Army.

Since Jack has six years of of medical school and the service to complete, marriage must take a back seat in his plans. As of now, Jack has no particular plans for specialization, and will probably start a general practice.

Peters, a lean, serious man of 22 summers, is a member of L. K. D., the Pre-Med fraternity. Jack spends a little time in the intramural program.

Brother In Seminary

Peter's family consists of his parents and a brother. Jack's brother, two years his senior, is in St. Vincent's, a diocesan seminary.

I left Jack buried in a physiology textbook.

Varsity Baseball

Villanova on the way to its three game winning streak. Steve Nagy, a junior, made his starting debute in fine form as he allowed but seven scattered hits in the 6-3 Villanova victory.

Tied in Eighth

The game was all tied up at 3-3 going into the bottom of the seventh, but when DiGiollorenzo double and Don LaMontagne walked, Villanova's chance to win presented itself. Jack Helm was the first to seize the opportunity, and slammed a 400 foot triple to score both base-runners. A sharp single by Bill McGarry ended the rally, and the game, as far as the Wildcats were concerned.

Intramural Swim Champions to Be Determined Today

Swimming captures the spotlight with the intramural championship meet this afternoon. Starting time is listed for 4:30 p. m. Intramural chess is resumed with the tournament in the Sullivan Hall recreation room.

Intramural volleyball made its first appearance of the season last Monday on Mendel Field. A record number of entries have been submitted, and keen competition is expected.

Rainouts

The annual spring monsoons caused a cancellation of all softball games following the Easter vacation. These games will be re-scheduled later.

The intramural department will contribute its part to Blue-White Day. Villanova's tennis-playing faculty will compete against the campus racketeers. Sullivan Hall's Water Rats, water basketball champions, will meet the varsity swimming team at 5 p. m.

The Intramural Department has completed a new function, the Senior Life Saving course. The course was conducted by four members of the class of '56, Bill Meyer, Dick Moore, Roy Zimmerman, and Bill Smith, all qualified Red Cross instructors.

Large Turnout

The large initial turnout was narrowed to forty-five successful participants. Because of the large number, the course was conducted in two groups, giving each student a better opportunity for water work. Meyer and Moore directed a Tuesday and Thursday evening class, while Zimmerman and Smith ran the Monday and Wednesday group.

General response to the function was very favorable, and Ed Geisz hopes it will become a regular part of the Intramural program.

Meyer announced that the Red Cross would try to issue certificates in time for the University's award day, May 16.

A Trip to the Stadium

By Joe Heaps

To any sports-minded person, an interesting afternoon can be enjoyed by visiting the Villanova stadium and immediate surroundings. Truly a panorama of sports activities is presented every day when the weather permits. With a minimum of physical effort himself, the viewer can observe football, baseball, track, and occasionally even basketball and golf.

Baseball Activity

On the ball diamond Coach Art Mahan may have his players in an intra-squad game with the freshmen, or having a batting practice session, or conducting an infield drill. Any of the pitchers may be seen warming up under the stadium, trying to find the corners of the new-fangled strike zone apparatus. Jack in an intrasquad game with the freshmen, or having a batting eyes for future games by feasting on the batting practice pitchers.

Football Practice

Meanwhile, a short distance away, sweat is running off many brows as Coach Frank Reagan and his associates are making the best use of the twenty days allowed them for spring training to get the football players re-acquainted with the fundamentals and intricacies of the popular fall sports. The Southern drawl of line coach Otis Douglas can be heard above the yells and groans, admonishing the forwards to move the lead. Passers John Ferroulo, Art Rohach, John Lammers, and Bill McGhee are seen loosening up their throwing arms in anticipation of an aerial offense next year.

In the stadium itself, the trackmen are busy and can be observed in various stages of training. Some of the runners may be doing calesthenics, others wind sprints, still others in-and-out quarter. Perhaps phenomenal Don Bragg will be assaulting the 14-plus foot mark in the pole vault. Coach Jumbo Elliott may be seen talking over future stategy with captain Jim Moran. Maybe assistant coach Hal Langton is working with shot put man Red Fahey, giving him a tip on how to get another couple of feet out of the iron ball.

Basketball, Too

Occasionally, several of the varsity basketball players take advantage of the outdoor courts to get some out-of-season shooting practice. A preview of some of next year's possible starters can be had, as Larry Tierney, Marty Milligan, and John Cirino are frequent visitors to the asphalt courts.

A glance towards Sullivan Hall may reveal members of the golf team diligently working to iron out flaws in their golf swings.

If you are interested in sports, and have a few spare moments in the afternoon, a walk to the stadium is an easy way to get the behind-the-scene story on athletics at Villanova and to become acquainted with the players who represent your school on Saturdays in inter-collegiate competition.

Turf n' Tinsel: Collegians in Chorus

Dressing as girls can be fun, according to these lads who expose their knees to delight audiences annually

by Joe Blimm
T n' T President

Since the inception of the newly organized Turf and Tinsel Club in 1947, T 'n T has each spring presented an original musical comedy. The name Turf and Tinsel dates to the origin of the club back in 1933 when only athletes performed in the musical show. For the past few years the productions have been very successful and this year's offering promises to be no exception.

The story for "Jessica James" was begun about four years ago. George Pequinot took the idea and developed it into a fine comedy. Since 1947 Bob Whalen, Villanova's Athletic Business Manager, has had a great share of the work connected with the show. Each year he writes the music and lyrics, besides providing the accompaniment at every rehearsal. His talents are such that many people have tried to get him to publish his songs, but so far he has refused.

Noake the Choregrapher

The choregraphy, always a stand-out, has been done by the popular George Noake since T n' T's revival. The dancers in the show always spend many long hours rehearsing their numbers with tireless George. Jack Kelly, a Villanova graduate, has been the director for three years.

Mattingly is Jessica

Jack was in the Turf and Tinsel shows while at Villanova and is still remembered for many of his portrayals. While in the service Jack was connected with some theatrical groups.

Joe Blimm

The plot of "Jessica James" centers around Jessica's efforts to recover the money which her father, Jesse, robbed from the train. Don Mattingly, a newcomer to Villanova's stage, is playing the title role, while John Giordano plays Jesse James, Jessica's deceased Pa. Frank Hartmann, Walt Doyle and Frank Killmond all figure in the cast with the latter two playing Jessica's Ma and Granny. Hartmann is Jessica's sweetheart and Jessica's nemesis is played by Jim Borden and is a hillbilly lover named Zeke.

Business Managers Reich, Cooke

Gene Donohue, Bob Schiller, and Jack Padova have minor roles. Of course, there's Pa's angel friend, Paul Porreca, and an angel choir.

The financial end of this year's show is in the experienced hands of Bill Reich and Dick Cooke. Both men have done endless amounts of work.

One of the aims of the Turf and Tinsel Club is to set up a scholarship fund for a boy with musical ability. In doing so, two purposes will be accomplished. One is to give to someone a college education who might not be able to get one because of financial difficulties. The other purpose is to seek potenial alumni who will bring credit and honor to Villanova.

Turf and Tinsel has an active Alumni Club which is being built from T n' T and Villanova graduates of the past few years.

Now's the time for important Election Meetings—Attend!

MARKETING CLUB—

About 60 members, including club president Tom Keller, took part in the annual outing of the Marketing Club yesterday afternoon.

The members first attended a noon luncheon at the Broadwood Hotel. After a series of speeches they broke up into groups of ten and went on a two hour tour to one of six different advertising and market research agencies in the center-city area of Philadelphia.

Advertising and Marketing Speakers

Main speakers at the luncheon were Mr. George Peons, sales manager of WCAU-TV, who spoke on radio and TV. advertising, and Mr. Edward Aronow, student representative from the American Marketing Association, who spoke on the activities of the Association in relation to student organizations.

Mr. Aranow is also chairman of the Association.

STUDENT COUNCIL—

Candidates from the three classes nominated for the position of Student Council Representative last Thursday attended the regular bi-weekly business meeting of the Council this past Monday.

They heard an address by the Very Rev. James A. Donnellon, University President, on student-faculty relations.

Social Etiquette Demonstrated

Following this, they witnessed a demonstration on Social Etiquette by Doctor Powell's class in Social Techniques.

After the meeting, the many nominees were indoctrinat . in the nature of the job ahead. Chairman Dick Winfield, Vice-Chairman Dick Peer and Secretary Don McGahan stressed the importance of the Student Council to the nominees, the class, and the University.

LIBRARY—

The Rev. Daniel P. Falvey, O.S.A., University Librarian, announced that although the library was opened for use on Sundays chiefly at the request of the student body, the number of students using the library for reading, studying or borrowing books on Sundays is extremely small.

It is too early to say anything about whether the library will be open on Sundays next year according to Father Falvey.

BETA GAMMA—

On Monday, April 18, four members of Beta Gamma, Joe Roddy, Jim Wrzesinski, Mark McCormick, and Jim Grady, gave a debate before the Llanerch Women's Club. The topic of the debate was—Resolved: "The United States should pass a law requiring the states to lower the minimum voting age to eighteen." Wresinski and Roddy took the affirmative while McCormick and Grady defended the negative.

Beta Gamma was also represented in the Benjamin Franklin Tournament held at Immaculata on Saturday.

STATE DEPT. —

Next Monday is the deadline for filing applications for the Department of State Foreign Service Officers examination.

Applications of seniors interested in taking the June 24 examination must be received by the State Department by Monday.

The examination will be given in centers throughout the country.

Information pamphlets, sample questions from the examination and application forms are available in the Placement Office.

PHYSICS CLUB—

Tomorrow morning at 10:30, the first meeting of the Physics Club in the physics lab since the closing of Lent will mark the resumption of social activities of the group.

Club president, Dave Vachon, noting that a great many important issues are on the docket, stressed the necessity of the presence of each member.

For those attending, Vachon promised a highly informative speaker.

PHILOSOPHY—

Villanova's newly - organized Philosophy Club will elect officers for next year today at 2:30 in 204 Mendel.

President Frank Trainor emhasized that the meeting is important and all members should attend.

DINNER DANCE—

Edwin K. Daly, Editor-in-chief, disclosed that the Villanovan dinner-dance will be held in the North Garden of the Bellevue Stratford hotel on Wednesday, May 18, from 7:30 to 12:00 p.m.

Harry Nash, who arranged the successful affair last year, is handling the step-up again. Reservations may be made in his room, 242 Good Counsel.

Through the Wm. Honey agency, Nash has arranged to have a ten-piece band, the Rhythymaires, play 9:00 to 12:00. This is the same band that played for the senior dinner-dance this year. A pianist will entertain from 7:30 to 9:00.

BAND—

Jack Gilfillan, junior mechanical engineer, has been elected president of the university band for next year.

Elected at the same time was Pat Briody, sophomore arts student from Jamaica, L.I., secretary-treasurer. Joe Valenti, C & F junior from New Brunswick, N. J., was re-elected Student Council representative.

Gilfillan, a resident of Wilmington, Del., is business manager of the Villanovans dance band. He succeeds Frank Licopoli.

A Junior Week Album

Mother's Day: A Look at Fundamentals

This is the beginning of Junior Week, a period of time in which we all have the common knowledge (perhaps a bit less disconcerting in light of its communal result) that both the rich AND the poor are getting poorer.

Surely, it is a week of dancing, singing, joviality and merriment—a week involving little sleep, an ever-diminishing bankroll and the inevitable and not-always-unpleasant chore of downing malts and hops of varying proof and grain.

To consider only this facet of the week—indeed, to prepare merely for this side of the eight days—would constitute, however, an outlook as narrow as a Class of '56 billfold. Certainly deeper, beyond the gloss and excitement, we must mull over the past and present in relation to three major elements—our friends, our girls and our Mothers.

Let us look over the third consideration in view of the past.

We may be preoccupied today with thoughts of post-prom parties, we may be worried about wheeding a tux from roommate, but we must remember that today warrants our very best in relation to Mom, for, to her, just as should with ourselves, today is one very big occasion.

It's more than just speeches and baby pictures and entertainment; to that little lady on our arm Villanova is, for one day at least, a proving ground. Today is, so to speak, a day of inspective satisfaction for Mother, a day in which she tries very hard to see in us the qualities she attempted for two trying decades to instill.

The trouble is that sometimes we make her look just a bit too hard.

After all, she's wondering if our friends are the kind she'd like us to have, whether our interests are those promoted in earlier days at home; surely we're not fooling her. A hastily-applied veneer for the day isn't going to impress this little lady—she's seen us at home.

Of course, on the other hand, maybe we have followed the principles that Mother set out for us, and she won't have to look too hard at us to be proud. She'll come to think that all her perseverance wasn't in vain; she'll know that it was all worth while after all. And don't think for a moment that she doubted it.

Yes, for Mothers of the men of the Class of '56, today is an important one. For many, this might be the first look at Villanova, and the impressions formed today will probably have long-lasting effects. Material impressions—the beauty of the campus, the structure of the buildings—are not the only ones gained. Such an apparently unimportant incident as our conversation with one of the priests in her presence will have its effect; the respect and friendliness we show our classmates is not going unnoticed, nor is the manner in which we talk about the institution, the pride we show in it and its personal relationship with ourselves.

A lot of good can be done on Mother's Day here at Villanova. If nothing else, today might make some of us come to realize how much we do appreciate our Mothers, how proud we are to have them with us where we have centered our lives for four years.

Granted, Mom isn't with us today on any S. A. P. A. outings, and she's not listening to us in any bull sessions, and that's exactly the point: he's going to want to think that today she's looking at the result of many years of worry and good example, and she wants very much to find the looking gratifying.

Let us hope she will.

THE COVER

It seems to us that the affectionate youngsters, Jack Van Allen and his first love, on the cover of this, the fourth Junior Week Villanovan, have captured the feeling of that springtime madness called Junior Week.

IN APPRECIATION

Editor-in-chief Edwin Daly would like to express his thanks to all members of the staff, especially Juniors, who consistent work made this largest issue in history possible. Appreciation is due particularly to Dave Dalva, Ron Rabenda and Joe Ezerski of the photography staff.

Strictly Opinion

By Frank Hartmann

THE Junior Class—we've heard its claims to the title of the best class at Villanova, but what do the men of '56 have to back them up? Let's look and see.

In 1952, they entered Villanova as spirited Freshmen, supported Villanova events well, and made a strong showing in such extra-curricular activities as Turf and Tinsel, The Villanovan, WVIL, The International Relation Society, and Belle Masque. The year ended in a flourish with enthusiastic participation in the class elections.

The Soph Cotillion started the sophomore year with a bang. All previous attendance records were broken, thus setting a standard for the class of breaking records. As Sophomores they became more influential in campus affairs, moving into positions of authority in the various organizations. All signs were pointing to future successes for '56.

In May, the class elections were held, and the voters made a tremendous turnout of some 80%. Then the class, under newly-elected President Harry Nash, really began to roll. The Steering Committee was selected as were the chairmen for the upcoming Junior events. The class showed that it was not afraid to take steps into unexplored territory by innovating year-long committees rather than a new committee for each event. The decorations committee, the planning committee, the miscellaneous and publicity committees all fall into this category.

The Class Blazers, the first to have the new seal, were contracted for by Rogers Peet Company of New York. A Class had never ordered its blazers that early before, but '56 bought twice as many blazers as any previous class. Since the blazers were to be delivered in September, it was decided to pull the Blazer Ball from Junior Week and have it soon after the Blazer arrival.

Dieges and Clust was given the Class Ring contract. The rings were to be the first with the new University seal and delivery was to be made before Christmas. Already the Class had made two major changes in the planning for Junior year.

The Blazers came promptly in September and the Ball was held on October 8. Although the dance was closed to Juniors, there were more couples attending than at any other Blazer Ball in history, nearly 300.

The time came for the class to have the annual outing with the orphans from St. John's. More money than ever before, $1100, was gained by contributions and earned by the Charity Ball. Both the Ball and the actual day of the outing were tremendous successes.

The Class rings were delivered on time and proved more than satisfactory to everyone.

Second semester then came and with it were started advanced plans for Junior Week. As the Spring moved along, so did the plans for the biggest week of all. Now it is here, and promises to overshadow all that the Class has done before.

Also during the second semester, Juniors from the C&F School took pioneering steps in that school. They decided to put out a magazine from the business school of Villanova. It will be out soon, and is called the "Business Whirl."

Looking all these things over, I think we might say that the Class of '56 has a valid claim. If so, three cheers for the past; now on to bigger and better things!

On Lifetime Sweethearts

Villanova's Juniors Welcome A Record Number of Moms

by DON ALTON

IT has been said that every queen has her day, and the Junior Class of Villanova starts off the traditional Junior Week festivities with Mother's Day, a day honoring our lifetime swweethearts . . . Mother.

From a number of states and by various means our sweethearts arrive, a bit reluctant to admit that their "baby" has grown too big to enjoy the time-honored position on her knee. He has been noticeably missing from the family circle for the past three years, but our best girls would have it no other way. The loyalty and love of every mother is felt at Villanova today as we pause in the scholastic and social whirl to show our gratitude, in a small way, for a difficult and oft-times- trying job . . . the raising of a true Christian gentleman.
family circle for three year, but our best girls would have it no other way. The loyalty and love of every mother is felt at Villanova today as we pause in the scholastic and social whirl to show our gratitude, in a small way, for a difficult and oft-times-trying job . . . the raising of a true Christian gentleman.

Appropriate Curtain-raiser

This is the opening of the major social function of the class of 1956 . . . Junior Week. The Holy Sacrifice of the Mass officially opens Mother's Day at 11. The Reverend Thomas A. Calpin, O. S. A., class moderator, will be the celebrant. The Mass will be held at Our Mother of Good Counsel Shrine, and the President of Villanova University, the Very Reverend James A. Donnellon, O. S. A., will give the sermon.

The Villanova Singers, under the direction of Harold G. Reuschlein, Dean of the Law School, will sing the Mass.

Following the Mass, the planting of the class tree will take place. Chairman of the Mother's Day Committee, Frank Hartmann, will be assisted by the Junior Class officers and their mothers. A photographer will be on hand from noon until 5 p. m. to take pictures of all those Juniors who wish to have a picture memento of the day.

Following a luncheon in the University cafeteria, the mothers will change to their low heels, and enjoy an afternoon of entertainment. There will be a band concert, a skit by Belle Masque, a short concert by the Villanova Singers, and an afternoon baseball featuring Villanova vs. LaSalle.

At 4 p. m. in the University Library will be held the function which is the traditional favorite of the Mothers. The Diaper Dan Contest winners will be exhibited along with their compatriots. This will give the Mothers a chance to exchange notes and their favorite story of the "baby."

Spoons For Mommy

Our Mother of Good Counsel Shrine will be the scene of Benediction at 5 p. m. Father Calpin will preside, and the Villanova Singers will sing Benediction.

Concluding Mother's Day, 1955, will be the fifth annual Banquet in the Field House at 6 p. m. The Reverend Thomas A. Burke, the University Registrar, will say the Invocation.

The Juniors will present the Mothers with silver spoons engraved with "Mother's Day." This is the personal contribution of the individual Junior to a successful Mother's Day, and a lasting remembrance of the occasion.

The principal speaker at the banquet will be the Father Calpin, class moderator. Other speakers will be Frank Hartmann, pre-law student from Glenside, Pa., Chairman of Mother's Day, and Harry C. Nash III, an English major from Portsmouth, Va., president of the Class of '56.

The final act of Mother's Day will be Benediction by Reverend George McLaughlin, O. S. A., Dean of Student Activities.

The lights will dim in the Field House tonight, but the happiness of the day will remain with mother and son.

A Gracious History

Junior Week's Most Rewarding Event Was Not Lightly Born

by BOB FARLEY

MOTHER'S day at Villanova, the traditional initial celebration of Junior Week, has developed through the years from a few hours visit to a full day's activity. On an April afternoon twenty-one years ago, a reception was held in Mendel Hall for the visiting mothers. This was followed by a tour and various experiments in the laboratories, a swimming show in the Field House, and a tea, closing out the day.

In 1935, a luncheon was added to the schedule, and the following year a flag-raising ceremony was held to open the day, and a movie, "Life at Villanova," was an extra treat.

By 1939, the day's activities included lunch, musicals, science and engineering experiments, and Benediction. The next year saw the second unveiling of the "misplaced" portrait of Father Fedigan, which now hangs in the library, plus entertainment by Belle Masque and the Spanish Club.

During the war years, 1942-46, Junior Week activities were suspended. But in 1947, the day to honor Mother resumed with Mass in the College Chapel with corsages being distributed beforehand. The class tree was planted, followed by lunch, an afternoon musicale, and Benediction. This has become the basic schedule of events to the present day.

In 1951, the Juniors introduced the idea of the "Diaper Dan" contest, and they closed the day with a catered banquet in the Field House.

Last year a new feature, the presentation of small, engraved silver spoons, was made for Mother's delight, and today is expected to be the biggest and best Mother's Day in Junior Week history.

Mother's Day Activities Schedule

11:15—High Mass at Shrine of Mother of Good Counsel; Rev. Thomas A. Calpin, O.S.A., class moderator, will be the celebrant. Sermon will be delivered by Very Rev. James A. Donnellon, O.S.A., University President.

Following Mass—Annual planting of the class tree in front of the chapel.

12:30—Luncheon in Mendel students' cafeteria and monastery dining hall, to be served in three shifts.

2:30—Entertainment in Field House: Concert Band, Villanova Singers, Mainliners' Quintet, Turf and Tinsel skit. Also at 2:30 is the Villanova-LaSalle baseball game on the diamond behind Goodreau Stadium.

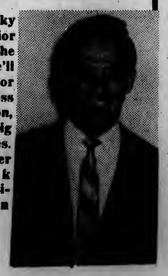
4:00—Diaper Dan Contest in Austin Lounge. Pictures of Juniors as kids will actually be on display throughout the day for those interested in looking them over before the announcement of the winner.

5:00—Benediction at the Shrine of Mother of Good Counsel; celebrant will be Father Calpin.

6:15—Catered banquet in University Field House, day-closing ceremonies.

Reminders—Places for Mother to powder nose are four — in the Navy Building, in the Library, in Mendel Hall, and in Austin Lounge.

Juniors are asked to park their cars in the spaces behind and to the side of the Field House, or in any spaces available in the regular lots during the afternoon.



Photographs of Mother and Junior may be taken outside the University chapel for the next several hours. Glossy prints are two bills apiece.

A Junior is Proud Today

As indeed he should be, for today a new Junior Queen ("I couldn't make her believe me") is crowned

Midas Touch

Here's the lucky young man, Junior Al Ligorelli, of the C & F school; he'll escort the Junior Queen winner, Miss Joann Harrington, through the big week's festivities. Al's a top member of VU's track team. He's a resident, lives in Alumni Hall.

A young lady who has never before won more than a turkey, and that in third grade, is the new Queen of Junior Week. She's the lovely Miss Joann M. Harrington, a sophomore at Chestnut Hill College.

Joann, who has brown eyes and hair, a winsome smile and a well-distributed 116 lbs., was the unanimous choice of television personality Steve Allen and his "Tonight" cast which includes Skitch Henderson, Gene Rayburn, Steve Lawrence and Eyde Gorme. As a guest of the Class of 1956 Joann will be accompanied to all Junior Week functions by Al Ligorelli. Al is an accounting major and is a letter winner in track, having starred in several championship relay teams.

The new Queen won in competition with over sixty young ladies. The number of entrants is approximately the same as in last year's contest when Miss "Mickey" Connell, now Mrs. Hank Smith, was the winner. As a personal note, Mickey is expecting and it is hoped that the new baby will make its appearance on the anniversary of her mother's coronation.

This also marks the fourth straight year that a C&F'er's date has won the Queen competition.

This was Joann's first attempt in a beauty contest, and it was a highly successful one indeed. In addition to tickets for all the Week's functions, including the Prom and the Dinner Dance, flowers and a crown from bandleader Buddy Williams symbolic of her position, the Queen will receive free passes to all of the Week's events. She will reign over all events of the Prom weekend, including Blue and White Day and the closed Dinner Dance.

Joann graduated from St. John the Baptist High School, not far from her home in Roxborough, and is presently a sophomore majoring in sociology at Chestnut Hill. After college she hopes to enter the field of public relations.

Her hobbies include dancing, tennis, clothes designing, and playing the piano. In addition she is an active member of the French Club and the Student Teachers Club.

And these are the young ladies who will escort Junior Week's Queen through a maze of festivities

THE Queen's Lady-in-Waiting will be Miss Carole Elliot, who is the date of another Commerce and finance student, Villanovan columnist Dick Peer. Carole, black haired and brown eyed, is employed as a private secretary. She is a graduate of Mary Lewis Academy and of Katherine Gibbs Secretarial School.

Carole is from Jackson Heights, New York, but met Dick while vacationing on the New Jersey shore. She has attended many Villanova functions with Dick.

The four chosen for the Queen's court are Miss Judy Wagner, date of Tom McInerney; Miss Lucille Bell, the first co-ed ever to be named to the Royal Family and the date of Tom Meaney; Miss Edith Hartung, who is attending Junior Week affairs with Stan Morehouse; and Miss Gail Lulewitch, who will be with Larry Fitzpatrick.

Judy Wagner is a student at Beaver College, where she majors fashion design. She is 5'6", weighs 115 lbs., and has an attractive combination of brown eyes and auburn hair. Her home is at Port Jefferson, Long Island.

The first co-ed to win a place in the Court is Lucille Bell, freshman nursing student. Lucy is 18 years of age, weighs 115 lbs. and is 5' 2". She has performed with Belle Masque's Romancers group. Her home is Newark, N. J., where she attended Mother of Good Counsel High.

Edith Hartung is a Barbizon model with blue eyes and blonde hair. She is a stately 5'8" and weighs 120 lbs. Her date, Stan Morehouse, is the son of the Engineering School's dean, J. Stanley Morehouse, Sr.

Gail Lulewitch is a secretary in Philadelphia. She has light brown hair and brown eyes, is 5'6" tall and weighs 125 lbs.

In a letter accompanying the winning selections, Steve Allen, speaking for all the judges, admitted that, "Picking beautiful faces just by photographs is a tough assignment."

He continued that the job was doubly difficult because, "they (the contestants) all look very cute."

A New Idea, A Lot of Talent

by DICK BRADY

THE talent show Tuesday night will be the first of its kind ever attempted by a Junior Week Committee. It will bring before the audience representatives of some of the most diversified campus organizations.

The Varsity Club's contribution to the show will be singer John Giordano, who was received so well in the Intercollegiate Variety Show. Anyone who saw the variety show knows that a fine performance can be expected of John.

Dave Vachon, president of the recently formed Physics Club will deliver a comic monologue, Benchley's "Treasurer's Report."

Belle Masque's offering will be a short play entitled "The Romancers." Belle Masque has never yet disappointed an audience, and no doubt Father Krupa's group will provide another fine performance this time.

Singer Jo Ann Lapin, representing the newly formed Nurses' sorority, will be the contribution of the University's co-ed element.

Turf and Tinsel, although busy recently getting ready for the opening of "Jessica James," has prepared a skit for Tuesday night. As with Belle Masque, we have come to expect a good performance from T & T, an organization that has delighted audiences for 20 years.

Casmir Bianowitz and his group, the Drifters, will represent WVIL, the University's radio station, with their selections of Western music. According to all reports the Drifters have been well received at their performances in this area and should give a fine performance.

The LYNX, the University's literary magazine, sends singer Peter Scott before the footlights as its contribution to the show.

Songs will also be offered by the Mainliners Quartet, who will represent the Villanova Singers, and by the Rosemont Octet, which is making a guest appearance for the occasion.

The show's music will be well provided for by Bobby Schiller and The Villanovans. This band will also play some Dixieland selections, a talent for which they are already well known.

The acts will be judged by Bob Whalen and George Noake, both directors of Turf and Tinsel, and by WFIL's well-known disc jockey, Dick Clark. The judges' choice of the best act will receive a plaque for their organization and individual medals for themselves.

There is no admission price and so there is no reason why there shouldn't be a large audience. Support is important to any activity, and this is the easiest Junior Week function to support. So let's have a good crowd for the show and the informal dance that will follow and show the organizations we appreciate the work they're doing to bring the show to us.

Another competing group, Belle Masque's Romancers—l-r, Paul Gormley, Bernie Finan, Will Cunningham, Stan McGeehan and Walt Doyle, surrounding Miss Lucy Bell, a University nursing student.

"Jessica James" Greets Early-Arriving '56 Mothers

"Jessica James," Turf and Tinsel's neuro-romantic import from the midwest, took time out from her man-chasing diversions last night to greet a large number of early-arriving Class of '56 Mothers at the Field House.

On the fifth night of its frolicking and very successful Spring run, "Jessica" was shown off to Juniors and their Moms who had gotten Junior Week off on an early and highly enjoyable foot. The generosity of T n' T's Bob Whalen and the organization's business staff added to the enjoyment, since the mother-son price was only one dollar.

In fact, with Junior Owen Hickey making the arrangements, the Juniors and their best girls were seated up front in a special section together. They were charmed through every minute of the two-and-a-half hour show.

Seniors Skip Killmond and John Giordano and sophomore Don Mattingly held forth in the major roles and did completely adequate jobs. The show was well-paced, naturally-played, and cleverly written and directed, thanks to old reliable Bob Whalen and cohort George Noake and the work of the cast and stage crew, plus industry on the part of the business staff and decorations outfit.

Joe Blimm's organization drew good crowds throughout the run, doing especially well at the gate Friday and Saturday evenings.

Greeting mothers is a new situation for a rambunctuous "Jessica James," and a bit out of her field, but she performed admirably.

She'll be welcome in the East anytime.

Business staff member Ed Fletcher pins up one of Turf and Tinsel's "Jessica James" posters on a pole near the Field House. The show ended a very successful five-night run last night with a special show for Juniors and their mothers.

From Sax To Soul Through Sound

by DAVID VACHON

FROM its humble beginnings amidst the Afro-European culture of post-Civil War New Orleans, to its high - tension drive and finesse, reflecting contemporary New York society, American instrumental Jazz music has evolved and grown with the United States. As good art, it reflects in its schools the individuating characteristics of each era, acting as a sound portrait of a growing nation.

Music, like all man-made symbolisms, essentially constitutes a means of communication of ideas and impressions. Jazz, because it speaks directly to the soul of man through his emotions, has achieved considerable success in conveying thoughts and reactions from the suprasensitive artistic souls of its musicians to thoe directly involved in the growing pain of the main-stream of American life. From the blues to Dixieland, from Chicago "jazz" to progressive, jazz plumbs the depths and portrays the limits of the human personality. This is the essential characteristic of a jazz artist, viz. that he speaks of himself, of his joys, of his sufferings, of his sorrows. Together with his fellows his soul becomes fused in a melodic pattern in which each member of the musical group embellishes and illustrates the others' tale, much as do different colored oils flow from the master's brush to form a beautiful oneness.

Roll Call of 'Greats'

There are only two kinds of music: good and bad. Good music resonates with the soul of the listener; bad music repulses him, at times deeply offending even the crudest aesthetic sensibilities. All jazz is not good jazz, any more than is all classical music good classical music. Like any art form, jazz has its great men and its masterpieces. Among the great are to be found representatives of every era since the Civil War. "Jelly Roll" Mortin, Louis Armstrong, Eddie Condon, Bix Beiderbeck, Benny Goodman, Stan Kenton, Jerry Mulligan—these people, only a few among many, have succeeded in capturing in sound the emotional key of their respective eras. As no author is consistently great, however, so no musician inevitably produces the musical ideal of the jazz medium. All these new people have their monumental classical accomplishments as well as their lesser works, which enable us to appreciate their moments of greatness.

The common Puritan failing of ripping Biblical quotations out of context and interpreting them to fit the need of the occasion can easily recur in listening to jazz, or in appreciating any artistic work, for that matter. Neither Van Gogh's "Starry Night" nor Louis Armstrong's "Shine" can properly be understood as an independent entity, Stan Kenton makes much more sense to one who has fought his way along a crowded Times Square sidewalk than to one who has lived all his life in the country.

A further illustration of the understanding of the listener should bring to jazz in order to best appreciate it, is a knowledge of European influences on this American art form. Beiderbeck's "In a Mist" provides an earlier

Eddie Condon and Colleagues:

"The Saints" Be Praised!

As indeed they will, when one of jazz's greatest sets up a hectic Field House bandstand Wednesday, Thursday

by HARRY NASH

It seems a long time in the past—indeed it was—that the subject of moving a tradional Blazer Ball out of Junior Week was brought up.

The plan to substitute some other affair for the usually poorly-attended Wednesday night informal was first mentioned at a post-election Junior Class meeting last May.

A lot has happened since then.

There were any number of suggestions tossed into the discussion—concerning outdoor dances, variety shows (this we have, but on Tuesday night instead), sunset picnics (this was before the inception of S.A.P.A.), moonlight boat rides, and so forth.

But to the way of thinking of most of the officers and class moderator Father Calpin, who has been a tremendous driving force in all projects all year long, there was one sort of get-together that seemed ripe development—a jazz concert with a big game.

That we got. It wasn't easy.

Conrad Janis was considered; so was Philadelphia's jam session specialist, Bill Krechmer. So was one Edward Condon. He was a tough man to reach. Three trips to his place in Greenwich Village (with a drop-in to Nick's and Julius' as an afterthought) were required before a deal was consummated that was acceptable to a trio of rather heterogenous elements — Condon, the class, and the University administration. The original plan had been one evening show—on Wednesday. Then Condon suggested an afternoon and night show, finally two afternoon shows, explaining that to come at night would be to create two difficulties: first, to make a higher price compulsory so that he could hire a group to take over for him in his place; and, secondly, to have to pick up Philly locals (dogs, he called them—supposedly in musicians' parlance) who would have to fill in for several of his boys. He feared, as did Father Calpin and the class officers, that such a move would detract from a musical harmony of many years standing, so the deal as it is today was closed.

Since all Juniors are interested in where their money is going, here's the set-up: Condon gets $350 flat rate for the two performances, plus 20% of what is made after the first 350. Therefore, if all 1000 adult tickets are sold at two bills apiece, and all 4000 student tickets are brought up at one dollar each, the Junior Class Stands to make in the vicinity of $4500.

In other words, let us eliminate the 'if' element.

Jack Kelly—outside of a hole-in-one —would like nothing more.

Jazz Concert Notes

THREE trips to New York were required to close the Condon deal. Class moderator Father Calpin, most instrumental in the culmination of the deal, negotiated with Eddie accompanied by officers Harry Nash, Dave Burns and Jerry Guerrisi, and chairman Jack Kelly.

There will be but one 10-minute respite from rhythm at the Field House shows Wednesday and Thursday. Since such a large crowd is expected, refreshments will be hawked through the audience, thereby avoiding one big crush toward the soft drink stands during the intermission. The band will play for 55 minutes, then break, and play for another solid 55 minutes.

Chairman Jack Kelly wishes to make clear that anyone wishing to exchange a Wednesday for a Thursday ticket or vice-versa may do so by contacting any of the sellers.

The gentlemen who assisted Kelly in preparing for the concerts are Phil Keane, Mario DiVincenzo, Pete Zeimer, Henry Guerrisi, Tom Meaney, Nick Mazzoni, Jack Gerrard, Steve Bernocco, Joe Barrett, Eddie Zipf, and the class officers.

THE Field House during convocations was never quite like this.

Admittedly, there has been excitement in the old campus metronome during assemblies in the past—in fact, there have been noises from the audience, and there have been sounds from the stage. But never like this.

For Eddie Condon is comin to town.

Yes, a little bit of Greenwich Village, Chicago's South Side and New Orlean's Basin Street (minus the bars) will be set up in the Field House come Wednesday and Thursday, when one of Jazzdom's greatest pioneers pitches two-hour camps that should ultimately require battening down of the bandstand. It's all part of a mid-Junior Week project that will begin at 4 each afternoon and last until 6, and constitutes one of the finest musical attractions ever staged here at Villanova, indeed, in the Philadelphia area.

New York's guitar-plunking Dixieland addict won't want for companionship in talent, either. He'll be accompanied by his colleagues in top-tapping who nightly set vibrant and pulsating the atmospheric little spot of Eddie's on Third Avenue in the big city. They don't get much bigger than "Wild Bill" Davidson on cornet, Cutty Cutshall on trombone, Edmund Hall on clarinet, Gene Schroeder at the piano, George Wettling on the drums, and Walter Page, leaning on that talkative old bass in the corner.

The boys will play for two straight hours with but one 10-minute intermission.

One of the orginators of the Chicago style of jazz, Eddie Condon will come to Villanova with a crew that has been with him for almost ten years—an aggregation that has delighted thousands with recordings and stage appearances throughout the East.

There's be no lack of old-time hits for the Junior Week visitor to put across—"There'll be Some Changes Made," "New Orleans," "Tin Roof Blues," "Twelfth Street Rag," "Gonna Get Along Without You Now," and many, many more. Needless to say, the old standard, "When the Saints Go Marching In," will be included in the program, which is only tentative and will be partially selected from requests.

All of which sounds pretty good—only a bill per person, two hours of unadulterated Dixieland rhythm, reserved seats up front for Juniors, and an abundance of topnotch personalities.

No, the Field House during assemblies was never like this. Nor will it ever be the same.

"Harbor Lights" Wink at Prom Couples

A world of midnight color and seaside lore, spiced by decorations as vividly atmospheric as the real-life scene itself, will present itself to Junior Prom couples in the Field House-turned-harbor come Friday night.

For that's when the Class of 1956 presents it annual promenade, "Harbor Lights," with music by Buddy Williams and Mike Pedicin, in one of the most ambitious decorative motifs ever attempted for any social event.

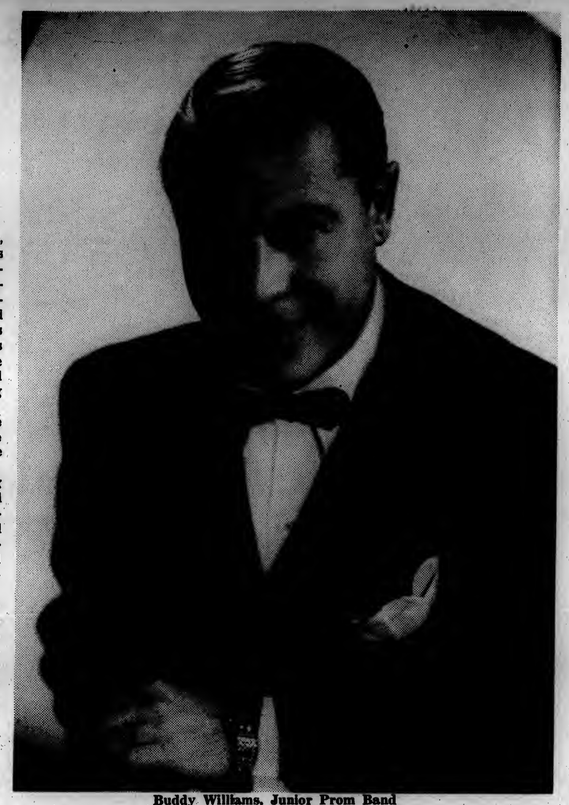
The center of attraction upon entering the Field House will be a 60-foot-long model of a ship covering almost the entire front of the building. Villanovans and their dates will enter the vestibule—that is, the ship—by crossing gangplanks from the outer steps. Inside the building itself will be a harbor scene; a 24-foot lighthouse will blink out its soft silent message from a deep blue sky, waterfront tavern scenes and netting will surround the outer ridges of the "harbor" and the band will play from a stage with pilings on either side.

This elaborate set-up is the brainchild of one Philip Butler, a lad whose untiring work in this field has made him an inexpendable cog in class machinery. Butler, a Pennsylvania native and education major, has surrounded himself with industriousness and originality in Joe Jackson, Joe Schultz, Fred Onorato, Ed Novasatka, Bob Hentschell, John Kilker, Dick Harris, John Murphy, Bill Lawlor, Bill Mannix and Gene Bilan. The lighthouse, the construction of which began almost two months, is Joe Schultz' private baby (outside of Bernie, that is) and will be the center of the inner harbor scene.

Greg Gehring, general chairman of the prom, has worked long and hard in nailing down preparations for the dance. He's been aided by Dick Cross, handling refreshments, Bob Fredericks on favors and Bob McCaffery on program. Cross has reported that, instead of the usual Coke, an orange ice-ginger ale punch will be served throughout the evening, as well as cookies. Fredericks has secured favors that are original and functional at the same time, and believes that they will gain immediate favor with the young ladies.

Tables and chairs, will, of course, be arranged around the sides of the dance floor, and candlelight will add to the romantic effect.

One of the highlights of the evening will be the crowning of the annual Junior Week Queen, Miss Joann Harrington, escorted by C&F student and trackman Al Ligorelli. Her lady-in-waiting and four court members will also be presented by band-leader Buddy Williams.



Much of the credit for the well-executed prom (in fact, for the entire week) is due to a group of men who worked throughout the year as publicity directors—Henry Guerrisi, Mario DiVincenzo, Tom Meaney, Nick Mazzoni, Gene Bilan and Jack Lawder. All these boys worked unceasingly and were invaluable.

The ticket boys were also instrumental, as always. Mazzoni, Meaney, Burns McLindon, one of the most reliable Juniors, John Gaziano, Bernie Dunn, Jim Giordano, John Henry, Ed Allen, Joe Jackson and Joe Schultz.

Planning committee head Roy Zimmerman, who has helped to plan for the Band Concert-Talent Show tomorrow night, has worked with Gehring in preparing for the prom. Miscellaneous chairman Pete Quinn handles, as usual, the little jobs that are as irksome as they are important.

Mike Pedicin and his Quintet, Intermission Band for Junior Prom Friday Night

Buddy Williams, Junior Prom Band

Musical Mood Tuned For Dancing, Romancing

by MATT HEIM

OFFERING something new—three euphoniums—Buddy Williams and his orchestra will be the star attraction for prom-goers Friday evening, in a return engagement to Villanova. Recognized for its youth and vigor and known chiefly as a college band, the Williams group will include a 13-piece orchestra and a charming vocalist.

The use of the three euphoniums is reported to be a "first" in the history of popular bands. Whether or not it's a history-making thing, one thing is definitely certain: this new and different instrument helps create the smooth rich blends and tone colors called "Golden Echoes."

Williams, who has led his band in night club and college stands around the nation, has shown outstanding ability as a composer and arranger and styles his music to the collegiate set. He's also rather versatile . . . plays the saxophone, clarinet and arranges.

In the intermission spotlight will be featured the RCA Victor recording artist, Mike Pedicin and his Orchestra. A relatively new organization, the Pedicin-men have been featured in outstanding night spots as The Lost Frontier in fun-loving Las Vegas, The Steel Pier in Atlantic City, Sciolli's, Chubby's in metropolitan Philadelphia and Mayshore's in Somer's Point, N. J. His popularity has rocketed with release of his hit recordings of "Shake a Hand," "Sweet Georgia Brown," and "Mambo Rock."

Junior ticket saleman John Gaziano is assured by Bernie Dunn that the latter already has all tickets needed for Junior Week, as sales continue in the Pie Shoppe booth.

...And Then the Best Night of All:

At Palumbo's, what with a new setting, dinner, floor show and dancing to the music of four bands

by DICK FITZPATRICK

Dinner-Dance Notes

Nearly 400 Juniors have reserved seats to attend the Dance Dance, chairman Dick Pitzpatrick reports, adding that the total is the largest in the school's history.

Assistant chairmen Jim Hippler and Bob McDonnell helped Fitz in a great many ways in preparing for the Saturday's affair, and thanks are also in order to Nick Mazzoni, Burns McLindon, Tom Gorham, John Gaziano and the others who helped to sell Dinner Dance tickets and keep accurate reservation accounts on the lay-out graph of Palumbo's.

Ticket head Nick Mazzoni has been practically put out of his own room in the past month by a steady influx of various Junior Week tickets. Not only has Nick handled work for T n' T in preparing for the very successful "Jessica James," but he arranged for the printing of and at one time or another handled almost 7000 tickets for the entire big week. "I'm going out of my mind," Nick commented a couple of weeks ago. "It's bad enough having to handle and distribute for sale 5000 jazz concert tickets, but I have to keep track of colors according to Wednesday or Thursday and student or adult." This line-up included four colors — white and blue for students on the two days, pink and green for adult ducats for the pair of performances.

Fitzpatrick is sure that all the Juniors and their dates will be greatly impressed by the atmosphere at Palumbo's. There is soft indirect lighting throughout, modernistic wall fixtures, and gaily-colored wall scenes.

Short speeches to be made by members of the administration and the officers and chairman will have to delivered both up and downstairs from the stages. "Perhaps, commented Fitzie, "I could try a joke upstairs and use it again on the first floor if it goes over."

Class officers Jerry Guerrisi and Dave Burns, both instrumental in preparing for the Dinner Dance.

ALL good things must come to an end, so also, alas, must Junior Week.

Fortunately for all concerned, the Class of '56, accustomed to doing things in a big way, has seen to it that the week's festivities are to be rounded out with an affair rivaling the proportions of a Republican convention. Saturday evening, May 7, Palumbo's restaurant, in Philadelphia, will be the scene of the most colosal Junior Dinner-Dance that Villanovans are likely to witness for many years.

Earl Denny

Dinner Dance chairman Dick Fitzpatrick has announced the featured band at the Saturday night affair will not be Tony Desmond as previously announced, due to a misunderstanding over Desmond's contract on the part of agent Bill Honney and Palumbo's manager, John Ferro.

Taking Desmond's place will be a popular Philadelphia group, the band of Earl Denny, who will perform along with his combo and the regular combo and band featured by Palumbo's regularly.

The misunderstanding resulted from Ferro's unwillingness to assume the price aked by Honney on Desmond's contract, especially in view of the fact that the document, never signed by either party, provided for Desmond from 7:30 to 12 rather than from 6 p.m. to 2 a.m., the times for the affair. Fitzpatrick, and well as the class officers and everyone else connected with the affair here at school, was uninformed of the failure to sign Desmond. Ferro had told Fitzpatrick that he would take the unsigned contract and take care of everything involved in getting Desmond. But the price Honney asked—$400—was more than Ferro would pay, and the class, never informed of the situation, happened upon the information last Thursday.

The contacting of Palumbo's for the Dinner-Dance was more a stroke of good fortune than anything else. Early in December of last year, after a fruitless search of every major hotel and banquet ball in city, Fitzpatrick and Bob McDonnell, Jim Hippler and Joe Mooney, had run into the proverbial stone wall. At the suggestion of Class Treasurer Jerry Guirrisi, the committee and President Harry Nash investigated the club and found that it was just what they are looking for.

It would seem that The Lord is with the Class of '56.

In case you might be interested in one or two of the more practical details, such as where to go, when to arrive, and, (perhaps most important) what's to eat, here you are:

1. Palumbo's is located at 824 Catherine St., Philadelphia — maps will be available.
2. Dinner is served at 6:30 p.m. There will be dancing and cocktails from 6 p.m.
3. Ah, yes, the menu . . . fruit cup, spagetti and ravioli, half roast chicken, rum cake, spumoni, and coffee. (Thatsa pretty gooda,eh?)
4. There is free parking.
5. And last, but by no means least, all drinks are 50 cents.

Tighten your safety belts and prepare for the best! Maybe it's all over Sunday, but in this reporter's opinion (highly biased, I might add) it will be a good long while before you forget the Junior Dinner-Dance of 1955.

Peering

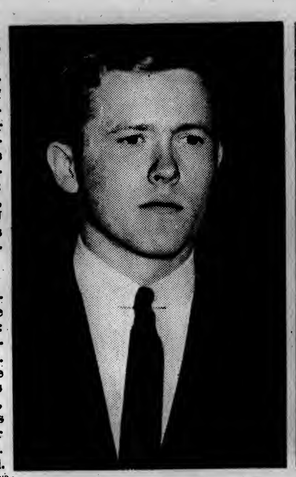
By Dick Peer

AT the Mothers, many of whom are taking their first really good luck at Villanova. That's a pleasant expression you're wearing today, but if you stay long enough it might just change to one of amazement. By the way, Mom, now would you like to go down to Kelly's for a while

At Father, who is home WITHOUT mother. Hmmm? With Mom down here for a day or two, you can't tell what good ol' Dad is up to.

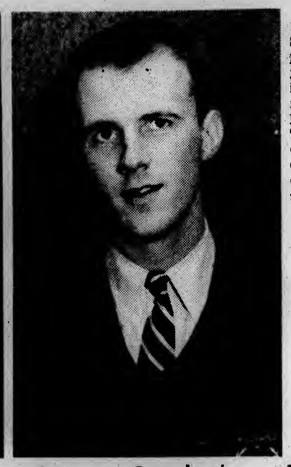
At Junior Week and at Junior who most certainly will be quite Weak at the end of it all.

Over the tracks toward the Tea House. I don't see too many of the commandoes about. In fact I've heard that double cuts have been registered by some of those who hibernated there all winter. The reason for all this as a C & F scholar might put it—Imported items have reached a new high for the spring season while many of the old stand-bys have been exported. This situation, although temporary in many cases, is expected to cause financial distress for the remainder of the year."



At those who weren't asked to Rosemont's Prom. Some took it mildly, some jumped for joy, but there was one lad who took it to heart and cast himself into that body of water which just sits and sits in front of the "T."

At the Prom Queen, Miss Joann Harrington, who certainly is very beautiful. Personally however, I prefer the Lady-in-Waiting. (There I said it and I hope you're happy!)



At the Talent Show to be given tomorrow night, which promises to be quite a gathering. With all the talent on this campus and a loan from Rosemont—their Octet is coming over to "Oc" a while—it should be fun. Don't forget to bring your girl or your other girl, as the case may be, to the dance afterwards.

At the Juniors who are taking spaghetti-eating lessons these days. With the Dinner Dance at Palumbo's establishment this year everybody will have to know just how to go about downing that always dangerous meal.

Maps showing the way to Palumbo's night club will be made available all during this week. The best route is to go east down Market past City Hall to 8th Street, turn right and go straight until you hit Catherine, then turn right again, and it's but one block ahead. There will be free parking.

The Cutest Juniors... In Less (?) Inhibited Days

Chairman John Stangl

by BOB FORD

So many entries in the annual Junior Week Diaper Dan contest were pictured on horses that the committee toyed with the idea of offering one award to the most handsome horse as well as the most winsome Junior in his less responsible days (it sez here).

Although thi move was finally decided against due to a profound lack of horse experts, one innovation has been added. As you may notice, no King of Carefree Days is named in today's VILLANOVAN, although his picture is included on this page along with some of his colleagues in various uninhibited poses. This move was taken in order to add a spice of suspense to the official viewing of the whole lot ofk pictures this afternoon in Austin Lounge at 4, when the official winner will be announced. Chairman John Stangl adds that all the pictures will be on display throughout the day in Austin Lounge for theose interested in seeing Junior when he insisted on milk instead of money and building blocks instead of Budweiser.

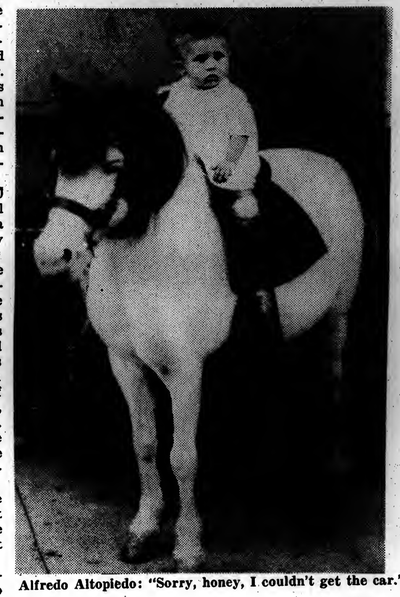
Stangl received over 350 pictures from loving mothers, several of whom included little poems about thier offspring and at least one of whom included every statistic available from her son's file, except for his last-semester chapel record.

The picture total was almost 80 over last year's response, and Stangl said that he was very pleased over "a wonderful response and some really good pictures."

A snag was encountered when the first shot of a co-ed Junior ever received came into consideration for the contest, but it was decided that this very important segment of the class mustn't be neglected. The shot did not win, however. Actually, it was difficult in some cases to distinguish little girls from little boys in view of hair-do's (just ask Tom Mullen—or, better yet, take a look at his picture).

The kids shown on this page were all considered to be the best of the entries, and the winner, as was mentioned, is included.

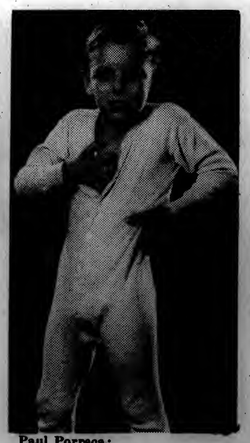
All the pictures received will be laid out all day long, so be sure to get to Austin Lounge, at least during the official announcement of the winner at 4 p.m.



Mother's Day chairman Frank Hartmann would like to express thanks to Stangl and Dick Yanni for their work on this project.

Gino Gallina: "With all the money I've spent for Junior Week, I'm down to my bare assentials."

Dick Peer: "Eddie Condon puts me in a trance."



Alfredo Altopiedo: "Sorry, honey, I couldn't get the car."

John Repko: "Why I'd be delighted to buy a prom ticket."

Fred Neri: "Reach!"

Paul Porreca: "These gosh darn itchy union suits."

John Monaghan: "Er . . uh, Mom, . . . Junior Week, you know! And I'm broke . . ."

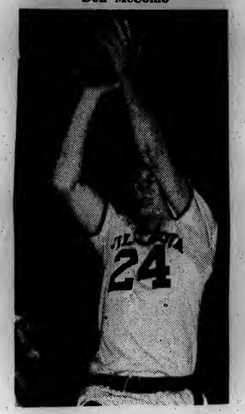
IN a seven-sport array of events, Junior athletes make their contribution to the gala week for '56'ers this Saturday in the third annual Blue-White Day program. In each of the seven sports Juniors have held prominent positions on the Villanova teams and have been instrumental in the Wildcats past success. Now they will devote their energies away from rival schools and toward graduated Villanova heros in an attempt to prove that youth must be served.

Whatever the results Saturday, everyone is assured of a good time. The alumni will be able to flex long-inert muscles of past triumphs, while renewing old acquaintances. The present varsity members will unlimber muscles idled by jazz concerts, picnics, and a night-before Junior Prom.

FOOTBALL: Varsity vs. "Old-timer"



Bob Haner, Mickey Frinzi, and Pasquariello will bolster an Alumni lineup featuring this year's graduating seniors. Coach Frank Reagan's hopefuls will include ends Pat Haley, Don McComb, and Tom Rogers. Tackles Mike Barry and Frank Beeunas will fortify the undergraduate line. Center Nelson Marshall will be flanked by guards George Karras and Mike Potenza. Frank D'Alonzo, fullback, and Ed Ortelli, halfback, will carry the ball for the Juniors.

BASKETBALL: Varsity vs. "Old-Timers"

Five third-year men will lead the varsity against some of Villanova's highest scoring hardwood stars. John Cirino, Tom Foley, Marty Milligan, Jim Smith, and Larry Tierney will oppose a high scoring graduate contingent. Paul Arizin, Joe Lord, and Bob Schafer will attempt to upset their alma mater's victory hopes.

Don McComb

Jim Smith

BASEBALL: Varsity vs. Seton Hall

Seton Hall will attempt to reverse an early season defeat by a Junior led diamond nine. Pitchers John Nagy, Ralph Pacinelli, and Dan Severino will endeavor to thwart Setonia's batsmen. Tom Casey and Dave Hinnegan will lend infield support, while Ron Debiak will frustrate extra-base hopes in the outer garden.

TRACK: Varsity vs. LaSalle

La Salle College's defending Middle Atlantic Conference track champions provide the competition for Coach "Jumbo" Elliot's proteges on the cinder oval. Warner Heitmann, Al Ligorelli, and Billy Reilly are expected to score in the sprints and the mile relay. Pole-vaulters Mark Connor and Dave Vaughn,and javelin tosser Tom Gorham are the Junior participants in the field events.

GOLF: Varsity vs. "Old-Timers"

Charlie Stone's linksmen play an Alumni golf team captained and organized by Joseph Duffy, '37, Stone and Jack Kelly are the members of the Class of '56 among the contestants who will tee off at Aronimink Country Club.

SWIMMING: "Swim-o-Rama"

Behind the scenes with the fellow who goes unnoticed—the decoration hand, the publicity hound, the ticket hawker—herein lies the success of the Junior Class:

Juniors Steve Bernocco, left, and Tom Mullen, hit an unidentified freshman and VILLANOVAN chief Edwin Daly for prom ticket purchase on the Mendel-Good Counsel crossing. Both these members of the Class of 1956 have been acyive and co-operative in handling preparations.

Publicity co-chairman Mario DiVincenzo, who with colleague Henry Guerrisi has done an excellent job in their field, shows off a Jazz Concert poster to interested classmate Jim Gaffney in the C & F building.

Ticket head Nick Mazzoni, just about put out from his room by the influx of Junior Week ducats, feels just about like this as he works steadily in preparation for the week's activities.

Four of Phil Butler's decorations staff haul out the lightlight skeleton for further work in preparation for the Junior Prom, "Harbor Lights." Wille Mowatt and Greg Shellburg are up front, assisted by a couple of compatriots on the top end of the structure.

SENIOR PORTRAITS

Arrangements for senior portraits for the Belle Air should be made by Class of '56 members this week by signing up in the Pie Shoppe. Portraits will have to be taken before the end of school. No portraits will be taken next Fall, editor Dick Fitzpatrick has announced.

JAZZ

example. The Bach-like contrapuntal harmonies of Jerry Mulligan provide a contemporary example of the esoteric cultural heights which this fusion of American and European music has reached.

Yet, understanding of all these factors will fail to produce true enjoyment, unless one listens to the variations of the musicians against a mental background of the theme, the melody, of the given piece.

The Dixieland jazz many of us will hear this week, although having deep root in the simple, raucous, and direct early New Orleans jazz idiom, nevertheless exhibits the polish of a developed and interrated art form. It constitutes in a very real sense conservative, quasi-reactionary view of modern America. Yet it is also an eternal embodiment of the joys and the sorrows that fill the hearts of men.

Jesuit Honored With 1955 Mendel Medal

REV. James B. Macelwane, S. J., a world-renowned expert on earthquakes, has been named to receive the 1955 Mendel Medal at a faculty dinner in the Field House May 10.

Dean of the Institute of Technology at St. Louis University, Father Macelwane is the second Jesuit priest to be selected for the award, which was founded in 1928.

The Mendel Medal is given to an outstanding Catholic scientist in honor of Gregor Mendel, abbot of an Augustinian Monastery in Brunn, Austria, who formulated the laws of heredity which bear his name.

Author And Geophysics Expert

Father Macelwane, a pioneer in the field of geophysics, established the first Department of Geophysics in the western hemisphere at St. Louis University. He is the author of a textbook on theoretical seismology and several other books on the earth's structure, besides more than 100 articles in scientific journals.

The winner of the eighteenth Mendel Medals is an expert in the study of the propagation of elastic waves, the study of the intensity and nature of blast vibrations and micro-seismic disturbances.

During the war he conducted micro-seismic studies for the Navy and sponsored the tripartite station method for detecting and tracking hurricanes.

University President Presents

Presenting the award May 10 will be Very Rev. James A. Donnellon, O. S. A., Villanova president, who announced the name of the recipient last week.

Born near Port Clinton, O., the 71-year-old Jesuit attended John Carroll University, St. Louis University, the University of California (Berkeley) and the University of Giessen (Germany),

The Mendel Medal is awarded to outstanding scientists who are members in good standing of the Catholic Church and who have done painstaking work to advance the cause of science.

The other Jesuit to receive the Medal was Rev. Pierre Teilhard de Chardin, paleontologist with the National Geological Survey of China.

Senior Civil Wins Third

Charles H. Gutberlet, senior civil engineer, received third prize in the annual paper competition held during the student convention of the American Society of Civil Engineers.

The convention, held last Sunday and Monday at Bucknell University, attracted over 200 students from ten schools. The group from Villanova numbered 63, nearly twice the number of those attending from any other school.

Gutberlet's paper was entitled "An Investigation into the Bond Strength of Reinforced Concrete." The paper was the result of many months of laboratory tests run by Gutberlet and his co-workers, Steve McGlynn and Tom Hess.

Philosophy Club Elects

VILLANOVA'S young Philosophy Club has chosen Wilfred Quinn, a junior education major, to serve in the presidency during 1955-56.

Quinn, a day hop, succeeds Frank Trainor.

The other officers who will serve with Quinn next year will be elected Thursday at 10:30 a. m. in 204 C & F.

Addressing the meeting will be Quinn, who will speak on "The Relation of the Intellect and the Will."

Biggest in History:

New LYNX Appears With Photographic Essay Added

A brand new feature—a photographic essay—highlights the largest LYNX ever published when the magazine appears today.

Dedicated to mothers, the LYNX will bulge with 68 pages and will include at least three short stories and an essay besides the photographic feature, which will have the pre-Easter retreat for its subject.

Free copies were distributed to Mothers during the Mother's Day dinner today in the university cafeteria. Shoppe tomorrow, but a door-to-door Public sale will begin in the Pie sales campaign will be conducted tomorrow night around campus.

This room-to-room sale is another innovation by the LYNX.

The Big Three

Short stories featured in the big edition: "An Incident in Mexico," the lead story by Joe Barrett: "Half a 'C' Note," with Bryn Mawr as its setting, by Pat Nolan; and "Half Light," by Harry Nash, incoming editor-in-chief of the VILLANOVAN.

Mark McCormick, senior philosophy major, contributed the essay on Christian Culture.

Editor Rees James, who is publishing his final LYNX, said this edition is probably the most ambitious ever attempted by the campus literary magazine.

Moderators of the LYNX are Dr. John Phillipson and Mr. James Mitchell.

Find a Roll Book?

MR. Lester N. Recktenwald, of the Psychology department, recently lost his roll-book in Belle Air Hall. Any student who finds it should return it either to the Psychology Office, 222 Mendel, or to the VILLANOVA Office, C & F basement.

Poster Hangers Mark Time Until Mon. When Campaigning Opens

WHILE the word of mouth campaigning is in full canter, the sign-posting and open-car demonstrations are still at least a week away.

Then the candidates for class offices and their ardent supporters will begin the annual race to cover the best spots on the Pie Shoppe bulletin boards.

Of course, as always happens, some overeager campaign workers will plaster handbills on trees, classroom blackboards, phone booths—anyplace where Scotch tape will stick or nails can be hammered.

Father McLaughlin Vs. Illegal Posters

That's when Rev. George McLaughlin, O. S. A., who blew the mad whistle for this mad race by releasing the list of approved candidates last week, swings into action like a bird dog after his prey . . . ripping down posters which do not meet the handbook requirements.

All such campaign propaganda is restricted to the Pie Shoppe boards, although neat boards are permitted in the vicinity of the campus hang-out.

Incidentally, posters are not supposed to appear before next Monday and loud speaker encouragements to voters are only allowed between class periods on election day, May 12.

DPM Elects Six Officers At Thurs. Meeting; New Members Able to Vote

NEWLY-INITIALED members of Delta Pi Mu fraternity will be able to cast their ballots when DPM elects six officers for 1955-56, Thursday at 10:30 a. m. in 201 C & F.

There had been some discussion whether members who had been in the fraternity less than a year could vote. But President John De Remigis said last week all members in good standing may ballot.

At a meeting last Thursday, fraternity members made plans for their annual dinner dance, which will be held in May.

Battling it out to succeed John De Remigis are Frank Adams and Owen Hickey, who will now have to seek the freshman vote.

Aircraft Film Features Physics Club Meeting

CLUB president Dave Vachon announced another interesting program for this week's Physics Club meeting, Thursday, in the Physics Lab.

A special invitation is issued to all those interested in research to see the film to be shown, "Industrial Research and Development," a 30-minute color film prepared by the Hughes Aircraft Co. which shows what is offered in the field of aircraft research.

Following the film will be a discussion of the next Physics experiment, "Advanced Phyic Experimental Equipment."

Frosh, Soph Election Winners Celebrate Victory With Party

Besides enjoying the novelty of two bands at an informal dance, patrons, of the Soph-Frosh Spring Party, May 13, will indirectly help the newly-elected officers of both classes celebrate their victories.

Of course, no one would want to wish the new officers bad luck or anything, but maybe they had better stay home. What with it being Friday the thirteenth, and they holding their positions for only twenty-four hours . . . but then, who's superstitious?

Still, the Villanovans and the Commodores will be giving out with all kinds of music—jazz, plenty of slow stuff to dream by—and the setting will be there for any kind of celebrating the newly-elected executives want to do.

Arrangements Near Completion

Chairman Jack Decker and his committeemen have most of the arrangements completed.

They still haven't announced the theme, and indicate they may keep it under wraps until the night of the dance. This would be only one precedent-smasher.

In setting up the first such party sponsored by a Villanova Sophomore class, the committee contracted two musical aggregations, a new move in planning for a Villanova informal dance.

The committeemen emphasize that there's still time for second-year men to assist with tickets (which will go on sale next week at $1.50 per couple) decorations or refreshments.

Soph's Socks Startle

THERE'S a sophomore on campus who's busy, bewildered and currently bothered with an unusual problem: How to explain the yellow toe-end of one of a pair of red and green socks knitted by his girl. It would seem she ran out of green thread—or something.

Fr. Donnellon Outlines Student-Faculty Plan

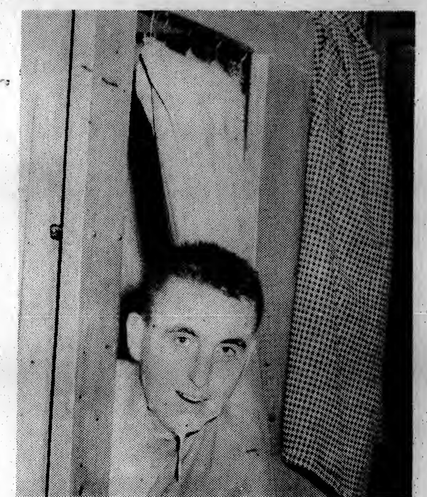
VERY Rev. James A. Donnellon, O. S. A., University president, addressed last Monday night's meeting of the Student Council.

Highlighting the president's talk was a newly proposed plan for the airing of student grievances and for generally more effective and closer student-administration relations.

Father Donnellon pointed out that student complaints are sometimes justified and for any solution they should be brought to the attention of the administration. Often, he added, the causes of these gripes are just temporary inconveniences.

Meet With President

Through the plan, a committee of four would be established to consist of the Student Council president and three other representatives. This group would meet directly with Father Donnellon once a month as representatives of the Student Council, bringing a closer relationship between the students and the administration. This functioning body is needed because of the increasing student population.



He further added that congested conditions now existing in the Dining Hall and the Pie Shop should be remedied upon expected completion of Dougherty Hall in Sept.

The business meeting was keynoted by Dick Segrave-Daly's motion to have talks given next year on practical aspects of insurance, home and car financing and other facets of individual economics for the benefit of interested seniors.

Classes Elect 27 Officers Tomorrow In Alumni Gym

Juniors, Sophs, Frosh Look To Next Year's Events

See List of Candidates, page 5

Tomorrow is the day when the more than 120 candidates for class offices bite a few more fingernails than usual and gaze out of more classroom windows.

Because from 10 a.m. until 3 p.m. in Alumni Gym juniors, sophomores and freshmen will decide which 27 of those candidates will hold various class offices next year.

Today will see the peak of campaigning reached by the campus politicians and their supporters. Since Friday the Pie Shoppe bulletin board and the grounds around the campus hangout have been plastered with posters urging votes for this candidate and that one.

Juniors Elect 11

Juniors will elect an alumni representative besides the usual officers — president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer and six Student Council representatives.

The Class of 1957 will pick the men who will be in charge of what is perhaps their most important year, when Junior Week is the predominant social function.

They will elect six Student Council representatives in addition to the four class officers.

Nurses Celebrate Famed Predecessor's Birthday

There will be a difference in the campus scene tomorrow.

Thursday, May 12, is Florence Nightingale Day, and like all good disciples of that famous Crimean War heroine, Villanova's nursing students will be celebrating.

Weather permitting, the registered nurses will wear uniforms and caps from their respective hospitals, and sophomore basic nursing students will sport the Villanova uniform, a blue and white pin striped affair.

A Nursing Division social has been scheduled for Austin Lounge. Nursing subjects will be discussed, according to Joan McAllister, vice-president of the Alpha Delta Chi, the graduate nursing sorority, which is the sponsor of the event.

A nursing display in the Library is also being presented.

The Florence Nightingale Day celebration is the first project undertaken by the ADX.

Soph Party Fri.; Picnic Planned For Class Sat.

Plenty of music—some jumpy and some nice and slow—in a "Moonlight in Vermont" setting.

That's a thumbnail sketch of the Sophomore Spring Party—closed to freshmen and second year men—in the Field House Friday from 9 until 1.

Taking turns on the bandstand will be the established Villanovans, with some of their Dixieland specialities and the Commodores, a group which is growing in popularity along the Main Line and is noted for its Glenn Miller arrangements.

But the week end, as far as the sophomores are concerned, will not end when the bands put away their instruments Friday night. All second year men and their dates are invited to a class picnic Saturday afternoon.

The place where the picnic will be held has not been announced by Jack Decker, chairman of the dance. But he said the picnic will start around 1 p. m.

Making arrangements for the Saturday affair are Class President Jack O'Rourke, Tom Hooker and Mike Boruch.

For the informal dance Friday night, the decorations committee began working Sunday night

Editorial Staffers Named for 1955-56 'Villanovan' Posts

Following the previous announcement of Harry Nash as next year's VILLANOVAN Editor-in-chief, Rev. Louis A. Rongione, O.S.A., moderator of the publication, has released the names of next year's staff.

Succeeding and assisting Nash as managing editor will be Tom Smith, a sophomore Arts student from Lynchburg, Va. Smith served the newspaper this year as News Editor, and last year as a reporter.

As News Editor, Frank Delany will fill Smith's position for the '55-'56 season. Delany is a freshman Arts student hailing from Broomall, Pa. He was a copy editor on this year's staff.

Fixes Future Feature

Clem Birch, also a freshman Arts student, will be the future feature editor. Birch was recently named VILLANOVAN publicity editor and is a resident of Haverford, Pa. He succeeds Bob Ford.

As next year's sports editors, Bob Ford and Bob Strayton will replace graduating Joe Heaps and Norm Feldpush. Ford, Junior arts, is from Linden, N. J. and has been a copy editor and feature editor this season. Strayton is a sophomore arts man from Rockville Center, N.Y. and has been an associate editor.

Jack Downing and Bill Brown will be the copy editors. Down-

1955 'Belle Air' Out Today

Distribution begins today for 1955 Belle Air in the basement of Mendel Hall beginning at approximately 2:30 p.m. The current yearbook is being delivered well ahead of schedule, and distribution will continue through Friday.

Editor Frank Gunther said that Bob Rock, circulation manager, will supervise distribution of some 2700 copies of the 263-page annual, the second-largest in Villanova history. Gunther advised that all students will be required to show their matriculation cards when they pick up their pre-paid book.

At a dinner for the editors and staffers of the 1955 Belle Air held Monday night, preview copies were distributed and keys awarded. Present were Rev. Robert M. Sullivan O. S. A. and Rev. Daniel Falvey, co-moderators, representatives of the University administration, and Mr. William T. Cooke, publisher.

Work began on the current yearbook over 13 months ago, and continued through the summer with preliminary planning accomplished by Editor Gunther. Bulk of the writing, photographing, editing, layout, copy and proof reading was performed from September 1954 through April 1955.

A Villanovan's Guide to the 'Belle Air'

The editors of the brand-new Belle Air published today offer this guide to students reading the 1955 Villanova yearbook.

- A "University concept" is introduced for the first time to mark off sections of the book into the schools of the University: Arts and Science, Commerce and Finance and Engineering.
- As a "senior" book, the Seniors are spotlighted as never before. Almost one-half of its contents are devoted to portraits and biographies of the seniors in their respective schools, and a word-and-picture history of the class of 1955.
- The style-cramping and space-writing theme has been replaced by a broad, well-paced coverage of every aspect of Villanova.
- "Life at Villanova" is another innovation, an informal and lively spread on the habits and habitats of the Villanova man.
- This first actual University Edition is dedicated to a man who contributed heavily to make Villanova a university, the late Very Rev. Joseph M. Dougherty, O. S. A.
- Interest is focused in the last section of the book on the incorporation of the underclassmen with the faculty members who are thought to be more closely associated with future students than with their past students.

From the ACD report it would seem that this year's VILLANOVAN has continued improving where the 1954 VILLANOVAN was judged "Best in its class" when given the All-American rating for the first time in over a decade last year.

The ACP backs up this contention with some very quotable remarks written to Edwin K. Daly, VILLANOVAN Editor-in-Chief, who has guided the paper to its present honored position. Guides for Unity

The officers and student council representatives for next year will be elected tomorrow. On the outcome of those elections depends the success or failure of the student government and social functions for next year. The decision is in the hands of the average student, for it is his vote that will determine the results.

Needless to say, it is an important decision that the average Villanova student must make tomorrow. If it is to be a good one, it must be a decision free from prejudice or emotion, a decision based simply on the calm evaluation of the best interests of the class.

We have a few simple suggestions we should like to offer to help the voter make his selection. They are not intended to be hard and fast rules, but rather are suggested as guideposts to help point the way to the best choice.

First of all, do not vote for a candidate simply because he is the same school as you; base your vote on the larger interests of the class as a whole. It is not important that a particular office be filled with a man from Arts or Engineering or C&F; what is important is that it be occupied by the best possible candidate.

Second, judge the candidates by what they have accomplished so far. If a candidate has already proved himself by doing good work either for the class or for some other organization in the past, he has a far better claim to office than someone who merely promises that he will accomplish a great deal in the future.

Third, watch a candidate's campaigning. Is he emphasizing his own qualifications for office or tearing down his opponent's? If he is doing the latter, by no means vote for him; he will never be able to command unified class support.

Follow these rules, and you will probably make a good choice. But whether you follow them or not, whether your candidate finishes in first or last place, remember one thing. The campaign ends when the results are announced. From that time on, the winners are your officers, and you owe them your full support.

An Encouraging Sign

In a short space of fifteen days, six campus publications will make their appearance on the Villanova scene. Release of the LYNX and the Junior Week VILLANOVAN inaugurated this period of journalistic activity.

This group includes, besides the LYNX and the VILLANOVAN, each of which has recently published the largest issues ever, the BELLE AIR, which contains more pages than any other Villanova annual with exception of the 1943 centennial issue, the VILLANOVA ENGINEER, which distributed its publication commemorating the Engineering School's fiftieth Anniversary, the BUSINESS WHIRL and the VILLANOVA LAW REVIEW, each of which is newly-formed.

This exceptional growth is a healthy sign for the University. It typifies Villanova's broadened horizons, her recognition of the necessity for an informed and a thinking student body, as well as the interest displayed by that student body. For these publications are as demanding of time as any organization on this campus. We all know too well the pressures of making a deadline or getting the copy to the printers.

Bandoeng Conference Disappoints Communists

By Ed Daly

Recently a meeting took place in Banoeng, Indonesia, a gathering on the outcome of which the Communists placed great hope. This gathering, of course, was the Aro-Asian Conference, attended by the representatives of nations totalling more than half the world's population.

The Reds had good reason for their optimism. Those governments whose diplomats assembled at Bandoeng had, with few exceptions, been established as successors to colonial administrations of the various European powers. The fear of European colonialism is a very serious one to most of these Asians and Africans. It was precisely that fear that the Reds counted on exploiting.

Prestige Loss For Nehru

As matters worked out, the Reds were disappointed in some of their hopes. They found an assembly fearful of colonialism, but one that feared Soviet colonialism as much as it did the Western variety. The mood of many of these Asians was voiced by the premier of neutralist Ceylon, when he rose to attack Communist imperalism as a far greater danger than the declining Western colonialism.

What will be the significance of the very severe criticism of Red policy voiced by the diplomats of so many Afro-Asian nations is hard to evaluate at this early date. In the short run at least, it represents a loss of prestige for India' ultra-neutralist prime minister, Jawaharlal Nehru, and for the man he so often makes his ally, Chou En-lai, of Red China.

Change of Attitudes Unlikely

Whether this attitude will be followed by a concrete change of policy on the part of the nations concerned seems unlikely, at least for the time being. Those nations which are most strongly pro-Western, such as Turkey, Liberia, and the Philippines, will unquestionably continue in their position. Red China and North Viet Nam will just as certainly continue to take advantage of every opportunity given them to expand their empires at the expense of the western bloc. What the United States must hope for is that the pro-American elements in the uncommitted countries, such as Ceylon, Burma, and Indonesia, which, although neautralist in their sympathies, are still fearful of possible Communist aggression or subversion, directed against themselves, might be strengthened by this public demonstrations that this fear is common in other Asian countries. This would not necessarily be mirrored by the foreign policies of the various counties but would be invaluable to the United States in case of a really serious Far Eastern crisis.

Conference Favors West

At any rate, the results of the Bandoeng Conference must be looked upon as tending to favor the West more than the East. They do not represent a spectacular victory for either side, but that in itself represents something of a gain for the West, whose leaders had been afraid the Reds would walk away with the Conference.

That the Reds and Nehru felt that the Conference was not going according to schedule was demonstrated by Nehru's frequent bursts of ill temper and his walk-outs over relatively minor procedural points.

Despite all these outbursts, however, the Banoeng group did not endorse the anti-American line, did not adopt a "Hate the West" program, and did not adopt a one-sided condemnation of western methods while leaving Soviet tactics outside the realm of dicussion.

When Chou En-lai went home to Peiping and Jawaharlal Nehru returned to New Delhi, it was with the humiliating memory of a perfectly rigged jury that did not return the required verdict.

There also must have been a dawning realization that they are no longer in a position to speak in the name of Asia. Perhaps their one-time prestige may return, but until then, there is no spokesman for Asia whose every word must make foreign offices throughout the West bustle with alarmed activity every time he speaks.

New Standard Set By Colorful Lynx

By Clem Birch

The Spring edition of the LYNX, Villanova's literary quarterly, has been released to a rather small but not unreceptive audience.

This current issue is the largest in the history of the LYNX and in it is employed a novel device, which should by all bolster sales. From cover to cover, the total number of pages comes to 68; the new technique is that of a photographic essay placed in the center of the issue.

Taking up the bulk of the quarterly are five short stories, highlighted perhaps by "An Incident in Mexico," authored by Joseph Barrett.

Four essays, by various creative stylists of Villanova, are alternated with the stories, thereby forming a smoothness of reading. The center of attraction is of course, the photographic essay on the pre-Easter retreat by William R. Bell and Francis Trainor.

Poetic contributions amount to three, all of which can be placed on an equal basis.

The lead story by Barrett is very good. The sequence of action is highly polished and easy to follow. The main characters, who are soldiers that become entangled in a unique situation, are stable and well-defined. Mexico and Texas, the backgrounds for the story, are vividly carried to the reader's mind. Although the actual plot of the story is at first held together on thin threads, and the dialogue sometimes tends to distract the reader, Barrett brings the narrative to a fine conclusion.

"Everglades," a poem by Robert F. Lima Jr., and "Vocation," by Patrick Nolan in my estimation stray from actual poetry but to counter-balance the scale, their use of "picturesque" wording provides the audience with a pleasant change in thought. Farley Robert's contribution, "When The Twilight Shadows Gather," is sound in meter but lacking in substantial thought matter.

In most cases I myself do not particularly care for essays, but on second glance a greater appreciation was established. "Medieval Essays by Christopher Dawson" as expounded on by Mark McCormick proves the author's ability to take into consideration the possibility of lack of interest or knowledge in essays. He definitely impresses one with the idea that essays aren't always stuffy reading.

The second short story, "Half a 'C' Note" by Patrick J. Nolan, reaches a par with past editions of the LYNX. The background of his story, which incidently is Bryn Mawr and "The Blue Heaven Diner," is excellent. The central personage, Sam Gerrity, "knight of the road," is firmly established but at the same time partially lost in a plot which I would term weak.

Peering . . .

By Dick Peer

At Eddie Condon and the Jazz Concert which got jazzier as the show went on. The public address system didn't work too well at first, so Ed turned on the juice. Apparently he liked the T n' T props that were used—he went back to look at them often enough.

At the Mothers who certainly made a day of it. In fact several of them made it a few days. One mother, who arrived Sunday for the T n' T show, remembered the Penna. blue laws, and unpacked a bottle on arrival.

At all the cars which suddenly appeared on campus. It was difficult to find anybody who needed a ride to anything. "No, thanks, sport, I've got my own," was the cry heard all over campus.

At a couple of the campus gentlemen who have placed orders for new Cadillacs and have made plans to summer in Europe. These are the capitalists who casually asked you if you'd like to get your flowers or your tux through them.

Into the Prom and at the various types of garment worn by those attending. Dinner jackets came in all colors, with a yellow-white most prevalent. There were a few pastel shades that even made the lighthouse blink.

At Palumbo's, the site of the Dinner Dance to end all dinner dancing. Great cauldrons of garlic sauce gurgled from within as waiters ran from table to table hawking ravioli. After several courses of potent little things everyone was ready to dance. One fellow started for the oance floor but soon retired—he just couldn't stand his date's breath.

More Opinion...

By Jim Nolin

The thought from this corner is that the Villanova student frequently fails to realize the advantage of an education acquired here, and takes for granted many of the things that impress the outside visitor to the campus. The problems arising out of the rapid influx of students into an almost as rapidly expanding University should not be raised out of proportion to the available advantages.

Better qualified than we, perhaps, to make comparisons with other schools, are those who have spent time elsewhere. A sampling of some opinions expressed by Law students relative to the merits and disadvantages of Villanova, is indicated here.

Joe Monaghan (Siena '54, National Collegiate Who's Who, Editor-in-Chief, Siena News): "The beauty of Villanova's campus, especially at this time of year, is very impressive. The bushes and flowers are arranged to show Villanova at its best.

"Although Villanova has a large resident population, and Siena is exclusively commuter, the spirit and participation in activities seems about equal.

"Also, with the large number of residents, I think the Dean of Discipline is performing what is necessarily a difficult job very effectively."

Jack Collins (Holy Cross '54, an editor of the Purple, literary quarterly) thinks that the idea of an original musical, like "Jessica James", would add to the Cross' activities. The Junior Week organization and follow-through also struck his interest.

"However," he observed," at Holy Cross there is more of an emphasis on acquisition of speakers for the student body," (similar to the past Villanova Forum series. Ed. note), "and the student backing of athletic contests seems to be more organized at Holy Cross."

Leo Golden, a Marine Corps veteran and graduate of Penn State, thinks that perhaps the larger resident body at Penn State led to a more solidified group, with no "resident-day-hop" antagonisms. Consequently, the Penn State student has strong school spirit which is carried over into the Alumni relations.

"The religious spirit here, though, seems quite strong, and is encouraged. This was missing at Penn State, despite the Newman Club and the Catholic fraternities, and is a great advantage to the Villanova student.

"Another attraction of Villanova is the beautiful, well laid out campus. The consistency of style of the buildings, with the excellent stonework, is indicative of a fine regard for architectural beauty.

"Before I graduate from here, though, I would like to see Villanova play Penn State in football." (Attn. Bud Dudley).

Jessica and Kin Reviewed: Expectations Surpassed

By Bernie Finan

Jessica James arrived "Bag and Baggage" at the Field House, Wednesday evening, April 27, and it will be a long time before her visit is forgotten.

From start to finish the show was everything that people have grown to expect from Turf and Tinsel. Musically, the show had a greater array of good songs than any show presented by T&T during my stay at Villanova. Acting-wise, I believe the cast was adequate all the way down the line, and exceptional in a few noteworthy instances.

Exceptional Singing

For example, Walt Doyle, returning for his third T&T role, played the blustering "Ma" to perfection. As in his two previous roles he had a Sophie Tucker conversation type song. In Jessica James this case was "Moonshine Bay." When he combined with Gene Donahue and a quartet on the song he was good, but he really blossomed when he had the stage to himself.

John Giordano also rates special mention for his portrayal of the rough and tough, but sentimental "Pa." I heard that "G. I." had a good voice, but it was a revelation to discover that he combines a good deal of stage presence with his singing ability. This was fairly evident in his production number "When the Gates are Ajar," but more so in "Pot of Gold," which seemed to be more his speed.

Newly Discovered Talent

Don Mattingly, who played the title role, is a real find for the T&T since he is only a sophomore. The acting involved in the part of Jessica wasn't too demanding, but Don was demure at the right moments. He scored best with the audience when he sang his "There's Nothing the Matter with Me," "Wayward Heart," and "Will Share." The latter, Don sang with Frank Hartmann, who played a romantic Pinkerton man. The audience got a special chuckle out of Don's answering "Pinky's" inviting "Will Share" with a light hearted "boop-da-da-bo." (I think that's how it went.)

Jim Borden had no trouble in fitting into the rather large shoes of "Zeke," the caveman lover. If Jim is trying to prove that his talent is universal, he certainly convinced the people who witnessed his romp in "Jessica James." His zany antics were particularly effective in the first act, during which he sang the tearful "My Sweetheart's Funeral."

Bit Parts Outstanding

In a short space, it is difficult, nay impossible, to sum up a T&T show. I would like to mention at greater length the excellent singing of Frank Hartmann, the ogling and capers of Wesley, the angel played by Paul Porreca, and the fun making of the mischievous Flotilda, Fergus, and Fungus, as played by the Messrs. Schiller, Blimm, and Padova, but I can not.

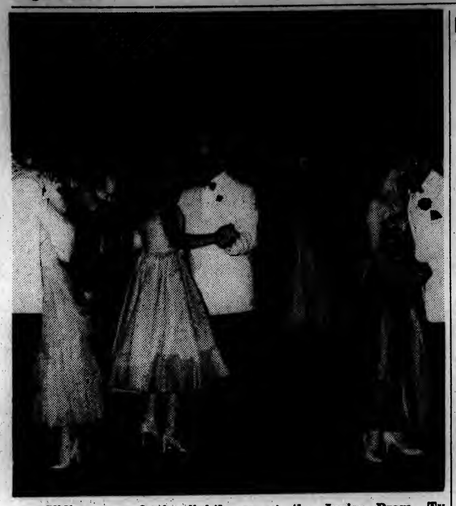
Turf and Tinsel's 1955 production, "Jessica James," was another success in the club's history. In this scene, the chorus just finished the opening number as Jessica (far right with parasol) makes her entrance on stage.

Let me conclude by saying that as always in musicals, enthusiasm can cover a multitude of theatrical sins. What flaws occured in Jessica James were over-balanced by the enjoyment it gave to its audience.

I'll be back for next year's show if I can make it.

When the campus queen beside you murmurs, "Gosh, I'll never pass!..."

Then turns to you and whispers, "Will you help me after class?"



M-m-man, that's PURE PLEASURE!

For more pure pleasure... SMOKE CAMELS!

No other cigarette is so rich-tasting, yet so mild!

P.S. No other brand has ever been able to match the pure pleasure in Camel's exclusive blend of costly tobaccos — one of the reasons why Camels are America's most popular cigarette!

Hickey Elected DPM President

Owen Hickey, junior history major, will take over the presidency of Delta Pi Mu fraternity tonight during the club's monthly meeting.

Hickey, who succeeds John De Remigis, heads a six-man slate which was voted into office last Thursday.

Assisting President Hickey

Assisting the new president next year will be Phil Taddeo, vice-president; Tom Smith, corresponding secretary; Jim Judge, recording secretary; Brendan Flynn, treasurer and Bob Ford, Student Council representative.

Tonight's meeting will convene at 7:30 in 201 Mendel.

Meanwhile, the fraternity definitely planned its annual dinner dance for Kostick's Restaurant May 14 at 7:30. Tickets, priced at $6.50, may be obtained from De Remigis (211 Fedigan), Mike Horan (305 Sullivan) and Don Alton (307 Sullivan).

'50 GRADUATE WINS

A fellowship towards a Doctorate at the University of Minnesota was awarded to Villanova graduate James Markham, Class of '50, Dr. Quam, head of Chemistry Department announced this week.

Since his departure from Villanova, Markham has worked for Penn Salt Co. and taken a Master's degree in Oceanography.

HISTORY

A reception for the senior history majors was held last Wednesday night at the Catholic Historical Society in Philadelphia under the sponsorship of the Department of History. Mr. Charles P. Bruderle, Assistant Professor of History, was in charge of the occasion. The gathering was completely informal and was attended by the members of the history department as well as by the senior majors in the field.

ICG

Frank Psyk, junior poiltical science major, is the new chairman of the Villanova Intercollegiate Conference on Government.

Replacing Don Seaton, Psyk will serve during 1955-56. He will be assisted by Vice-Chairman Lou Donatelli.

Robert Ryan, of the political science department, is the group's new secretary-treasurer.

Seaton will serve as ICG regional director in 1955-56.

Promise for Next Year:

'Lynx' Names Eddinger, Barrett to Co-Editorship

With a hint of great expectations for the coming year, Mr. James Mitchell of the English Department, co-moderator with Dr. Phillipson of the LYNX, announced this week the editorial staff of next year's literary magazine.

Joe Barrett of the C&F school and John Eddinger of Arts will serve as co-editors. These two were chosen for the job on the basis of literary talent and organizational ability as demonstrated in the past.

Mr. Mitchell.

Backing up the co-editors will be Barry Ballister, art editor, Robert Strayton, lay-out, and Robert Farley, poetry editor. Farley's poetical ability can be seen in the LYNX under the pen-name of Farley Roberts.

The publicity editorship goes to Clement Birch, who has done work of this nature for the VILLANOVAN this year. Ted Macri will handle Business and Circulation and Bill Smith and Frank Delany will work as co-copy editors.

Co-moderators and co-editors met this Monday to exchange ideas and plan the general meeting of the staff for this week.

BARRY HALL

Next Tuesday, May 17, is Armed Forces Day, and Barry Hall, the Naval Science Building, will be thrown open to the public. Villanova's NROTC unit announced that the open house will be from 2 to 3:30 p. m., and all the equipment will be in operation, including the radar and anti-submarine gear.

From 3:30 to 4:30 that afternoon the final parade of the year will be held in the stadium with presentation of awards. Very Rev. James A. Donnellon, O. S. A., University President, and Admiral Von Heinberg will present the awards and distinguished service emblems.

All students, faculty and friends are welcome to the events, it was announced.

PROM FAVORS IN

Extra prom favors may be obtained in the Pie Shoppe. There is no limit to the number that may be bought, but they will be sold for $1 on a first come, first served basis.

FACULTY WIVES

Newly-elected president Mrs. Alex Severance, wife of the varsity basketball coach and four other officers will be installed at a Faculty Wives' Club luncheon Saturday at the Westown Farm House.

Mrs. Severance will serve as president during 1955 - 56. Others elected: Mrs. Ray Adams, vice - president; Mrs. John McCartney, recording secretary; Mrs. Edward Monahan, corresponding secretary ; Mrs. Vito DiVincenzo, treasurer.

Marines Offer Another Plan On Training

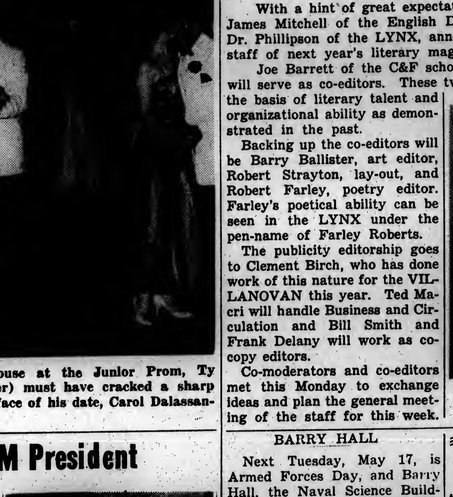
Gung ho for a career as a Marine flyer?

In a re-emphasis of its traditional air-ground relationship, the Marine Corps has announced a new training program for prospective Marine aviators.

The first new program for Marine officers since World War II, it has been termed the Aviation Officer Candidate Course. It will result in earlier commissions as second lieutenants for men who desire to become Marine pilots.

Supplementary Program

Previously all Marine flyers were drawn from the Naval Aviation Cadet Program or from the ranks of Marine officers on active duty. The new program is intended to supplement the present ones.



The AOCC will be offered to college graduates who will attend a 10-week indoctrination course at Quantico, Va., which will give them basic Marine Corps training, with an emphasis on the infantry aspects.

Reserve Commission Offered

Successful graduates of this orientation course will receive reserve commissions and be ordered to active duty as student aviators.

Applications for the Marine Aviation Officer Candidate Course are now being accepted. The first session is expected to convene at Quantico this fall.

Further information may be obtained at the Marine Office in Barry Hall.

Pictures To Print Praised

No facet of the VILLANOVAN was overlooked in the "praiseology" of the reviewers, e.g. "Your use of pictures is an excellent display device," "Very effective subheads" and "Both your typography and printing are above average."

The incoming editors for next year's VILLANOVAN now have a tradition to carry on.

Rosary At 4:30 Daily Before Shrine

As one of his first steps since becoming Dean of Women, Rev. Joseph J. Burns, O.S.A., has inaugurated the practice of daily recitation of the Rosary at the Mother of Good Counsel shrine on the campus.

Each May school day at 4:30 the Rosary is said at the year-old shrine, led by two basic nursing students.

Since May is the month universally devoted to the Blessed Virgin Mary, the daily devotions at the beautiful campus shrine are particularly appropriate.

Father Burns said he hoped a large number of students would join in the devotions and help to establish a new and fitting Villanova tradition.

Spanish Club Honors Two At Dinner Dance

Two Villanova students were honored during the annual Cervantes Night celebration in Norristown Apr. 29.

Joe Guisti, sophomore Arts student, won a diploma and medal from the Columbia University Spanish Institute for his Spanish composition on the life of Miquel de Cervantes.

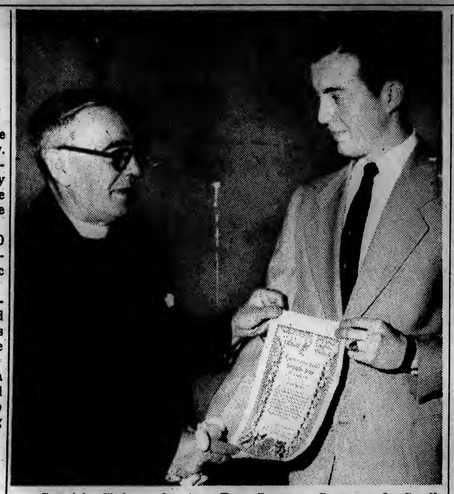
Cervantes Lauded In Verse

Robert Coleman, a freshman Arts student, was recognized for his poem on Cervantes which was judged by Rev. John McShea, O. S. A., of the English Department.

Besides the award presentations, Spanish students and their dates heard speeches by Mr. Javier Clarot, Spanish attache and Dr. Fore Maria Vilallonga, who is studying in American hospitals to obtain information about the American method for use in hospitals in Spain.

Favorable Impression

Mr. Clarot said he had formed a good impression of North American students and the way they have learned the Spanish language.



The affair was closed with dancing to the music of the Commodores.

Young Law School Library Praised

Result of a two-day visit to the Law School by Mr. John G. Hervey, Adviser to the Section on Legal Education of the American Bar Association, was a glowing letter of praise about the young school.

Especially commended was the "stupendous" job done on the library expansion by Dr. Arthur Pulling, former Librarian of the Harvard School of Law. Characterizing the Law library as the school's "crowning glory," Mr. Hervey had nothing but praise for the way it has grown in so short a time since the inception of the School of Law. Already there are more than 36,000 volumes in the Law Library.

The balance between age and youth on the faculty was also commended. They "supplement each other perfectly," said the Bar Association representative.

Spanish Club moderator, Rev. Lorenzo Lozano, O. S. A., hands Joe Guisti his prize for writing the winning Spanish essay on the life of Cervantes at the club's annual dinner dance.

Bath For Sergeant If Drill Team Wins

It might be well for M/Sgt. John Waryha of the Villanova NROTC unit to wear a bathing suit tomorrow, for if the Villanova NROTC drill team wins the Greater Philadelphia ROTC championship in Franklin Field today, the sergeant will receive a traditional dip in Mendel pool.

Sergeant Waryha found himself in the pool last Wednesday because of the victory of the drill team the previous weekend at Penn State where they competed as Company W with other companies of the 5th Regiment of the Pershing Rifles in the basic division. There they won first place in the fancy drill over nine other teams.

A Hard One To Lose

At the same time Villanova's NROTC rifle team took second in the rifle competition only three points behind a winning Duquesne team. The team in third place trailed Villanova by 200 points.

A banquet followed the competition on Saturday (Apr. 30) and this in turn was followed by a semi-formal military ball.

Half-Time Performance

Each team in the competition voted an outstanding member. The Villanova team voted Stan McGeehan as its outstanding member. McGeehan, along with Bill Doyle, wrote the words to a song for the team titled "Men of the Pershing Rifles." This is sung to the tune of "I've Been Working on the Railroad" or the "Marine's Hymn."

The team also performed last Saturday between halves of the varsity vs. old-timers football game.

Student Council To Install Officers for Next Year

This Thursday, May 12, at 7:15 p. m. in C&F Auditorium the Student Council will hold its final organization meeting of the year.

On the meeting's agenda will be the election and installation of next year's SC officers, as the present Council closes out its season.

The outgoing council officers are Chairman Dick Winfield, Vice-chairman Dick Peer and Secretary Don McGahan. Both Winfield and McGahan are seniors, while Peer is a junior.

The Ins And The Outs

The meeting will be a joint meeting since all 47 members of the "old" '54-'55 council must attend, as well as the "new" members elected to the Council only a few hours before. These latter include class presidents, and SC representatives from classes and member organizations.

That same day the Council will supervise the class elections from 10 a. m. to 3 p. m.

Last Tuesday, April 10, saw the last regular business meeting of the Council.

Michael von Moschzisker:

Outstanding Lawyer Is Named to Law Faculty

Appointment of Michael von Moschzisker, of the firm of McBride and von Moschzisker, to the faculty of the Law School, was announced today by Dean Harold Gill Reuschlein.

Mr. von Moschzisker will be a Lecturer on Law.

An outstanding practitioner in the criminal law field, he served two years with the District Attorney's office as First Assistant District Attorney before he and Thomas McBride formed their present association in November, 1954, and represented Philadelphia at the 1952 convention of the District Attorney's Association of Pennsylvania.

Michael von Moschzisker

Cum Laude Graduate

Mr. von Moschzisker graduated from Yale in 1940, enlisted in the U. S. Army as a private in December, 1941, and rose to the rank of captain before his discharge in December, 1945. He graduated cum laude from the University of Pennsylvania Law School in 1947, where he had been an editor of the Law Review, receiving at graduation prizes for Pennsylvania Civil Practice and for Evidence, Pleading, and Civil Procedure.

Prior to his term in the District Attorney's office, the new instructor was associated with Montgomery, McCracken, Walker, and Rhodes for a year, and for four years with his present partner, Thomas D. McBride.

Mr. von Moschzisker will continue his private practice. Earlier in the year he was a member of the Bar Association panel which visited Villanova.

Out Next Week:

Explanation of Color TV Contained in 'Engineer'

The May issue of the VILLANOVA ENGINEER will be distributed to Engineering students sometime next week, announced Editor Dick Spangenberg.

The issue will feature an article on "The Thermal Barrier" by Dick Schleicher. This article describes the problems of heat generation facing areonautical engineers in the design of supersonic aircraft.

Jack Krumm and the Diesel

Jack Krumm has written an article on "Diesel Engines," with special emphasis on some new theories which will eventually result in much smaller engines capable of maintaining ever larger output.

Leonard Bellanca has written an article on "Professional Engineering Registration," and a general synopsis of registration laws in Pennsylvania is included.

Color TV Explained

Mike Polgar and "Spider" McEowen have teamed up once again. This time their article on "Color Television" provides an explanation of the basic scheme of color TV., and special attention is paid to the mechanics of color mixing from the basic colors.

Spangenberg also announced that the annual dinner for the ENGINEER staff will be held Thursday night, May 19, at the Clover Leaf Inn, located in the Baltimore Pike (U. S. Route No. 1) about three miles west of Media.

OPERA-CLASSICA CLUB

Verdi's "La Traviata" is the third and final offering of the season of the Opera-Classica Club at 7:30 p. m. Tuesday in Barry Lounge.

Club moderator, Mr. A. L. Angeline, noted that the opera is light and gay and that all students—whether they are familiar or not with classical music—are invited to listen to the recordings.

Crowds Thrill to Blue-White Day Performances

Varsity Teams Win All But One at 3rd Annual Affair

By Bill Brown

Bud Dudley's large economy size sports package was a huge success last Saturday. Those who saw the third annual Blue-White Day were throughly entertained by the congregation of athletes.

At Aronomink C. C., the varsity golf team set down a squad of Old Timers 5½-4½.

Arizin Paces Grads

The return of Paul Arizin to a Villanova uniform signalled the defeat of the varsity by the Old (?) Timers. Arizin led the Old Timers with 22 points. Schafer followed with 12. Maje. McDonald, the fashion expert, entered the game elgantly dressed in sport shirt and slacks. Despite determined efforts by the varsity, they wound up on the short end of a 65-56 score.

Dan Severino took Seton Hall in hand as the boys from New Jersey lost to Villanova 13-3. Dan allowed seven hits while his teammates tapped two Pirate pitchers for 14 safeties. Severino struck out 9.

Track Records Broken

Jim Elliot's highly touted track team tangled with LaSalle and smoothered the Olneyites under a 70-46 score. The fans were treated to sparkling performances by Don Bragg and LaSalle's Al Cantello. Bragg vaulted to a height of 14'8½" which is a new track record and also the highest outdoor vault of this year. Cantello's javelin toss of 224'-5¾" is also a new track record. Villanova's Giordano was second in the javelin throw tossing 188'8". Alex was a double winner for the cats, taking the 1 and 2 mile events. Both the discus and the shot put events were taken by Jim Fahey. His distances were 132' 11" and 50'6¼" respectively. LaSalle's Tony Spodabalski first in the 100 and the broad jump. Charley Jenkins, who should be reported to the C.A.A. for flying without a license, broke the tape to win the 440 in 48.1.

Soccer At Villanova

Soccer was a feature of the day when the Uhrik Truckers, champs of the A.S.L., met the Little Club in Goodreau Station. The Uhriks won 4-0. Mike Pauz, a Villanova student, scored one of the goals. Jim Lafferty, a Scot, scored the three other goals.

Bud Dudley

Michaels Vs. Michaels

Only Dudley would schedule football in May. As a result the varsity defeated a team of Old Timers 21-0. A father-son note was added by the play of Eddie Michael, Sr. for the Old Timers and Eddie Michaels, Jr. for the varsity. The elder Michaels, playing sans helmet, gave no quarter and doubtless surprised many of the varsity by his hard playing. The varsity realized why this 1936 graduate was an All-American. The varsity combined Ferroulo passing to Cassidy for two touchdowns. Tony Esgro played into the end zone for the remaining tally. The Swim-O-Rama, in the Fieldhouse pool, provided a fitting finish for Dudley's Day.

ENGAGEMENT

Engagement of Phil Butler, junior education major to Mary Lou Manis, a former Villanova nursing student has been announced.

Miss Manis entered Villanova in September 1953. She is now a student at Immaculata College.

Intramural Soft-Ball Concludes With Play-Offs

By Joe Kinney

The first-place finishers of the eight softball leagues in the Intramural Tournament will stage an elimination series this week to determine the campus champs and to conclude the school year's intramural activities.

The "K" men of the Austin Field 10:30 a. m. league and the Big Timers, representatives of the Late League, were the first to annex their division titles.

Lemon Heads,

Early Timers Undefeated

The Lemon Heads of the 4:30 Austin loop and the Early Timers, winners of the 4:30 p. m. Simpson League, completed their regular season with identical logs of 4-0 to claim the crown for their respective groups.

The Delurey Devils and the Unknowns, each victorious in all four outings, were declared co-champions of the 5:30 Austin League but will meet to determine which squad will represent its division in the play-offs.

Inclement weather, which postponed many early season games, was the reason for the delay in producing the titlists of the remaining three circuits at this late date.

The leaders at the present time will be named the champions, however, since the remaining scholastic calendar does not provide sufficient time for these games to be made up.

Track Meet Tomorrow

Anyone interested in participating in the Intramural Track Meet should sign up in 112 Alumni Hall, the Intramural office, today, no later than 4:30 p. m. The events for the meet wil be held tomorrow afternoon at 3 p. m. at the stadium, and are open to all students with the exception of the members of the Varsity track and field squad.

Awards will be presented to the team and individual champions of all intramural sports during an assembly at the Field House on May 16.

Severino Goes the Route:

Sixth Straight Win As Wildcats Drub Setonia

By Bob Strayton

Recording their sixth straight victory, Villanova's aggressive baseballing squad soundly trounced the Seton Hall Pirates, 13-3, in a game played at Villanova last Saturday.

For the Wildcats, it was also their second victory over Setonia this year. They have yet to lose to the South Orange team.

Danny Severino, the fire-balling right-hander for Art Mahan's proteges, took the mound for Villanova, and conducted himself as a pitcher should, allowing just seven hits and striking out nine.

Five Runs In First

From the opening stanza, there was no question of which was the superior team. Villanova blanked the Pirates in the top of the first, and came back in the bottom of that frame to rally five runs across the plate, and send two Seton Hall pitchers scattering.

Coach Art Mahan

Then again in the fourth, while Seton Hall was still trying to bring home its initial tally of the game, Villanova punched out four more markers on three of the Wildcat's 14 hits.

Seton Hall returned in the next frame to counter with a single run, but that was bettered when Villanova came to bat and added three more runs to the scoring parade.

Severino still continued his mastery over the Pirates until the top of the ninth, when the tiring junior allowed Setonia to drench the sacks twice, resulting in two runs being scored. But, by that time, Villanova had recorded thirteen runs, and was comfortably ahead, and so the ball game was won by the 'Cats, 13-3.

DiGiollorenzo Gets Two Doubles

Big guns in the Villanova line-up were sophomore Johnny DiGiollorenzo, who notched two doubles during the game, shortstop Don LaMontagne, with a triple and single, Dave Hinnegan, who got three singles, and Bill McGarry, with two singles.

Aside from the other festivities which were going on at the well-packed Villanova Stadium, the Varsity was successful in seeking and finding its sixth straight victory of the season. Thus far, they have defeated Vermont, Princeton, Seton Hall twice, Loyola, Rutgers, St. Peter's, LaSalle and Penn.

Losses have been to Ithaca, Dartmouth, Army, West Chester.

The team's record now stands at 9 victories and 4 losses.

Four Contests Face Baseball Team

Four varsity baseball games will headline the coming sports program for next week, as two games with St. Joseph's, and one apiece with Rutgers and West Chester will provide competition for Villanova's embattled diamond-men.

The golf and track teams will also engage foes as they meet with Drexel Friday, and Georgetown Saturday, respectively.

It will be the first time that Art Mahan's nine has encountered the Hawks when they meet the St. Joseph's team this afternoon at the Field House stadium. They will repeat the engagement at St. Joseph's again Monday.

Villanova Holds Edge

The Rutgers game, which will be played tomorrow afternoon at home, will be the second time that both clubs have met this year. Villanova holds the one-game edge, having drubbed the South Jerseyites 12-0 in the previous meeting two weeks ago.

West Chester, the local nemesis for the Wildcats, has a one game advantage over Villanova, in the seasonal rivalry. That game will be played at West Chester on Saturday, May 14.

Drexel Versus Golfers

The golf team, which has enjoyed a highly successful season thus far, competes against Drexel's linksmen on Friday, while Charlie Jenkins and his track cohorts, are running against Georgetown in a dual meet to be held on Saturday in Washington.

Dan Severino

Swimming Coach Geisz Honored At Team Party

Villanova's varsity swimmers seem to have hopes of setting some new pool records next season.

At any rate they made sure their coaches will be able to clock them accurately next year when they presented stop watches to Head Coach Ed Geisz and Freshman Coach Dave Rowan at the team's annual party at the Malta Boat Club.

The team also presented Captain Pat Kean with a memento after Geisz had awarded five-inch monograms to letter winners.

Penn Relay Glory

By Darryl Ditenfest

"Villanova University, which never before won a major race in the Penn Relay Carnival, came to life in an exciting last hour yesterday to take four first places and set two of the six meet records before a crowd of 25,000 on Franklin Field." This paragraph was the lead of a story appearing in the Philadelphia Sunday Bulletin, May 1, describing the greatest hour in track of Coach "Jumbo" Elliott and his youthful cinder squad.

The Wildcats were only an hour away from duplicating non-winning performances of sixty previous relay carnivals. Charlie Jenkins, IC4A indoor 600-yard champion, galloped a half-mile in 1:51.7 to bring the first United States relay championship, the sprint medley, to the Main Line. Jenkins was preceded by Jim Moran (440), and Gene Maliff and Warner Heitmann (220-yards each).

Villanova's previous relay victories were in the freshman mile relay, 1932, and the division II one mile relay in 1942. Individual victories were recorded by J. F. O'Connell, 1907 broad jump competition, John DiCarlo, 400-meter hurdles in 1946. Cummin Clancy was the last gold medal winner, taking the discus throw in 1951.

Frosh Set Record

A crack frosh relay contingent of George Sydnor, Walt Budney, Rowland Simpson, and Ron Delaney won their trial heat despite the loss of the baton on the initial leg. Delaney's final sprint carried him past Fordham's anchor man. Following the victory of the sprint medley team, the frosh returned to set a new meet record with the amazing clocking of 3:18.4.

Bragg Tops Morcom's Mark

Don Bragg added Villanova's second record of the afternoon with a vault of 14'4¼". One of the first to congratulate Don was the former record-holder Richard (Boo) Morcom, athletic director at Penn. Bragg failed in his first two attempts to clear 13 feet, but easily cleared the barrier on his third and last try.

Moran, Maliff, Heitmann, Jenkins Repeat

These triumphs set the stage for a one man show in the mile finale. Moran, Maliff, and Heitmann again ran the first three legs. Jenkins, thirty yards behind in fourth place, decided to make a race of it, and ran what is believed to be the fastest quarter mile at Franklin Field, 46.5. Jenkins exploded off the last turn, and brought 25,000 people to their feet as he passed Cornell's Andy Dadagian and Morgan State's Josh Culbreath in the stretch to conclude Villanova's most outstanding day on the cinder paths.

Bragg Sets New Pole-Vault Mark Against LaSalle

It was called Blue-White Day, but more certainly it was Don Bragg Day.

The tall, handsome Villanova sophomore performed a feat last Saturday during the Blue-White Day track meet, that no one else in the United States has been able to accomplish yet this year.

Trackman Don Bragg

The meet, which was against LaSalle, saw the Explorers get routed by the precision trackmen of Villanova, 70-46. The 3,500 spectators on hand, however, never for a moment took an eye off the great sophomore pole-vaulter, as he tried time again to break into the 15 foot category, after he made history with his soar of 14 feet, 8½ inches, better than any one in the U. S. has vaulted this year.

Aside from Bragg's pole-vaulting feat, Al Cantello, a talented LaSalle javelin-thrower, also broke a record. Cantello tossed the stick 224 feet, 1⅜, setting a new mark for the University. Villanova's Johnny Giordano followed suit by tossing the javelin 188 feet, 8 inches, which also bettered the former mark by some six feet.

In other phases of track competition during the meet, Villanova's Jim Fahey won both the discus and the shot-put, with heaves of 132 ft. 11 inches and 50 ft. 6 ins. respectively.

Tony Spodabalski was a double winner at the meet, and also individual high-scorer. He won the 100 yd. dash, and the high jump, and placed second in the 220 yd. dash.

Other double winners included Fahey, and his teammate on the cinders, Alex Breckenridge, who garnered first place honors in the mile and two mile events.

Charlie Jenkins, naturally, again was successful in winning his pet 440 yd. run in an easy manner. Charlie posted a 48.1 time for the event, in which there was little competition for the productive sophomore.

With four previous meets during the outdoor track season already encountered, and with three of those meets, the last three, excellent encounters, it was expected that Villanova would win the meet, which it did so regally, with Don Bragg leading the way.

Three meets remain for the Wildcats during the NCAA slate. Georgetown plays host to the Cats on Saturday next, while the team also will face St. Joseph's in a dual meet May 21, and the IC4A's which will be held on May 28.

Golfers Beat Old-Timers In Exhibit Match

By Paul Clarkson

Continuing in their winning groove, Villanova's varsity golfers took on a skilled Old-Timers aggregation at Aronomink Country Club last Saturday, and beat the Old-Timers 5-4 in the exhibition round.

The squad of Fred Anton, Lou Blanchet, Ben Klemanowicz, Charlie Stone, and Bob McElhaney took on the veteran linksmen, and came out victorious in the red-hot round, which was played also on a wiltingly hot day.

Other meets which the Varsity divoteers have debited to the win side of the ledger are LaSalle, and Penn, while losing 6-1 to a strong Princeton team.

The Penn match, which was won by Villanova in the close 4-3, saw Blanchet fight it out with Penn's Charlie Adams into the 21st hole, in order to break the 3-3 deadlock. Blanchet was successful, as he played the final three holes under-par to make up a three stroke deficit which he had on the 16th.

The match with LaSalle was a complete drubbing for the Explorer linksmen, as they were bombarded 8-1 by Villanova, whose team members have turned in red-hot scores in recent matches.

Ben Klemanowicz was the lone winner for Villanova in a match played with the Tigers from Princeton two weeks ago. The sophomore golfer carded a sensational 71 for a grueling one-over-par performance in the 6-1 loss.

"Jumbo" Elliot's Proteges:

'Exceptional' Freshmen Already Nationally Known

By Joe Heaps

It isn't often that a Freshman group of athletes acquires a name for itself. Even outstanding Frosh sportsmen must generally wait until varsity competition to gain recognition. A notable exception to this state of affairs is the Villanovan Freshman mile relay team, consisting of George Sydnor, Walt Budney, Roland Simpson, and Ronnie Delaney.

Several factors are responsible for recognition of the fleet quartet. First, there are the team's brilliant winning efforts in the New York and Penn Relays. Their victory in the Penn Relays in the time of 3.18.4 set a new meet and American record for freshman teams. Also, the names of two of the members of the relay team—Ronnie Delaney and George Sydnor—were already familiar to track fans because of the fine performances of these runners in the winter indoor meets.

Perhaps a review of the quartet's achievements in the Penn Relays will best disclose the talent of the swift foursome.

Great In Penn Relays

In the trial heat, Sydnor, who leads off, committed the usually fatal error of relay teams. He dropped the baton. By the time he had recovered it and regained his stride, he was 25 yards behind. Walt Budney then ran the fastest quarter of his life—50.4 seconds— to make up some of the lost distance. Simpson and Delaney each displayed championship form to catch their rival runners and win the heat for Villanova.

Lead All The Way

The finals were an entirely different story. Sydnor broke in front and the Wildcats never lost the lead. Each man increased the margin until anchor man Delaney coasted home 50 yards ahead of the field. Simpson and Delaney ran 48.1 and 48.7 second quarters, respectively as part of the record time of 3.18.4.

An amazing fact about the relay team is that only one man—Roland Simpson—is a regular quarter-miler. Both Sydnor and Budney are dash men, and jack-of-all-distances Delaney runs any thing from the hundred to the mile. This past winter he specialized in the half mile and thousand yard run.

...Big Day In A Nurse's Life...

Future nurses at work . . . Winnie Daly checks her watch while Rita Shigo works in the background.

Sister Alma
Nursing Division Director

"I solemnly pledge myself before God . . . to pass my life in purity . . . practice my profession faithfully . . . and devote myself to the welfare of those committed to my care."

With these words of dedication, Villanova nursing students marked the first milestone in their nursing careers. The capping exercise, which was held May 8, culminated two years of academic training here on Villanova's campus. The remaining two years will initiate the professional portion of their degree in nursing.

Instruction in theory and practical experience will continue to be directed by the faculty of Villanova University but shall be carried out in designated hospitals and health agencies for periods of twelve weeks each. Some of the hospitals cooperating in Villanova's program are Fitzgerald-Mercy, Misericordia, St. Agnes, St. Mary's and Children hospitals and the State Tuberculosis Sanatorium in Hamburg, Pa. At the successful completion of this combined academic and professional curriculum of four calendar years, the Villanova nurse will receive a baccalaureate degree in nursing and will be eligible for licensure as a registered nurse following successful completion of the State Board examinations.

However, a good nurse must "not only have technical knowledge, thoroughly acquired and constantly kept up to date but nursing demands complete dedication to the patient," which is born, nourished and fed by the spirit of Christ. Implying a cultivation of self-denial, purity of heart and a fineness of conscience, this spirit will stimulate the growth of the patient's mind and spirit as well as his body.

The basic collegiate nursing program of Villanova University provides the opportunities necessary for building this nuclear foundation in the Catholic nurse. Enveloped in the true Christian atmosphere of this University, the Villanova nurse develops the strong will and keen moral sense so essential to the complete attainment of her goal.

Student Nurse's Cap

All schools of nursing have their own original cap but, though numerous varieties exist, all nurses' caps have the same deep significance of dedication. It is a badge of honor, love and trust, symbolizing the vocational aspect of the nursing profession. The capped nurse is keenly aware of the fact that she represents not only the very best in technical skill and professional competence and outstanding Christian womanhood, but she has been entrusted with the care of the human soul as well.

Sister Margarella
Nursing Division Director

It is her privilege in answering the call to the ministry of His afflicted "to guide and accompany souls to the very threshold of eternity." Her activities as a Christian nurse transcend the material and ascend to the very heights of heaven to there become blended with the works of God.

The white student cap of Villanova University's school of nursing also has special significance displaying love and loyalty to the school itself. When opened, it was designed to be in the shape of a Host illustrating the bond of unity as members of the Mystical Body of Christ; when closed and in shape for wearing, the three small points at the top symbolize the bishop's mitre revealed in the Augustinian seal; the back displaying a blue "V" which connotes the school colors. The same idea of color significance is reverted to in the uniform except a white "V" is exhibited on a blue background.

OUR CAP

"Our cap, shaped as a Sacred Host, symbolizes the life which is vital to each who aspires to happiness as an angel of mercy.

Our cap signifies the living criteria by which true success is measured. It speaks for virtues noble and pure; it speaks for ideals lofty and sure.

Our cap carries Mary's colors, white and blue; it carries Villanova's blue and white. Our cap marks a woman, a reflection of Mary, the Image of Christ."

Taking their first steps toward a professional nursing career, the six nursing students profess themselves to Christ's ideals in the pursuit of their duties.

Villanova's first class of nurses (in capes) leaves Library Sunday after capping exercises.

A. S. C. E.

The Villanova student chapter of the American Society of Civil Engineers will hold its semi-annual field trip this Friday.

The trip will be to a portion of the Garden State Parkway now under construction in Cape May County, N. J. The members will provide their own transportation on the trip, and will assemble at the Beesley's Point Bridge near Somer's Point, N. J. at 10:30 a. m.

Afternoon Tour

Tour of the project will last about three and a half hours, so that everyone should be back by dinner time.

The last ASCE meeting of the year will be held next Wednesday night. There will be several films, refreshments, and the officers for next year will be announced. Elections are being held this week.

Library

Miss Emily Maloney took a memorial membership in the Library in memory of her late brother Ben Maloney. Maloney, a Villanova graduate, was editor of the VILLANOVAN while here. He was killed in an airplane crash during World War II.

An old friend of the Library, Miss Maloney contributed Currier and Ives prints to the Library in 1953.

Chemistry

On Apr. 30, a meeting of the Pennsylvania Catholic Round Table of Science was held at Villanova from 8:00 a. m. until late in the afternoon. Those attending were welcomed by Very Rev. James A. Donnellon, O. S. A., University President.

Following a business meeting and election of new officers, Dr. Francis Mahoney, Radiologist and Director of Professional education of the American Cancer Society (Delaware County Branch), spoke on "Future Trends in Cancer Research."

In the afternoon the meeting divided into three distinct sections: Chemistry, Physics and Biology. The Chemistry section was further divided into an Analytical, Physical and Organic Chemistry section and an Organic and Biochemistry section.

Benediction closed the successful meeting.

Merit Awards Assembly

Merit awards, academic prizes and intramural athletic awards will be distributed during an assembly Monday in the Field House at 1:30 p.m.

Rev. George McLuaghlin, O.S.A., Dean of Student Activities, is in charge of the assembly.

No classes or laboratory sessions will meet during the 1:30 to 2:20 period.

I. R. S.

Elections for next year's officers of the International Relations Society were held last Tuesday. Junior history major Phil Taddeo was elected president of the group. He succeeds Bill Quinn.

Also elected were Pete Quinn, a junior history major, vice-president; Frank Adams, junior philosophy major, secretary-treasurer; and Pat Kean, junior arts, Student Council representative.

Plans are now being made for an increased program of guest lectures and field trips next year, Taddeo announced.

Physics Club

Elections and constitutional legislature will be the order of the day at the final meeting of the Physics Club Thursday, 10:30, in the Physics Lab.

According to the club's unique system of filling offices, the members will choose a President from among the seniors, a Student Council Representative from among the juniors and a Treasurer from among the sophomores. After the first quarter of next year the post of Secretary will be filled by an elected Freshman.

Constitution Framing

The working constitution of this year will be formalized by the addition of a few regulatory laws to the statement of purpose, said current president, Dave Vachon.

Chapel

Rev. Joseph Kemme, O. S. A., University Chaplain, announced this week that there has been a "noticeable" increase in Chapel attendance during the past academic year.

This fact, coupled with the large number of communions distributed during the annual retreat, has brought him satisfaction, Father Kemme said.

Illuminating Meeting

The joint A.I.E.E. - I.R.E. branch is holding a meeting tonight at 7:30 p. m. in 215 Mendel. The topic of the meeting will be "Illumination."

Chairman Jim Wrzesinski urges all who intend to make the all-day field trip to the Bell Laboratories in Murray Hill, N. J., tomorrow, or the group's annual picnic at Mermaid Lake this Saturday, to attend the meeting. Tickets for the latter event are available from Wrzesinski, Rudy Gangemi, Jack Downing or Gene Rzodkiewicz at $1.50 a head.

Student Council

The entire '54-'55 Student Council will attend the 9 a. m. Mass in the University Chapel on Ascension Thursday, May 19.

Following the Mass, Communion Breakfast for the group will be held at the Viking Inn in Ardmore. Rev. Robert M. Sullivan, O. S. A., Dean of the School of Arts and Sciences, will be the guest speaker at the breakfast.

COMMENCEMENT

Bill Quinn, senior history major, will deliver the commencement address at the Class of 1955 graduation exercises June 6. He was selected in final judging Monday. Runner up for the honor was Joseph Dorris, of the C & F School.

Men Honored At Annual Merit Awards Assembly

Dick Winfield and Frank Gunther are the recipients of the Gold Medal, awarded annually to the senior who gathers the most merit awards during four year.

Presentation was made during the Merit Award assembly at the same time that 271 students received 432 awards.

Winfield and Frank Gunther, senior history major, were recognized for earning the most awards (6) for the past year. Six other student took five awards each and 10 more students had four each.

Other Varities

Taking five awards were Joe Blimm, Bernie Coyne, Edwin Daly, Tom Mentzer and Bill Quinn—all seniors—and Pat Kean, a junior.

Intramural athletic awards, LYNX short story contest prizes and special awards were also presented during the assembly.

Dave Crowley was awarded the Intramural Department's trophy for the outstanding intramural athlete.

President Speaks

Merit awards are presented to students who have shown consistent and effective cooperation in extra-curricular activities and enjoy good scholastic standing.

Closing the assembly was a short talk by Very Rev. James A. Donnellon, O. S. A., Villanova president, and the playing of the Alma Mater by Mr. Robert Whelan.

SYMPATHY

The staff of the VILLANOVAN extends its sympathy to Jack Dunn, a sophomore in the C&F School and an assistant in the Chaplain's Office, on the death of his father.

Enthusiasm, curiosity, and political interest galore was the by-word in front and around Alumni gym last Thursday during class elections.

William Quinn Valedictorian Of Ceremonies

Sen. Styles Bridges (R-NH) will address the Class of 1955 at commencement exercises June 6. The senator and four others will be awarded honorary degrees during the ceremonies.

Receiving honorary LL. D. degrees, besides Senator Bridges, are: Bishop Paul Yamaguchi, of Nagasaki, Japan; Brother E. Stanislaus, F.S.C., president of La Salle College; Edwin K. Daly, president of the Horn and Hardart Baking Co.

An honorary doctor of science degree will be conferred on Capt. Joseph A. McHenry, USN, deputy chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks and a Villanova alumnus.

For the third consecutive year a senior who will be commissioned in naval service will deliver the student commencement address.

William J. Quinn, a day hop from Ithan, Pa., is a history major. He attended Bishop Loughlin High School in Brooklyn before moving to Ithan.

Quinn was chosen from a field of 12 candidates, who were named by deans of their respective schools. In this selection academic standing, extra-curricular activities and general presentability were considered.

The top six candidates competed in an oratorical contest May 9 to determine their speaking ability. Runner up in the contest was Joseph Dorris, of the C & F School.

Others in Running

Other candidates in the final contest were Thomas Mentzer, from the Arts and Sciences School; Paul Ake, from the C & F School; Joseph Distel and James Wrzensinski, of the Engi-

Hartmann, Laughlin Elected; Soph Deadlock Is Settled

A myriad of posters and placards as numerous and colorful as the candidates themselves tells the story of election day at Villanova last Thursday, as some 73% of the university's students turned out to chose 27 representatives.

Seventy-six percent of the junior class visited the polls to name Frank Hartmann next year's Senior Class President. This turn out was slightly under the record showing of that class last year.

Sophomores had the highest turnout as 79% marked their ballots and declared a tie between Art Odabash and Jack Decker for the future junior presidency. The run-off election was scheduled for yesterday.

Only 63% of the eligible freshman used their voting privilege however, but they overwhelmingly elected Paul Laughlin to the Sophomore Class presidency.

Recounts and disputes were the order of the day, but balloting itself proceeded very smoothly under the direction of the Student Council's Election Committee headed by Frank Licopoli.

Voting lasted from 10:00 a. m. to 3 p. m. with the heaviest being during the 10:30 a. m. activities period. A highlight of the day was the voting of the Nursing School co-eds en masse in Alumni Gym.

An excited milling crowd of nearly 100 would-be winners and constituents awaited the decisions of the vox populi in the Alumni Hall shadows after the 3 p. m. poll closing.

The results of the decisive freshman voting were announced quickly, and all the winners were disclosed by 4:30 p. m.

Class of '57

Faced with the first presidential tie in the institution's history, the Class of 1957 went to the polls in Alumni Gym yesterday to choose its top man.

The contestants, both of whom compiled 135 last Thursday during regular voting, were Art Odabash and Jack Decker.

Record Turnout

Casting ballots Thursday was 79 per cent of the class — a record which equalled the mark made by the Class of 1956 last May as it chose the men who would prepare for Junior Week.

The victories by the three other officers were more clear-cut. Don Kelly, a civil engineer from Richmond Hill, N. Y., swept into the vice-presidency. Mike Boruch, of the C & F School and a candidate for an end post on the varsity football team, rode into the secretary's post by a 38-vote margin. Boruch lives in Plainfield, N. J.

Tom Hooker, a day hop engineer from Wayne, was re-elected class treasurer by 49 votes.

Soph Mike Clark Elected President of Belle Masque

Three Arts and Sciences sophomores—two from northern New York—have swept all three offices of the Belle Masque dramatic society for 1955-56.

Topping the three-man slate was Mike Clark, a graduate of Aquinas Institute in Rochester, N. Y., who takes over the presidency. His predecessor, Bill Cunningham, had served two years.

Jim Judge, from Lockport, N. Y., will serve as secretary-treasurer and Tom Curran, from Cliffside Park, N. J., will be Student Council representative.

Clark has appeared in three Belle Masque productions, "Stalag 17," "Admirable Crichton," and "Harvey."

PAPER MEETING

Anyone interested in working for the VILLANOVAN next year in any capacity other than on the circulation staff should attend a meeting this afternoon at 4:30 in the newspaper office. The office is located in the basement of the C&F Building.

Dick Peer New SC Head; O'Rourke, Quinn Officers

Three men—two of whom were elected to Council a few hours before—were elevated to the three Student Council offices Thursday night during a meeting of the old and new Councils.

Dick Peer, a C & F junior, will serve as Council chairman during 1955-56. Jack O'Rourke, a civil engineer and retiring president of the Class of 1957, will be vice-chairman and Pete Quinn, a day hop history major, is the new secretary.

Brothers also win

Brothers of Peer and O'Rourke were also winners in Thursday's elections and Quinn's brother Bill has been named commencement speaker for the Class of 1955.

A. S. C. E.

The Villanova student chapter of the American Society of Civil Engineers will hold its semi-annual field trip this Friday.

The trip will be to a portion of the Garden State Parkway now under construction in Cape May County, N. J. The members will provide their own transportation on the trip, and will assemble at the Beesley's Point Bridge near Somer's Point, N. J. at 10:30 a. m.

Afternoon Tour

Tour of the project will last about three and a half hours, so that everyone should be back by dinner time.

The last ASCE meeting of the year will be held next Wednesday night. There will be several films, refreshments, and the officers for next year will be announced. Elections are being held this week.

Library

Miss Emily Maloney took a memorial membership in the Library in memory of her late brother Ben Maloney. Maloney, a Villanova graduate, was editor of the VILLANOVAN while here. He was killed in an airplane crash during World War II.

An old friend of the Library, Miss Maloney contributed Currier and Ives prints to the Library in 1953.

Chemistry

On Apr. 30, a meeting of the Pennsylvania Catholic Round Table of Science was held at Villanova from 8:00 a. m. until late in the afternoon. Those attending were welcomed by Very Rev. James A. Donnellon, O. S. A., University President.

Following a business meeting and election of new officers, Dr. Francis Mahoney, Radiologist and Director of Professional education of the American Cancer Society (Delaware County Branch), spoke on "Future Trends in Cancer Research."

In the afternoon the meeting divided into three distinct sections: Chemistry, Physics and Biology. The Chemistry section was further divided into an Analytical, Physical and Organic Chemistry section and an Organic and Biochemistry section.

Benediction closed the successful meeting.

Merit Awards Assembly

Merit awards, academic prizes and intramural athletic awards will be distributed during an assembly Monday in the Field House at 1:30 p.m.

Rev. George McLuaghlin, O.S.A., Dean of Student Activities, is in charge of the assembly.

No classes or laboratory sessions will meet during the 1:30 to 2:20 period.

I. R. S.

Elections for next year's officers of the International Relations Society were held last Tuesday. Junior history major Phil Taddeo was elected president of the group. He succeeds Bill Quinn.

Also elected were Pete Quinn, a junior history major, vice-president; Frank Adams, junior philosophy major, secretary-treasurer; and Pat Kean, junior arts, Student Council representative.

Plans are now being made for an increased program of guest lectures and field trips next year, Taddeo announced.

Physics Club

Elections and constitutional legislature will be the order of the day at the final meeting of the Physics Club Thursday, 10:30, in the Physics Lab.

According to the club's unique system of filling offices, the members will choose a President from among the seniors, a Student Council Representative from among the juniors and a Treasurer from among the sophomores. After the first quarter of next year the post of Secretary will be filled by an elected Freshman.

Constitution Framing

The working constitution of this year will be formalized by the addition of a few regulatory laws to the statement of purpose, said current president, Dave Vachon.

Chapel

Rev. Joseph Kemme, O. S. A., University Chaplain, announced this week that there has been a "noticeable" increase in Chapel attendance during the past academic year.

This fact, coupled with the large number of communions distributed during the annual retreat, has brought him satisfaction, Father Kemme said.

Illuminating Meeting

The joint A.I.E.E. - I.R.E. branch is holding a meeting tonight at 7:30 p. m. in 215 Mendel. The topic of the meeting will be "Illumination."

Chairman Jim Wrzesinski urges all who intend to make the all-day field trip to the Bell Laboratories in Murray Hill, N. J., tomorrow, or the group's annual picnic at Mermaid Lake this Saturday, to attend the meeting. Tickets for the latter event are available from Wrzesinski, Rudy Gangemi, Jack Downing or Gene Rzodkiewicz at $1.50 a head.

Student Council

The entire '54-'55 Student Council will attend the 9 a. m. Mass in the University Chapel on Ascension Thursday, May 19.

Following the Mass, Communion Breakfast for the group will be held at the Viking Inn in Ardmore. Rev. Robert M. Sullivan, O. S. A., Dean of the School of Arts and Sciences, will be the guest speaker at the breakfast.

COMMENCEMENT

Bill Quinn, senior history major, will deliver the commencement address at the Class of 1955 graduation exercises June 6. He was selected in final judging Monday. Runner up for the honor was Joseph Dorris, of the C & F School.

Men Honored At Annual Merit Awards Assembly

Dick Winfield and Frank Gunther are the recipients of the Gold Medal, awarded annually to the senior who gathers the most merit awards during four year.

Presentation was made during the Merit Award assembly at the same time that 271 students received 432 awards.

Winfield and Frank Gunther, senior history major, were recognized for earning the most awards (6) for the past year. Six other student took five awards each and 10 more students had four each.

Other Varities

Taking five awards were Joe Blimm, Bernie Coyne, Edwin Daly, Tom Mentzer and Bill Quinn—all seniors—and Pat Kean, a junior.

Intramural athletic awards, LYNX short story contest prizes and special awards were also presented during the assembly.

Dave Crowley was awarded the Intramural Department's trophy for the outstanding intramural athlete.

President Speaks

Merit awards are presented to students who have shown consistent and effective cooperation in extra-curricular activities and enjoy good scholastic standing.

Closing the assembly was a short talk by Very Rev. James A. Donnellon, O. S. A., Villanova president, and the playing of the Alma Mater by Mr. Robert Whelan.

SYMPATHY

The staff of the VILLANOVAN extends its sympathy to Jack Dunn, a sophomore in the C&F School and an assistant in the Chaplain's Office, on the death of his father.

Sen. Styles Bridges (R-NH) will address the Class of 1955 at commencement exercises June 6. The senator and four others will be awarded honorary degrees during the ceremonies.

Receiving honorary LL. D. degrees, besides Senator Bridges, are: Bishop Paul Yamaguchi, of Nagasaki, Japan; Brother E. Stanislaus, F.S.C., president of La Salle College; Edwin K. Daly, president of the Horn and Hardart Baking Co.

An honorary doctor of science degree will be conferred on Capt. Joseph A. McHenry, USN, deputy chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks and a Villanova alumnus.

For the third consecutive year a senior who will be commissioned in naval service will deliver the student commencement address.

William J. Quinn, a day hop from Ithan, Pa., is a history major. He attended Bishop Loughlin High School in Brooklyn before moving to Ithan.

Quinn was chosen from a field of 12 candidates, who were named by deans of their respective schools. In this selection academic standing, extra-curricular activities and general presentability were considered.

The top six candidates competed in an oratorical contest May 9 to determine their speaking ability. Runner up in the contest was Joseph Dorris, of the C & F School.

SENIOR PORTRAITS

Dick Fitzpatrick, incoming editor-in-chief of the Belle Air, reminds the Juniors that no Senior portraits will be taken next fall. This week is the last chance to have portraits taken.

Objective Insight

This is the last regular issue of this year's VILLANOVAN. The class elections have been held, the Student Council has held its last meeting, and examinations are about to begin. In other words, the school year is over.

This fact means different things to the prospective graduates and to other Villanovans. To those who still have another year or two of college life before them, the nearness of Summer vacation is very welcome and means nothing more sinister than a break from school routine and pressure.

To the graduating seniors, however, the end of this school years means something very different. To all but a few, it means the end of the comfortable school life they have been leading for at least the past sixteen years. The cold, cruel world, whether that of business or of military affairs, is staring them in the face, and many don't like it.

We are among those giving nostalgic thought to the easy life we have led for so many years. Although the prospects before us merely are those of a transfer to another educational institution, we can't help thinking that we "never had it so good" and probably never will again.

After all, life at Villanova isn't as hard as it might seem. There may be scowling professors aplenty, all spending their lives figuring out how to devise a test that nobody can pass; the campus may turn into a minature Everglades each time it rains, and it may take a half-hour to find a parking space in the lots, but life really could be harder.

Surveys or Education Criterion of Success?

By Tom Mentzer

Looming large on the American scene as the most reliable indicators of current trends are the polls or surveys conducted by interested organs and organizations.

"Statistics tell the true story" is sacred phrase drawn from the annals of American tradition. He, who does not bow before the plain and practical testimony of numbers, is an obstinate fool, an iconoclast. Far be it for lowly us to earn such nefarious surnames. We turn to consider the results of one of these surveys as a profession of our good faith.

Tom Mentzer

Surveys Definitly Optimistic

Of particular interest to the graduating seniors would be the findings of a survey conducted among U.S. college graduates of 10-15 years ago. This particular voice of authority recorded that over 55% of this group had an income of $ 4,000 or more a year. Of the remaining 45%, a not small number of them had incomes between seven and ten thousand dollars.

All of you fellow believers in surveys among the senior class will agree that this presents a most optimistic picture. If we graduates make proper use of our college educations, there is no reason why we shouldn't reach this pinnacle of financial achievement, the criterion of ultimate and true success in these United States.

Realistic not Idealistic

Wonderful news, except for one thing-no sum represents or should represent the ultimate success for the graduate of the Catholic University. Indeed, if the Catholic graduate makes the proper use of his college education, he will be aiming primarily not for money, but for salvation.

This is not meant as a diatribe against the Villanova man who in ten or fifteen years will be earning $10,000 or more a year due to his own ability, initiative, and provident circumstances. If this is his good fortune, then well an good. That is to say, providing he still understands that his Catholic faith under no circumstances can be divorced from his daily life, and that absolute ethics, not the prevalent pragmatic ethics, the one true standard.

Gentlemen, we seniors must be realistic about the situation. To have derived the fullest benefit from Villanova University means simply and unqualifiedly that we are one step closer to the fulfillment of our earthly destiny.

Enriched by four years of study and practice of the Catholic faith in a Catholic enviroment, we are better prepared than ever before to save our souls. Faithfully applying these educational principles in postgraduate life will undeniably bring us success, but not necessarily the success indicated by the survey report.

Adherence Assures Permanent Success

In fact by conscientiously adhering to these basic lessons, we may expressly exclude ourselves from that select "ten thousand" a year group. Because, to put it bluntly, ten thousand dollars a year constitutes, figuratively, a high wall to climb for the average Catholic college graduate.

Undoubtedly, even in today's world, some Catholic college men do climb that wall and honestly at that. But for many, it proves too high, and after ten or twelve years of unsuccessful attempts, an easier way to the top is often sought. And this easier way is very often not consonant with the teachings absorbed at Villanova University.

Success Not Always Permanent

This is not wild fiction, but cold, sober fact. A day in the naked business world is daily proof of this. Unless we remain cautiously close to the practice of our faith, we may sometime in our later business or professional endeavor fall prey to some of the now-distant evils. The mason's ring may replace your Villanova ring; the word "scientifically" may oust "morally" from your vocabulary; the "old-fashioned" large families may succumb to modern "planned" families.

So the situation exists. Success, both heavenly and financially is within our grasp. Aim for both! But bear in mind always, one is forever; the other but for a lifetime!

Graduation: A Look Toward Challenge

In less than three weeks, some 380 young men who have made their lives here at Villanova for the past four and five years will find themselves facing a new reality, a new challenge, indeed, almost an entirely new world. They will be harboring feelings that are probably as divergent and intense as those that prevailed when they first emerged on the scene here as freshmen, wondering, exploring weighing, and most of all, hoping.

Here are the outlooks of just a few graduating seniors, as a very big moment draws nearer:

LOU CASSELLA, C&F, Pre-law . . . "After waiting four years, I feel as though I'm going on to something new—being born into a new world, you might say. I feel the same as when I first entered Villanova—curious, anxious and hopeful. I hope God will bestow upon me in the future the graces that have helped me so much in the past four years."

EDWARD "SKIP" ZAHORSKY, Physics Major . . . "Well, I feel that ahead of me lies a challenge that I am sure Villanova has prepared me for quite well. I believe that the technical and humanitarian studies, plus the school's Christian atmosphere, have all contributed to development of a more mature outlook on life. I regret, in a sense, graduating, especially when I recall the numerous good times we've had."

RICHARD CONFOY, C&F, Accounting Major . . . "I definitely don't want to leave; I've enjoyed myself here—I feel I've made a lot of good friends, and I'm sorry that I'll not see some of them again. But I am looking forward to sailing out of the Brooklyn Navy Yard." (Dick is an NROTC Contract student).

FRANK LICOPOLI, Engineering . . . "The day of graduation to many of us might be considered the completion of our educations. However, little do we realize that this merely marks our beginning in acquiring knowledge. Villanova has taught us how to learn; it is up to us to apply our lessons. As engineers, we have had all the basic fundamentals exposed to us, and the moment after we graduate, we shall begin learning through our jobs. Another note—as college graduates, we are the teachers of the world, but not many of us realize this . . ."

FRANCIS "SKIP" KILLMOND, C&F, Pre-law . . . "College is a way of life; I'll find it hard to break the four year habit. However, since life presents so much to see and do, I'm anxious to start using the Catholic education I've received here at Villanova."

EDWIN DALY, Arts, History Major . . . "I've enjoyed life here for the past four years; I've had good friends, a good education, a pleasant life, and, although I plan to go on into graduate school, I doubt that I will find it as thoroughly enjoyable as I have found Villanova. Of course, just like everyone else, I'm looking to the future as a challenge to myself and to the training that I've received here at school."

Peering . . .

By Dick Peer

—At the results of the elections, which are almost completely tabulated, I see that almost everyone in the school now holds at least some minor office of one kind or another.

—At the upcoming exams, I find them peering back at me. The time for panic is at hand!

—At all the Navy men getting ready for their summer cruise. Everybody is planning to go, for rumor has it that double cuts will be given to those not present.

—At the campus horticulturist who pointed at the beautifully flowering azalea bushes and asked, "Wha zat purple thing?"

—At those among us who just can't bear to see the school year come to an end. Yes, men, there are some who will miss that walk to the Tea House, that ride to Chestnut Hill, or that safari to Immaculata. But saddest of all is the plight of the man who will miss his daily stroll to the Nurses' Lounge.

These evenings an erie calm descends upon the campus as dusk falls and the midnight oil begins to burn. The library and chapel are crowded, roommates argue as to who will use what book, and when; and professors ride about with a sardonic grin. Thank heavens this doesn't go on very often or we'd all leave.

Strictly Opinion

By Frank Hartmann

Now that the elections are over (this part of the paper goes in to the printer before the election results are known), I guess all of us can stop shining our shoes, shaving for our 8:30 class, and can start wearing khakis again.

The Navy has a nice restful summer lined up for the boys. The Contract students will blissfully cruise the Caribbean Sea, the Sophomore Regulars will venture forth to Virginia and then to Texas, while the other Regulars will visit Europe, namely England and Spain, courtesy of Uncle Sam. Not Bad!

Rumor has it that Bryn Mawr and Rosemont will exchange permissions next year with Rosemont getting 2's and Bryn Mawr 12's. What joker ever started that?

Most of us who don't already have summer jobs lined up are working on that project now. Have to get those dollars for next year. I guess some will go back to ditch digging for the summer, others to the beaches as lifeguards, and some to the usual office jobs. Among some of the summer jobs are some different ones such as painting fire hydrants, inspecting sewers, crushing grapes in a wine factory, and believe it or not bending pretzels in a pretzel factory.

A lady called the placement office a few weeks back and asked for a student for the summer who could meet the following requirements: He must be mature, he must be an expert driver, he must have his own car, he must be able to kill groundhogs, he cannot smoke and he cannot come from the city. For performing this job of chauffeur and general handyman, he would receive a room, no meals but "a good salary, and if I like him, a very good salary . . ." Take note, the lady is a widow.

A sign recently on the bulletin board read, "Integrity for sale in the Chaplains Office." . . . "Integrity" is a magazine.

With this last VILLANOVAN for the year I guess we can offer some hello's and good-bye's.

Good-bye to the old Pie Shoppe, I don't expect that we'll be in it much anymore with Dougherty Hall reaching completion over the summer. A good-bye to Mendel cafeteria. May we soon forget the hours that we spent in line waiting to eat there.

Some hello's are in order to Dougherty Hall, the new Student Union building. May we spend much time there, but little of it in line.

Villanova's nurses, rapidly becoming more and more a part of the school's day-to-day life, deserve a bit of credit for their initiative in saying the Rosary every afternoon at 4:30 before the Lady of Good Counsel Shrine. The young ladies would like to have everyone who possibly can join in with themin this new and very admirable undertaking.

A hello to the incoming Freshman class which will probably be the first class in Villanova's history to enter with over one thousand students.

There'll be quite a jjubilant time to be had tonight at the Bellevue-Stratford, when the newspaper staff holds its annual Dinner Dance, and bids adieu to a young absolutist whi is leading for the pragmatic reaches of Harvard's law school, and who will probably convert them all. We're speaking of Chief Ed Daly, of course, who donned the green eyeshade for the last time last Thursday night, ending a very successful editorial year for the young man from Barberry Road. Now if only the pickets would go away.

I guess that does it for another year; good-bye to the Seniors, it was fun. To all the rest, be sure to come back next year, we'll have a ball!

The three new officers of the Student Council talk over plans for next year l-r. Pete Quinn, secretary; Jack O'Rourke, vice-chairman; and Dick Peer, chairman. These men, all Juniors except O'Rourke, a sophomore, were chosen at the first meeting of the newly elected Council last Thursday night. They succeed past chairman Dick Winfield, vice-chairman Peer, and secretary Don McGahan.

By Bernie Finan

Looking back on my infancy, I recall distinctly my reaction to the phrase "it's good for you." Today I find myself in a situation similar to that of my exasperated parents a few decades ago, for I am anixious to convince an indifferent, perhaps hostile, audience that what I have to offer is "good for them."

In this case it is a superior type of entertainment, a rarity of diversion which is as palatable as it is wholesome. I would like to champion the return of the reading of the essay.

It is not my intention to outline the whole history of the essay form. Rather I would like to cast a revealing light on one of the giants of this literary medium, Hilaire Belloc. The Belloc one meets in the essay is a master of wit, and a searcher of the human heart. He is not the rambling Belloc of the historical biography or the travelogue. But perhaps I am beginning to ramble myself. Let me present briefly a few glimpses at the wares Mr. Belloc offers.

. . . Come Now . . .

The essay, "The Nordic Man," is a masterpiece of irony. In it Belloc proves in a few brilliant lines that anything worthwhile accomplished in the world has been done by members of the Nordic race. For example, he points out that the names of Aristotle and Caesar are obviously aliases contrived by the Greeks and Romans to conceal the fact that those two great men were in reality pure Nordics.

His definition of that excellent personage, the "modern Nordic," is hilarious (no pun intended on Belloc's first name), especially where he alludes to the qualification that would make the people "up at the Cape" or "at the Club" wince. But enough about this selection; it is just a suggestion of the best that is to come.

Ummm . . .

In a less trenchant mood Belloc writes of "the Good Woman." The descriptive passages are pure pleasure to read, a delight to the amateur or professional student of English. He writes: "The slow transfiguration of the light by which the air became full of colorurs and every outline merged into the evening, made of all I saw, as I came up towards her, a soft and united vision wherein her advancing figure stood up central and gave a meaning to the whole." A pity the excerpt must be so brief.

A former teached of mine said that anything good must grow on you if you give it a chance. This is my sentiment towards the essay, whether by Belloc whom I favor for his Christian thought content and art in expressing it, or any other master of the essay. Just give it half a chance and I guarantee you will be happy you did.

No review of the year would be complete without mention of the new Student Union building, dedicated to post Provincial, the late Father Dougherty. The edifice, said to be an engineering marvel, will in all likelihood be ready for use in September.

The Author and the Scholar

By Dick Winfield

Bartone has two day's growth of beard, busy eyebrows, thicks lips, small and hard eyes, a squat neck, wide and sloping shoulders, fleshy fingers; he wears a colored shirt open at the neck; he speaks slowly through his left nostril and the left side of his mouth; he gesticulates, he converses in short utterances; he articulates poorly, nevertheless he is outspoken on public affairs and he is critical of his own generation. He sleeps profoundly, both day and night; he belches aloud. He walks, legs apart, with a bounce at the end of each step and he bends his head forward; he keeps his hands in his pockets; he spits on the sidewalk. When he sits down, he falls into the chair; he cracks his knuckles; he reads paper-covered novels. He lowers his head to the food plate; he holds the fork between his thumb and his first three fingers; he pushes food on his fork with a piece of bread. At times he drinks beer to great excess; he drinks coffee yellow with cream. He is amused by the misfortunes of others. He is profane, selfish, plodding, quick-tempered, crude, stupid; he believes himself to be superior. He is an athlete.

Antithesis

Udall has deep-set and piercing eyes, pale complexion, aquiline nose, thin and red lips; he is lean, stoop-shouldered and wide hips; he wears glasses when he reads and he is always searching intently with his eyes; he shutters; he has thin, blue-veined hands. He moves his limbs awkwardly and stiffly and he walks with long strides; he flails his hands almost uncontrollably when he is excited; he drums his long fingers on his forehead; he blushes when he speaks with small, dumb girls; he bends his feet inward from the ankle when he speaks while standing. He places himself in a chair slowly, sits erect, and bends his head to look down; he retires at a late hour, he wakes early. He reads omnivorously; he is silent on topics unknown to him; he is moderately opinionated on government and economics although he speaks with animation and authority. He rarely smiles; he has uneven teeth. He does not eat potatoes and milk disagrees with him. He avoids large groups of students; he is scrupulous, precise, high-strung, prudent, perceptive. He seems always preoccupied; he is self-effacing. He is a scholar.

To Iron Out Problems:

Fr. President to Meet with Council Members Monthly

The following is the official announcement of the new Committee of Students and Father Donnellon, University President, to discuss student problems as contained in a letter from Father McLaughlin to Student Council Chairman, Dick Winfield.

Chairman, Student Council
Villanova University
Dear Mr. Winfield,

As you and the members of the Council know, Father Donnellon, President of the University, announced the formation of a new committee of students to meet with the Father President to discuss student problems. The Committee is to consist of the Chairman of the Student Council and three other students selected by the Council. As Dean of Student Activities, I have also been made a member of this committee, at the direction of the Father President.

Father Donnellon believes that with the formation of this Committee, the need for the existing Faculty-Student Committee will cease. Therefore, he has directed that it be dissolved as of now. I am taking this means of officially informing the Council of the establishment of this new Committee and the dissolution of the Faculty-Student Committee . . . We hope the new Committee will carry on the work making the University a better place to learn and to live.

George J. McLaughlin, O. S. A.
Dean of Student Activities

A suggestion for a project to be undertaken during the summer months might be to take action in laying the cornerstone for Sullivan Hall. Since its construction last year, that fine-looking building has lacked the date of completion. Insertion of traditional symbol marking its the stone would take but a few minutes time if the maintenance department worked on it.

Fitzpatrick Announces His Staff Positions

Dick Fitzpatrick, editor-in-chief of the 1956 Belle Air, has announced the editorial appointments for the yearbook.

Dick Schleicher, an engineering student, was named associate editor. Next year's future editor will be Bob Ford of the Arts school. The C and F division is represented by Dick Bellwoar, the photography editor. C and F student Bob Cassidy was named activities editor.

All Schools Represented

Serving under Cassidy will be John Eddinger, of the Arts school, engineer John Ferri, and Phil Keane, C and F. The copy editorship went to Joe Torak. The sports section of the yearbook will be edited by Bob Farley. Pete Quinn and Tom McInerney will manage the circulation and business ends of the publication respectively.

73% Vote In Class Elections

the senior year by a 56-vote edge over runner-up Paul Porreca.

A resident student whose home is in Glenside, Pa., Hartmann polled 172 votes to beat out Porreca, a fellow C & F student, and two Arts juniors, Bob Farley and Frank Adams.

Council Decides

Tom Mullen, an electrical engineer from Hempstead, L. I., was declared winner of the vice-presidential race by action of the Student Council Thursday night after the election. The Council disallowed a write-in attempt for the office in opposition to Mullen, previously unopposed as the result of screening eliminations. The Council took the action by deciding by an 18½-10½ vote to enforce a ruling made last year that a candidate could not place himself in write-in contention for a new office after withdrawing from another office's nomination.

Zimmerman Wins

Leroy Zimmerman, C & F, of Harrisburg, Pa., this year's planning chairman, won out over Phil Taddeo for the office of Secretary, 205 to 134. The new Class of '56 Treasurer is Thomas O'Rourke of Philadelphia, of the engineering school, winner over Bernie Steinfeltz and Bob McCaffery, 140-122-99.

The Alumni Representative for the class is Bob Ford, Linden, N. J., Arts, winner over Earl Warrington by a 77-71 count. From the C & F school, Greg Gehring, dayhop, and Bernie Dunn, resident, were chosen to the Student Council, as were Pete Quinn, (D), and Jack Padova, (R), from the Arts school, and Walt Forrester, (D), and Tom Meaney, (R), from the school of engineering.

positions were Jack Shea, and Jack O'Leary, from Arts; Robert Di Joseph and Leo Calabrase, from C & F; and Leo Kane and retiring pres. Jack O'Rourke, from Engineering.

Arts Seats Close

The closest race developed in the contest for a resident Arts School seat. O'Leary defeated a neighbor from his hometown of Bayonne, N. J.—George Browne, a varsity trackman — by four ballots. Browne was three ahead of Neil Cronin.

Shea, from Northeast Catholic in Philadelphia, easily took his day hop seat two opponents.

O'Rourke Landslide

O'Rourke, newly-elected vice-chairman of the Student Council, romped into his post. His nearest rival finished in a deadlock, 218 lengths behind.

Races for the three other seats were tighter.

The winners were Kane, day hop Engineering; Di Joseph, day hop C & F; and Calabrase, from Fairlawn, N. J., who took over the resident C & F seat.

Before three recounts of ballots, Odabash appeared the winner by a squeaky two-vote margin. But during the Student Council meeting Thursday night, Frank Licopoli, chairman of the Council elections committee, announced the run-off.

He said third recount ended with both men having an identical tally.

CLASS OF '58

Laughlin won more than twice as many votes as his two nearest opponents, Sullivan and Mulcahy. Laughlin is a softspoken easy-going candidate from the varsity football team.

Athletic Vice-President

Tom Brennan, C&F from W. Hempstead, N. Y. and a candidate for varsity basketball, took the vice-presidency by another wide margin.

John Fixl, Biology student from Allentown, Pa., was elected Secretary of the class with 20 more votes than runner-up John Witt.

The position of Treasurer was taken by Terry Hayes, Arts man from Lakewood, Ohio, who surpassed both of his opponents by approximately 75 votes.

In Brother's Footsteps

In the Student Council race, Norm Peer, Arts from East Orange, N. J., taking after his brother as a political figure at Villanova, won the resident seat while Dick Hamburger, another biology man from Glenside, Pa. was elected to the day-hop seat.

Percentage Up

Continuing the up-trend in freshman voting, the 63% vote represented a 2% increase over last year which in turn was an increase over the previous year.

SC MASS

Student Council chairman Dick Peer reminds all members of the old Council alone that they may still pay him the one dollar required for attendance tomorrow morning at the group's Communion Breakfast.

Nash Takes First In "Lynx" Contest

Harry Nash, junior English major and outgoing president of the Class of 1956, is the winner of the $15 first prize in the LYNX short story contest.

Nash's story, "Half Light," was included in the spring issue of the magazine, as were the second and third place entries.

Results were announced last week by Mr. James Mitchell, co-moderator of the campus literary magazine.

Runner up in the competition was Pat Nolan, a senior history major, for his story, "Half a C Note." Carlos Conde, junior in the C&F School, finished in third place.

Field Trip

Political Science majors and the Municipal Government Class of the C&F department took part last Thursday in a field trip conducted by Dr. Fred Khouri to City Hall, Philadelphia.

The purpose of the trip was to obtain a practical outlook on various aspects of large-city municipal government.

The trip ranged from Common Pleas Court—No. 6 where they saw the trial of a three-way accident case to a session of City Council where they saw Tom Gola receive a special citation.

Drill Team Sweeps Honors In City Area Competition

Fresh from the National Pershing Rifle Drill competition held at Penn State, where they scored an upset victory in the fancy drill, the Villanova NROTC Drill Team, under the direction of Midn. 2/c Walter Gould, took all honors at the Philadelphia Area Championships last Wednesday.

Defeat Area Squads

Competing in both basic and fancy drill the team defeated teams from LaSalle, Temple, Drexel, Saint Joseph's, and the University of Pennsylvania. Competing teams included units from the Army, Navy, and Air Force. The Villanova Midshipmen employed their familiar trick maneuvers and, according to Gould, "finally overcame their weak points in basic drill."

The early morning practices on Mendel field paid off as the team continued the performances which have helped them attain the reputation of never entering a competition without walking off with first place.

Two Trophies Added

In addition to one trophy which they have already retired, Villanova was presented with two new trophies. The first award was presented by the Benjamin Franklin Post, American Legion, who sponsored the competition in the basic drill phase.

The Reserve Officers Association of Philadelphia made the second presentation for first place in the fancy drill competition.

The final appearance of the Villanova Drill Team took place yesterday at the annual inspection of the unit by a visiting admiral. Inspecting was Admiral von Helmburg, USN.

Donatelli Takes DPE Reins; Ford Presides Over Singers

Bob Ford was elected President of the Villanova Singers for next year at the group's election meeting last week. An Arts junior, Ford has been active in the Singers for the past two years, and served as their secretary this year.

He succeeds Conrad Urban, who has been president for the last two years.

Other officers elected at the meeting were Jack Padova, vice-president; Joe D'Aquila, secretary; Charles Rose, librarian; and Richie Dunne, student council representative. They succeed Jack Janucci, Ford, and Paul Landau, respectively.

Plans for next year were also discussed at the meeting, including those for a more expansive concert program, and stricter regulation of attendance at rehearsals. Singer moderator Dean Harold Gill Reuschlein expressed his appreciation for the cooperation he received, and he noted that the concerts would begin much earlier next year, possibly in November.

Lou Donatelli

Delta Pi Epsilon, C&F fraternity, in common with many other organizations this week announced the results of elections for next year's officers.

Donatelli President

Lou Donatelli, from Washington, heads the all-resident slate as president. His fellow officers are Burns McLindon as vice-president, Jack Morgan as secretary, Don Weir as treasurer, and Hank Knoblock as Student Council representative.

These succeed Bruce Stark, John Fitzpatrick, Tony Skorupski, and Jim Carmody who guided the fraternity successfully through this school year and sponsored a Communion breakfast.

Serves C&F School

The Delta Pi Epsilon serves the largest school in Villanova University by welding together its members as a unit socially and otherwise.

Donatelli and company plan to improve upon this year's record wherever they can.

Seniors Honored By Awarding Of Scholarships

Many of Villanova's top seniors, scholastically speaking, will be continuing their education next fall through scholarships, fellowships and assistantships.

In the History department, Dick Seagrave-Daly received a scholarship to the Notre Dame Law School and Don McNulty's scholarship takes him to Villanova's Law School. Tom Mentzer takes a scholarship to Notre Dame for an M. A. in history.

English Scholars

In the English department, Peter Tulli has won a fellowship to the University of Detroit and Jasper Collura has been awarded a teaching assistantship to Lehigh University.

Among the engineers, Gerard F. Moran, sophomore merchanical engineer, received the Tool Engineers Scholarship Award.

From the science classes, Dave Vachon, Physics Club president this year, has won a Physics fellowship to Notre Dame.

Engineers Tour N. J. Bell Plant

One of the largest research laboratories in the world was toured last week by a group of 40 electrical engineers. The Bell Telephone Research Laboratories at Murray Hill, N. J., were the destination of an all-day field trip sponsored by the A.I.E.E.-I.R.E. student branch.

On the group's last excursion of the year they were shown many demonstrations featuring the Bell Telephone Company's most impressive latest developments: transistors and solar batteries. They tourned the sprawling, fantastically-equipped labs and were lunched in the large cafeteria.

Located five miles from Newark, the laboratories were erected in 1940 and rival those of the National Bureau of Standards.

Accompanying the students on the jaunt were Rev. John A. Klekotka, O. S. A., head of the electrical engineering department, Professor John B. Clothier, and Mr. Raymond Adams, both of the department.

Social Calendar

Organizations interested in reserving a place on the campus social calendar for 1955-56 should meet Friday at 3:30 p. m. in 213 Mendel.

Rev. George McLaughlin, O. S. A., Dean of Student Activities, said the Junior Class will have first choice of a date, followed by the Senior class, Sophomore class, Freshman class and clubs.

Dr. Machemer Retires; Accepts Colby Position

Dr. Paul E. Machemer has resigned from his position as Professor of Analytical Chemistry effective June 1955. He has accepted an appointment in the Chemistry Department of Colby College, Waterville, Maine.

6 Years At Villanova

Dr. Machemer came to Villanova in Sept. 1949. He received his training at Princeton and the University of Pennsylvaia. During his six years at Villanova Dr. Machemer has developed a strong course in Instrumental Analysis and has found time to do some academic research.

Dr. Machemer, as well as Dr. Stinson, Asst. Prof. of Chemistry, reported on studies at the University of Pennsylvania Catholic Round Table of Science here on April 30. He also reported on some of his studies at the Rosemont meeting two years ago.

WVIL On All-Day Schedule, Alton's New Staff Announced

The long hoped-for dream of all day broadcasting has recently become a reality for WVIL, the University's radio station. The station now broadcasts on a sixteen hour daily basis, starting at 7 a. m. and ending at 11 p. m. The new addition is given daily to the station with the compliments of WPEN-FM.

The programs are transmitted from WPEN-FM to WVIL where they are converted for AM reception. The programs consist only of soft, relaxing music without commercials. Commercials, by the way are automatically cut out. Station breaks by WVIL will be provided every half hour.

Experiment

This new phase of broadcasting is in its experimental stage at WVIL, and, if proved successful, will become a regular part of operations at the station.

Following up the announcement of Don Alton as next year's WVIL Station Manager, Rev. Louis Rongione, O. S. A., Moderator of the University's radio station announced next year's staff at the last meeting.

Shea Program Director

Ed Shea, a favorite with radio listeners, will take over the position of Program Director. The Chief Announcer's chores will be handled by John Eddinger. Dick Cooke will replace Bob Brown as Chief Engineer. He will be assisted by James McEowen, Ray Muench and Mike Polgar who comprise the Technical Engineering heads.

John Rosica, a Freshman who is highly regarded by the listening audience will take over as Business Manager. The job of Traffic Manager falls into the hands of Jim Heffernan.

Don Alton
New WVIL Head

Music, Music, Music

In the Music Department, Bill Reich will head the Popular Department while Dick McEntee will take charge of the Classical Department. The Production and Special Events Department will be handled by Bill Kelly. News and Sports Departments will be headed by Pete Quinn and Joe Morris in that order.

Joe Fink will take over the Special Effects Department and Fred Onorato will resume his duties as Record Librarian. The newly-formed Publicity Department will be handled by Bob Arkison. WVIL's representative to the Student Council will be Walt Murphy.

The out-going Station Manager, Bernie Coyne expressed his sincere thanks to the entire staff who helped make this year's broadcasting so successful.

Law School Banquet Honors Given To Robert Garbarino, Francis Krause

Presentation of awards to Robert Garbarino and Francis Krause, second and first year Law students respectively, and an address by the Hon. Charles S. Desmond, Associate Judge of the Court of Appeals of the State of New York, featured last Wednesday evening's second annual Law School Banquet.

Awards Presented

Garbarino, a Marine Corps veteran from St. Bonaventure's, received the James P. McGranery award of $100 for the highest average in Constitutional Law, and the Col. Wilfred G. MacCarthy award of $50 for presenting the best oral argument during the Moot Court competition.

A first year student from St. Joseph's College, Krause was awarded the $25 Law Faculty prize for the most scholarly contribution from the first year class to the legal writing course.

The St. Ives Law Club received the $100 Judge Theodore Reimel award for submitting the best brief during the Moot Court competition.

Lawyer's Calling

Judge Desmond spoke on "Lawyers, Courts, and Law Schools", and advised the 70 law students among the 105 guests present to "work at the law", and engage in a varied practice. He characterized politics as "a high calling" for the lawyer, giving one an excellent opportunity to "take part in making democracy work by putting his skill at the call of the government, through the political field."

Speakers

Chief Justice Horace Stern, of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court; Hon. Vincent A. Carroll, Judge of the Court of Common Pleas No. 2 in Philadelphia; Very Rev. Henry E. Greenlee, O. S. A., Provincial, and Chairman of the Board of Trustees; and Very Rev. James A. Donnellon, O. S. A.,; President of Villanova, all spoke briefly before the presentation of the awards by Dean Harold Gill Reuschlein. Professor Thomas J. O'Toole of the Law School faculty presented the McGranery award to Garbarino.

Toastmaster for the banquet was Walter B. Gibbons, Esq., Past Chancellor of the Philadelphia Bar Association and a member of the Board of Consultors to the School of Law.

Mr. Joseph R. Clancey, president of the Student Bar Association, gave the opening words of welcome.

IRC Banquet Marks New C&F Industrial Major

The Industrial Relations Club will hold its annual banquet at the Wynnemore Inn on Wednesday night, May 18. This year will have special significance because it will mark the formal inauguration of the new major, Industrial Administration, in the Commerce and Finance School. Many of the students who plan to take this major will be present.

Father Bartley, Dean of the C and F school, and Dr. Klein, moderator of the I.R.C., will be in attendance along with Mr. Bonniwell, who will be the main speaker of the night. Other members of the faculty that will be present will be Professors Burgess, Matlin, Murray, Powell, and Vogan.

C & F Editors Honored

Another feature of the banquet will be that the members of the editorial staff of the new C and F magazine, The Business Whirl, will be on hand to receive special recognition for their achievement in producing a magazine which will definitely add prestige to C and F. The praise of this magazine will not only come from the University, but from the field of business itself.

The election of next year's officers of the I.R.C. will also take place at the banquet.

Punch-line to the year's hottest power story–

Chevrolet "Turbo-Fire V8"!

This is the engine that's writing a whole new chapter in the book of automobile performance records. This is the engine that has stock car timers doing a "double take" at their stopwatches wherever experts gather to compare the abilities of the 1955 cars.

For example, in the recent NASCAR* stock car competition at Daytona Beach, Florida, Chevrolet literally ran away from every other car in its class—and a raft of others besides. In the one-mile straightaway run for low-priced cars, the first two places—and six of the first ten—went to Chevrolets. And in acceleration runs from a standing start against all comers, the Motoramic Chevrolet beat all other low-priced cars—and every high-priced car except one!

What's behind this blazing performance? A compact honey of a V8 that only the world's leading producer of valve-in-head engines can build. Chevrolet's new "Turbo-Fire V8".

It puts a new kind of fun in your driving life. You're in charge of 162 high-spirited horsepower—or if you're looking for even more excitement, the new "Super Turbo-Fire V8" (optional at extra cost) puts 180 h.p. under your toe!

Pick the one you'd rather have fun with, then come in and get behind the wheel. You'll see why the Motoramic Chevrolet is showing its heels to everyone else on the road!

Impressive Team Record Proves Golfers Ability

By Joe Slavin

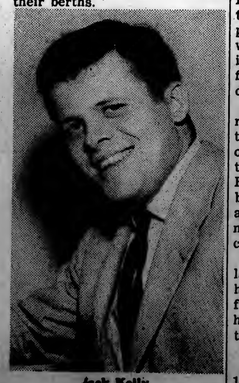
Villanova's varsity golf team appears to be on its way to having one of its finest seasons. Led by Team Captain Charlie Stone, a junior letterman, the team has compiled a record of seven wins and two losses. Such formidable opponents as Haverford College and University of Pennsylvania have lost to our Wildcat golfers.

The season closes out next week with matches scheduled against St. Joseph's. Captain Stone is confident that the team will win both matches, especially St. Joe's, since it will be a "revenge" match, having lost to the Hawks, 5-4, earlier in the season.

Best Record Since Reorganization

After a mediocre 5-5 record last year, Villanova returned to the links this year to beat West Chester, Haverford, St. Peter's, Seton Hall, LaSalle, Penn, and Villanova's Old Timers, while losing only to St. Joe and Princeton.

Charlie Stone



The team consisted of Captain Stone, who compiled an impressive 6-1 record, Ben Klemanowicz, a very promising sophomore who compiled a brilliant 7-1 record, Jack Kelly, Lou Blanchet, Jim and Bob McElhaney, Joe Gallagher ,and Fred Anton.

Three Seniors Leaving

Jim McElhaney, Blanchet, and Anton are the only members who will be lost through graduation.

Stone urged everyone who had an interest in golfing to try out for the team next year.

Qualifying rounds are held each year determine the make-up of the team. Members of this year's team will have to prove themselves better than all newcomers in order to retain their berths.

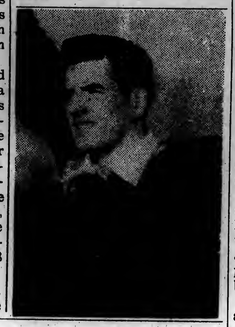
Bragg, Jenkins, Breckinridge Win As Track Team Beats Georgetown

Last Saturday in Washington, Villanova's nationally-heralded track team won their third dual meet of the year, and at the same time returned a "favor" which had been done them earlier, by defeating Georgetown's Hoyas, 72-59.

Despite a muddy track and slow field, the Mainline squad reciprocated for a humiliating loss which they suffered earlier this year at the hands of Georgetown, in a triangular meet held at Annapolis.

Bragg Scores In Three Events

Don Bragg was the individual star and high-scorer for the Wildcats. For the second week in a row, the robust sophomore pole-vaulter set a new record with a 14-foot soar. Among Bragg's other accomplishments during the day's proceedings was a second place in the high jump, and thirds in the javelin and 100 yd. dash.



Although Bragg performed like a champion, it was not a one-man show. Such names as Charley Jenkins and Alex Breckinridge featured heavily in the victory. Jenkins, tuning up for his Coliseum relays in los Angeles, won the 220. in 22.3 seconds and the 440 in 0:49.7. The scooting Scot, Al Breckenridge, also ran to victory in the mile and two mile events for Villanova. His times were 4:15.8 and 9:33.4, respectively.

Breckenridge Edges Out Kirk

In the last lap of the two-mile run, he was successful in holding off a strong surge by the Hoyas' Ed Kirk, who earlier had turned in the fourth best collegiate mile in the country this season.

Senior Johnny Giordano won the javelin toss with a heave of 173 ft., while his fellow field event men Jim Fahey and Ron Cherubini were second and third respectively in the shot-put contest.

The win gave Villanova a season's record of 3-4, while Georgetown now stands 3-3. The concluding dual meet of the year for the Wildcats will be held this Saturday against St. Joseph's at the Villanova Stadium. From there, the trackmen travel to the IC4A's in Randall's Island stadium, in New York.

Sophs Sweep Intramural Track Meet

By Bob Mulcahy

Displaying talent seldom seen in annual competition, the Sophomore class completely dominated all events as they swept the spring Intramural track meet last Thursday at the University track.

In doing so, the Sophs were awarded a record number of 55 points, easily drubbing their closest competitors, the Frosh, who garnered a meager five points.

In the opening event, the 100 yd. dash, second-year men Jim Cunjack, Bob Burgess, and Mike Flynn placed in that order. The mark of 10.4 for the distance set a new record for intramural track.

Following the century, Bill Brown and Brendan Flynn, also sophs, placed first and third respectively, while Frosh footballer Americo Sapienza was second. The time was 5:23.8.

Cunjack and Burgess repeated their feats in the 100 by placing one, two in the 220, followed by John Kiernan, also a soph. Cunjack did the distance in 0:24. Sapienza strengthened the Frosh scoring in the 440 by winning that run in 0:54.6. He was followed by soph Bill Marinelli and Ken Gerz, a Frosh.

The 880 relay followed the two dash events, and again the sophs were successful in getting a clean sweep, as Bobby Powers, Mike Flynn, ad Cunjack sped to a 1:41.2 mark for the baton run.

Vince Sullivan, the lone entrant in the high jump, cleared the bar at 5'6" and recorded another victory for the sophomores.

In the only other field event on the day's schedule, Frosh Dick Bart jumped 18'9.7" to a victory over Mike Flynn and Johnny Bauer, both of whom play for Frank Reagan's football squad.

The concluding 880 yd. run also went to the adept sophomores, when Joe Ryan, chased by Bill Brown, did the distance in 2:20.2.

The intramural department expressed regret over the fact that the Junior and Senior classes, the former of which had won for two consecutive years, were very poorly represented.

Charley and Jake Vital To Villanova Athletics

By Daryll Ditenfest

When we traveled to the Field House last Thursday to visit two of the busiest and most popular men in Villanova sports we found our subjects immersed in work, as is typical of them five, six and sometimes seven days weekly.

These men are equipment manager Charlie Farnan and trainer Jake Nevins. Jake was out at the baseball field aiding the team in their victory over Rutgers; Charlie was in the basement of the Field House answering the needs of both the most serious and the most casual athletes.

Charlie is the johnny-come-lately of the pair. While Jake has been here since 1929 except for a period in service, Charlie has been at Villanova only for the last 14 years.

Here Since 1941

Charlie came to Villanova in 1941 and has been here since, except for a short period when he worked for an insurance company. In this 14-year period

Students Defeat Faculty In Tennis Competition

By Pete Quinn

Tennis at Villanova took a giant step forward Saturday with the inauguration of the first annual student-faculty tennis tournament, played at the student courts adjacent to St. Mary's Hall.

For the students, highlighted by the play of Jack Girrard, Pete Scott, and Bob McCaffery, it was extremely enjoyable, since they won six out of the seven matches.

Mr. Roland Houde, philosophy department prof., played against Girrard in a fine match. Jack took the first set, 6-2, and Mr. Houde rallied to lead 2-1 at the outset of the second set. Gerrard came to life, however, and was able to win the next five games to score another 6-2 win.

Mr. Mitchell.

Scott Edges Queenan

The longest set of the day, a touch and go contest between Junior Pete Scott and Mr. John Queenan of the English Dept., ended in a 11-9 victory for the Villanova Junior.

The only faculty member who ended the day on the winning side of the ledger was another representative of the English department, Mr. James Mitchell, who defeated next year's Belle Air chief, Dick Fitzpatrick, 6-3, 6-2.

Dr. Edward Monahan, of the philosophy department, handed Bob McCaffery, also a Junior, a little trouble by rallying to win his second set, 4-6, after McCaffery was victorious in the initial set, 6-2. Bob came through, however, to take the final, 6-4.

Pete Quinn won the last singles of the day from the only Law School representative, Mr. Thomas O'Toole, 6-1, 6-2.

Students Win Both Double Matches

In the doubles, Soph Vinny Quinn joined forces with Girrard to defeat Mr. Houde and Belle Masque's moderator, Rev. William Krupa.

The second doubles match again was won by the adept student representatives, as Bob Meyers and Scott rallied to win the second and third sets after losing the first. The scoring in the match went 4-6, 6-2, 6-3.

All in all, the day was enjoyed by all, even though the profs may require rubbing oil for the next few days. It proved, however that students are, in many cases, better qualified than they are usually expected to be, at least from a teacher's point of view.

he has had the opportunity to see in action many of the greatest teams and individual stars from all over the country.

Bill McGarry

While describing these greats, which included the football teams of the 1948-49 period, the basketball clubs of the Arizin era and the stars George Guida, Fred Dwyer, and Jim Reardon. Charlie was interrupted by the requests of Don Bragg, Dick Scott and Jim Fahey. After running off to get a key for Bragg, and a towel for Scotty who had just come in from the Rutgers game. When Red sent him scurrying off on another mission we sneaked away to catch the end of the ball game and make contact with Jake Nevins.

"Little Man" Jake

The affable Jake Nevins, who replied facetiously when asked how long he had been at Villanova that he'd been here since about eight that morning, is the little man who is responsible for the fame of Ray Rigney because of all the publicity shots he's posed for with 6'8" Ray.

We finally learned that he has been here since 1929 as trainer for all the athletic teams. The fun-loving Jake recalls the days of comic Tom Clavin and his recent-day successor Tom Green and the joys and problems of making road trips by train. All the boys argued over who was to sleep on the top bunk but they finally agreed to put Jake up there where it was possible for him to dress and undress while standing.

Looking to the future, they agreed that, except for basketball, all teams would be vastly improved. Each cited the added depth of the football and track teams, pointing out that next season's track team should be the finest ever and perhaps the best in the country. The basketball team might suffer from a certain amount of greenness early in the season but will be a potentially fine club, they concluded.

Loss To West Chester Ends Nine Game Streak

By Joe Kinney

After thumping local St. Joseph's College last Wednesday on the Main Line diamond, Villanova's power-laden baseball squad recorded victory number twelve the following afternoon by outscoring Rutgers University, 9-4, on the same field.

Bill McGarry ,one of the club's most consistent hitters of late, pounded a home-run in the five-run first inning, which was all the Mahanmen needed in hanging up the triumph. However, the host team added four insurance markers in the later frames against a similar number for the Jerseyites, who trailed throughout.

Teachers Get Five

West Chester's high-flying State Teachers came from behind during an explosive fourth on Saturday afternoon by scoring five big runs, causing Villanova to succumb to its fifth, 7-5, on the victor's field.

The hard-earned win gave the Chesterites an enviable 13-2 log in the season.

The Mainliners hopped out to an early 4-0 lead in the initial frame on Johnny DiGiollorenzo's long triple, followed by a pair of two-baggers by Bill McGarry and Ron LaMontagne, each of whom collected two of Villanova's seven bingles.

Severino Ousted In 4th

The winners pushed across two runs in the bottom of the first on left-fielder Jack McDonnel's circuit blast with one man on. Then Dan Severino hurled two shut-out frames before the Teachers chased him with seven timely singles in the deciding fourth.

Bob Scalzi took over and threw four innings of goose-eggs at the powerful West Chester nine but his efforts were in vain as the losers never headed the local club after the fourth inning.

Big Timers Win Over Cast-offs Softball Finale

Intramural softball competition came to a conclusion on Monday, when the Big Timers played the Cast-offs, in the final game of the spring schedule. The Big Timers, representing Good Counsel Hall, smashed their opponents 12-7 for the victory and league title.

The big gun in the winners attack was Buzzy Baron, who belted a grand slam homer in the fourth frame with three mates aboard to put the Big Timers solidly in front. From there, pitcher Leo Chessock hurled a frigal four innings, at least as far as the losers were concerned, and let in only three runs for the remainder of the ball game.

Ambrosid Gets Three

Fran Ambrosio, a senior member of the Big Timers, also paced the team's hitting attack. Ambrosio collected three hits during the game, and accounted for four runs batted in.

PI THETA CHI

The Phi Theta Chi Sorority held election of officers at its monthly meeting recently. President for the coming year is Miss Betty Ann Curran of Mount Airy; Vice President, Miss Dolores Cofield of Bayonne, N. J.; and Miss Susan Simmons of Jenkintown, will act as Tresaurer-Secretary.

The group also discussed the business of their May Social under the direction of Joanne Stucky, Chairman. This dance will be held in Austin Lounge tonight. Music will be provided by the Commodores. Dancing from 9 'till 1. The dance is open to all students of the Nursing Division and their dates.

CHEERLEADERS

A rejuvenated cheerleading squad will appear on the gridiron sidelines next football season according to Father McLaughlin, Dean of Student Activities.

The squad composed of John Flynn, Jimmy Naihman, Ted Macri, and Bill Smith, have reorganized the cheers appearing in the Student Handbook.

Plans have been made for orientation of the incoming freshmen concerning spirit activities at the various athletic events.

Bill Smith said, "The cheerleading squad can be only as good as the supporters in the stands."

MARCHING BAND

Colorful halftime shows by an expanded Marching Band are a definite possibility during the coming football season, the VILLANOVAN learned last week.

Plans are progressing slowly, according to Jack Gilfillan, newly-elected Band president. But he said Athletic Director Bud Dudley envisons a progressively larger show by the band in each game and a sorely needed change in uniforms.

Gilfillan did not describe the uniform change. One of the band members, however, indicated it will be drastically different from the traditional style.

Gilfillan said he and retiring band president Frank Licopoli had the go-ahead from Rev. Joseph J. Burns, O.S.A., band moderator, in discussing the matter with Dudley.

The two engineering students decided that it was time that the band was pulled up from the depths into which it has fallen in recent years.

"This attitude created a very poor reputation for the university, and it was realized, at least by band members, that changes should be made," Gilfillan commented.

The size of the band is expected to increase to 80 pieces and Gilfillan said the quality is expected to increase with size.

"This would enable Villanova to field a band which all entertain the fans and provide that zing and zest which is necessary and traditional at a college football game," the Band president concluded.

NFCCS

Edward Fletcher was installed as president of the Villanova chapter of the National Federation of Catholic College Students during the group's annual dinner Wednesday.

Fletcher, a C & F junior, is senior delegate besides succeeding Jim Rath as president.

Installed with Fletcher were William Gallagher, junior delegate, Frank Collins, secretary and Jim Greenlee, treasurer. Paul Donahue will serve as treasurer of the Philadelphia Regional Council.

Rev. George McLaughlin, O. S. A., Villanova's moderator, spoke to the dinner guests about the forthcoming national convention which will be held in Pittsburgh during August.

VILLANOVAN

Introduction of Harry Nash, next year's editor-in-chief, and presentation of gold keys to senior staff members will take place during the VILLANOVAN's annual dinner dance tonight at 7 in the North Garden of the Bellevue-Stratford.

Rev. Louis A. Rongione, O. S. A., the paper's moderator, will address the group.

Music for dancing after the banquet will be furnished by the Rhythmaires.

Schwerdtfeger Leads '55-'56 Physics Club

Elections at the last meeting of the Physics Club for this year held last Thursday elevated senior-to-be Charles Schwerdtfeger to the presidency, succeeding Dave Vachon.

Representing the club on the Student Council will be James Shea, sophomore, while Jack Solarski will fill the post of treasurer. Jack is a freshman.

Freshman Secretary

As explained in last week's VILLANOVAN, the post of secretary will be filled from next year's freshman class at the end of the first quarter.

Dave Vachon said that this unique system of having an officer from each class provides an incentive for the newer members of the club and assures the continuity of active membership on the part of capable underclassmen.

Following the election, the members of the club formalized the constitution with the addition of laws regulating eligibility for membership and office-holding.

Vachon wishes to thank publicly all speakers who appeared before the club during the year.

Art Odabash and Jack Decker —the two men who tied for the presidency of the Class of 1957. One was elected yesterday in a re-vote.

Norm Peer won a resident seat on Council for the Class of 1958 and Tom O'Rourke was chosen treasurer of the Class of 1956.

Peer, who took over as chairman from graduating Dick Winfield, moved up from vice-chairman. Don McGahan was secretary during the past year.

Write-Ins Nixed

During the business session of the new Council, in which all Council members elected that afternoon took part, a resolution was passed prohibiting write-in ballots in future class elections.

The resolution stipulated that a candidate could not be added to the ballot within 48 hours of the election opening. A candidate not nominated during the regular nominating conventions could be added to the list of nominees to be approved by obtaining a petition signed by ten per cent of the members of his class or by being nominated at a special class meeting previous to this 48-hour period.

CLASS OF 1955— AVE ATQUE VALE

Vol. 30—No. 24 VILLANOVA UNIVERSITY, VILLANOVA, PA. June 6, 1955

428 To Receive Degrees Today

Graduate-Faculty Breakfast Follows Baccalaureate Mass

THE Class of 1955 attended its last mass as a corporate unit on the campus at 10 o'clock yesterday morning. The Solemn High Mass was celebrated by Very Rev. James A. Donnellon, University President. Father Edward B. McKee, O. S. A., University Vice President, was the Deacon.

Preacher for this special Baccalaureate Mass was Father James Gallagher, O. S. A., a member of the Augustinian Mission Band. Father Gallagher, an outstanding member of the Mission Band for over a decade, conducted the annual three-day retreat for the entire student body during this past Holy Week.

Immediately after the Mass, at which over 90 percent of the class received Holy Communion, the members of the faculty and the graduates proceeded to the University Dining Hall in Mendel Hall for a special Baccalaureate breakfast.

Since today marks the inception of the alumni status of the class, this was the last act of the class as students. It has been traditional at the Univerity to have this joint activity of students and faculty on the day preceding the commencement ceremonies. Although the parents and friends of the graduates were invited to attend the Baccalaureate Mass held in the field house the breakfast itself was closed for the graduates and members of the faculty.

An EXTRA 'Villanovan'

THIS special commencement edition of the VILLANOVAN is the first in the history of Villanova. It is the product of an all Senior staff which was organized and directed by the 1954-55 Editor-in-Chief of the VILLANOVAN, Edwin K. Daly.

THE GRADUATES, 428 strong, march in procession en route to the Field House. Today's commencement exercises for the class of 1955 marks the completion of Villanova's 112th academic year.

382 Full-Time Seniors Among Recipients; Field House Is Scene

TODAY at 11:00 A. M. 428 persons will receive degrees in the Villanova Field House and become Villanova alumni. Of the 428 degrees, 382 will go to full-time students.

The main speaker will be Senator Styles Bridges, Republican Senator from New Hampshire, and William J. Quinn will be the student commencement speaker.

Ceremonies will begin with the processional of students and faculty from the Commerce and Finance building to the Field House. Following the Invocation and the playing of the National Anthem, Quinn will deliver his speech.

Honorary Degrees

After a series of musical selections, Honorary degrees will be presented to Senator Bridges, Bishop Paul Yamaguchi, Brother Stanislaus, F. S. C., Captain Joseph A. McHenry, and Edwin K. Daly, Sr. Next in order will be the recitation of the "Pledge of Loyalty" by the graduates.

The respective Deans of the different schools will then confer degrees upon the individual graduates. The order of presentation is as follows:

Bachelor of Arts, Bachelor of Science in Education, Bachelor of Science ih Biology, Bachelor of Science in Physics, Bachelor of Science in Chemistry, Bachelor of Science in Mathematics, Bachelor of Chemical Engineering, Bachelor of Civil Engineering, Bachelor of Electrical Engineering, Bachelor of Mechanical Engineering, Bachelor of Science in Economics, Bachelor of Science in Nursing, and Graduate Degrees.

Commissioning Follows

Captain Martin J. Drury of the United States Navy and Professor of Naval Science at Villanova will then contact the commissioning ceremony for the N.R.O.T.C. graduates, which will be followed by another musical selection.

Senator Styles Bridges will then address the graduates and the commencement exercises will be concluded with Benediction.

Styles Bridges, GOP Senator Of New Hampshire, Speaks Today

SENATOR STYLES BRIDGES, Republican from the state of New Hampshire and ranking Republican member of the Senate, is speaker at today's ceremonies and will receive an honorary LL.D degree.

Styles Bridges was born in West Pembroke, Maine, September 9, 1898, and graduated from the University of Maine in 1918.

Senator Bridges' rise to national prominence began in November 1934 when, as the candidate of the Republican Party, he was elected Governor of the State of New Hampshire. As Governor, he balanced the budget and put New Hampshire on a "pay-as-you-go" fiscal basis.

Senator at 38

The voters of New Hampshire rewarded the record established by their young Governor when they elected him to the United States Senate in 1936. He was re-elected for a second term in 1942 and a third term in 1948.

Upon his re-election in November 1954 to a fourth term in the United States Senate, the voters of New Hampshire paid tribute to their senior Senator by giving him the largest vote received by any candidate on the Republican ticket, and also giving him the largest majority ever received by a candidate for the Senate in the history of the State.

Heads Policy Committee

At the beginning of the 84th Congress, Senator Bridges was chosen unanimously to become Chairman of the Senate Republican Policy Committee. As such, he is a leader for the Republicans in their formulation of policy relating to their activities in the United States Senate. He continues to hold his assignments as ranking Republican member of the Committee on Appropriations, Committee on Armed Services, as well as his membership on the Republican Personnel Committee. Quinn Talks For Class

WILLIAM J. Quinn is the student Commencement speaker for the Class of 1955. Quinn, who will be commissioned an Ensign in the United States Navy today, majored in history as an undergraduate in the Arts and Sciences School.

He was president of the International Relations Society, Feature Editor of the 1955 BELLE AIR, a member of the Student Council, and a member of the staff of WVIL.

Twelve men were nominated, on the basis of their academic excellence, for the honor of being Commencement speaker. Quinn was selected to be the speaker in a series of two elimination contests.

After graduation he will proceed to the Naval Air Station in Pensacola, Florida, where he will train to be a naval aviator.

William J. Quinn

Commencement Fancies And Facts Since 1847

STRANGE as it may seem, the procedure of commencement has changed very little through the decades. Since the first public commencement held on July 1, 1847, musical recitals, student valedictories, and the distribution of diplomas and awards have been the order of the day.

- Villanova awarded its first Bachelor of Arts degree in 1855 and its first Master of Arts degree in 1857.
- In the 1880's, the commencement programs featured addresses by students in foreign languages.
- A former President of the United States, Grover Cleveland, was granted the honorary degree of Doctor of Jurisprudence at the commencement exercises in 1902. It was the first time such a degree was granted in this country.

Poll Depicts Average Grad of 1955

THE average Villanova graduate of the Class of 1955 smokes, drinks, supports himself in part, and matrimonially is a free agent. He eventually intends to go to graduate school, although he is looking forward to serving time in either the Army or Navy.

He is satisfied with the major course of study which he chose, has a job guaranteed after graduation, is a registered Republican, and considers education and experience the greatest benefits derived from college.

41.6% Are Reached

This picture was obtained from information taken in a poll on May 25. 41.6% of the class responded to the poll.

It was discovered that only 9% of those interviewed were married, although 18% were engaged. The great majority of the class, 73%, still remain footloose and fancy free.

Academically, the poll revealed that 73% of the class was satisfied with their selected course of study. Of those 27% who were not satisfied, the great majority would choose C&F or Arts if able to choose their major over again.

Only 15% of the class will attend graduate school immediately, but 55% intend to eventually go on to further study.

Service Problems Covered

The draft, of course, exerts a great influence on the question of further study. Of those interviewed, only 6% have served in the military, and 12% are exempt. This leaves 82% of the class with time to serve, of which 36% expect to serve immediately. The Army and Navy will account for 44 and 35% respectively, while the Marines will absorb 20%, the Air Force 0.6%, and the Coast Guard 0.4%.

Despite the imposing draft figures, 60% of the class have jobs guaranteed after graduation.

The poll also inquired into the extent of smoking and drinking, the extent of self support, the political views, and the benefits derived from college, of the members of the class.

The complete breakdown of figures, by percentages, can be found below.

1. Are you married? 9%. Engaged? 18%. Free Agent? 73%.

2. If you were choosing your major subject over again, would you choose the one you did? Yes 73%. No 27%.

Do you plan to go to graduate school: Immediately 15%. Eventually 55%. Never 30%.

4. Regarding military service: You have served 6%, will serve immediately 36%, will serve eventually 46%, are exempt 12%.

5. What branch of the military service, if any, are you going to serve in? Army 44%. Navy 35%. Marines 20%. Air Force 0.6%. Coast Guard 0.4%.

6. Do you have a job guaranteed after graduation? Yes 60%. No 40%.

7. Do you support yourself wholly? Yes 30%. No 70%.

8. Do you support yourself in part? Yes 80%. No 20%.

9. Do you drink? Yes 80%. No. 20%.

10. Do you smoke? Yes 63%. No 37%.

11. Are you a registered voter? Yes 59%. No 41%.

12. If yes, Republican 52%. Democrat 45%. Other 3%.

13. What do you consider the greatest benefits derived from college? Contacts 17%. Education 39%. Experience 33%. Other 11%.

Father Grimes Offers Last Message To Class

REVEREND Edwin T. Grimes, O.S.A., two-year moderator of today's graduating class, was born in Philadelphia on April 14, 1908. A graduate of Mount St. Mary's College, Emmitsburg, Md., Father Grimes entered the Augustinian Postulate on Staten Island, N. Y. in 1927. Then came a year at New Hamburg, four at Villanova College, and three years of theology at Catholic University.

Fr. Grimes

Following his ordination in 1936, Father received his M.A. in History from C.U. in 1937 and studied English History at Oxford, from 1938 to 1939.

Father Grimes was Chaplain from 1941 until June 1953. In September 1953, Father became moderator of the Class of 1955.

"The editors of our campus paper have asked me to say a parting word to you members of Villanova's Class of 1955. If I had the opportunity to talk to each one of you personally this would be the burden of my message:

"When the emotional excitement connected with graduation day dies down and before you become immersed in the activities of making a living or settling yourselves in the routine of a military life, I would ask you to do this one thing. Go off by yourself to a place that is conducive to hard, cold thinking and honest meditation. Step by step retrace your path over the four years of your college life at Villanova.

"For your meditation I propose that you call to mind the image of yourself as you came to us four years ago. Compare that young man with what you know yourself to be at this moment. You are not unchanged.

"There are differences. What are these differences? Is there any major change in character? Are you a better man for having lived with us at Villanova these past four years? Or are you less a man?

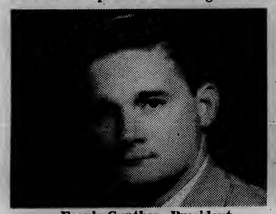
"What is your answer? Your four years experience will be profitable only in the light of the honesty you apply to this self-evaluation. If defect be there, have the courage to correct it. If you do not have to reproach yourself (nor if God does not have to reproach you) have the humility to be grateful and strive to persevere. This you owe, in justice, to yourself, to your parents, to Villanova, to the girl whom you will one day call your wife, and to the children with whom God will bless you.

"In the light of these obligations, then, this self-examination is most important. Make a date now, at this very moment of reading, for this personal evaluation and Villanova will mean so much more to you.

Gunther Named President:

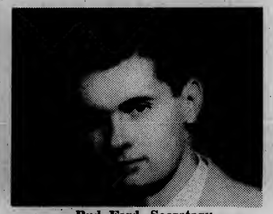
List Alumni Officers

IMMEDIATELY following the Merit Award Convocation on May 16, the Class of 1955 elected a new slate of officers to administer the affairs of the class for the next five years. Their main duty will be a liason function, that of coordinating the activities of the class as an alumni group with their alma mater.



Frank Gunther, Editor of the 1955 BELLE AIR, and co-winner of the Gold Medal for Leadership in Extra-curricular Activities, was elected President by a wide margin.

Dick Winfield, President of the Student Council, former Editor of the VILLANOVAN, and co-winner of the Activities Gold Medal, was elected Vice-President, having received the second largest number of votes.



Bud Ford, President of the class in the Senior year, was elected Secretary.

Don McGahan, who has been both Vice-Chairman and Secretary of the Student Council was elected Treasurer.

This is the first time in the history of Villanova that a class has elected officers to represent it after graduation.

Villanovan's Place In The World Discussed By Gen. Milton Baker

THE following excerpts are taken from an address of Major General Milton Baker, Superintendent of Valley Forge Military Academy, to the Seniors and their fathers on this year's Father's Day.

- Your stake in Villanova's future is not circumscribed by a four-year curriculum—it is bounded only by the length of your lives.
- Every man—be he saint, soldier, or statesman — must discover the challenge of his times — just as you and I. The statesman seeks it in the temper of the people; the soldier looks for it in the sweep of battle; and the saint finds it, in his humble way, in the obvious little corners that always seem obscure to the rest of us.
- Never before have world issues been so clearly defined; never before have the battle lines been so distinctly drawn. The struggle between the free world and the slave world reaches down into the very roots of our being. It is Christendom against Communism —Liberty against Tyranny and Serfdom.
- The type of leadership America will always need is that which has a deep intellectual appreciation of her heritage, and the knowledge to understand her problems.
- Steep yourself in the problems that affect your religion, your country, and the community in which you live. In short, be a living member of your country, and not a mere statistic. Furthermore, bear in mind that knowledge without perspective is a meaningless conglomeration of unrelated facts. Your perspective should be shaped by your heritage, which is founded on the basis of Faith and Freedom. Faith in God and Faith in oneself have been the sparks that fired American spirit since the first colonies were raised on our shores. Nothing is more essential to our beloved country's future, and indeed to the future of the free world, than that young Americans like you keep the fires of those Faiths burning brightly.
- If your generation, which in a greater sense is America, is to be successful, it cannot be tagged with complacency.
- There are many lessons to be drawn from the pages of world history that could be helpful to you who are about to take your places in the ranks of the American doers, but one thing stands out above all others, and I am sure this you have learned well at Villanova — no man can prevail or permanently succeed, unless he bends his knee to Almighty God, and no nation can preserve its freedom, unless it preserves its faith in Him.

Care and Feeding Of The '55 Grad

By Jim Wrzesinski

TROUBLE with Walter Framington was that he lived the whole silly thing right up to the hilt, white bucks, charcoal-grey suits, hip-flask, etc. You couldn't talk to the fellow without being briefed on the history of his fraternity and how they mixed the martinis on weekend houseparties.

Collegiate was hardly the word for Walter. Walter was a bit of all right. College was the sum and substance of his meager existence. His only goal was the impending weekends, frought with activity. Walter threw himself into everything he did.

Hardly seems possible that Walter will soon leave his happy state of existence. He'll probably whiz right through the commencement exercises and be out in the cold world before he ever realizes what has happened.

He's Different!

Mother will have to be especially delicate in her dealings with Walter. Walter must never be awakened before 8:20 a.m. Mother must realize that sleeping here lies no normal, average individual. For four years Walter has rested his weary little head on his seamy little pillow at 2 or 3 a.m. and then tumbled out of bed at 8:20 a. m., slipped into Sunday's white shirt and faithful pair of khakis, sleepily donned his argyle socks and once white bucks, stuffed his arms into his high school graduation suit coat, stuffed his roommates tie into his pocket and tumbled out of the room on his way to class. Such habits are not soon lost.

The first day home mother may direct Walter to his place at the breakfast table and be sure to let him push a tray around the table. As he passes mother's place, mother should place before him two soggy pieces of toast, one cup of coffee brewed with last week's grounds, two quickly-fried eggs allowed to stand for one hour, a box of cereal, a glass of milk and two straws. For best results mother should remind Walter to don his tie before sitting down to eat.

Employer's Please Note

The employer must keep uppermost in his mind at all times the fact that Walter has a superior knowledge of all phases of his employer's activities and because of this he should take Walter into his confidence whenever he is contemplating any important move.

Four Join Bridges In Reception Of Honorary Villanova Degrees

IN addition to Senator Styles Bridges, the following outstanding men will also receive honorary degrees from the University today.

Bishop Paul Yamaguchi

His Excellency The Most Reverend Paul Aijiro Yamaguchi, Bishop of Nagasaki, Japan, was born in July 14, 1894 in Nagasaki. He completed his philosophical courses at Nagasaki Seminary in July of 1921, was ordained to the priesthood in December of 1923 and graduated from the College of Propaganda Fidei in Rome in June of 1924.

The Bishop taught at Nagasaki Seminary for three and a half years before serving as the parish priest of Nishi-Naka-machi, Nagasaki city, for six years. In December of 1936 Bishop Yamaguchi was appointed Administrator of the Prefecture Apostolic of Kagoshima.

Appointment to the Bishopric came in September of 1937, and his consecration was held on November 7, 1937. He remained Ordinary of Kagoshima until the appointment of Msgr. Ideguchi as Administrator Apostolic of that jurisdiction in 1940.

Brother Stanislaus, F.S.C.

The President of La Salle College in Philadelphia is to be another recipient of an honorary degree. Brother Stanislaus, F.S.C., was born in Mahanoy Plane, Pennsylvania on August 20, 1915. In September of 1931 he joined the Order of Christian Brothers and four years later received his A. B. from Catholic University. In 1939 he received his A. M. and in 1944 a Ph. D. was granted from Catholic University.

Brother Stanislaus was Professor of Scholastic Philosophy at St. Joseph's College, University of Alberta, Canada, from 1937 to 1938, and then Professor of Philosophy at LaSalle College from 1939 to 1941.

Elevated to the Presidency in 1952 after serving as Dean of La Salle since 1945, Brother Stanislaus is now a member of the National Catholic Educational Association, Pennsylvania Catholic Educational Association, Alpha Epsilon Delta, Sigma Beta Kappa and Alpha Epsilon. He is the author of "Philosophy of Social Change."

Capt. J. A. McHenry

Captain Joseph A. McHenry, U.S.N., received a Bachelor of Science degree in Civil Engineering from Villanova College in 1927. Today he will receive an honorary degree as Doctor of Science from his Alma Mater.

Before the Navy called him in 1941, Captain McHenry had 13 years of engineering work behind him, with the Pennsylvania Department of Highways, United Engineers and Constructors, the Electric Power Equipment Company of Philadelphia, and the construction division of the Quartermaster Corps.

Edwin K. Daly, Sr.

Early in the war he was officer in charge of outfitting new constructions. Later he was transferred to the Philipine Islands, where he was cited for work with the Seabees.

Today Captain McHenry is the Deputy Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, having moved into that position from a tour of duty as the District Public Works Officer for the Fourth Naval District (Philadelphia).

Edwin K. Daly, Sr.

Edwin K. Daly, Sr., will receive an L.L.D. from the University today. Born in Bridgeport, Connecticut, in November of 1896, he served in World War I and was wounded at the Hindenberg Line.

After working for the Central Hanover Bank in New York Mister Daly entered the employ of Horn and Hardart in 1923. At the time of his appointment as President of the Company in New York in 1936, he was the youngest President of a multi-million dollar corporation in the United States. He was made President of the Philadelphia Company in 1941.

Mr. Daly, Sr., is Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Villanova Development Program, Knight of Malta, Knight Commander of the Holy Sepulchre, member of the boards of the Jefferson Hospital and Medical College, Drexel Institute of Technology, Children's Heart Hospital, Community Chest, St. Clair's Hospital of New York City, Villa Saint Joseph and the United Fund.

Emphasis Is Shifted

With an unusual display of class initiative the seniors recently elected permanent alumni officers to serve after graduation. The offices themselves are permanent, although elections to fill those offices will be held every five years.

This represents a decided shift in emphasis from local clubs to class-unit organizations. The new officers of the class of '55 feel that the initiation of this plan will accomplish a great deal toward retaining class unity and making the class an influential participant in Alumni affairs.

It is presently the policy of the Alumni Association to organize on the basis of individual chapters recruited on a territorial level. There now exist 73 of these local chapters. This unprecedented move by the class of '55 will have the effect of gradually altering the organization from territorial to individual class units. It is hoped that this idea will be emulated by succeeding classes so that the changeover can be completed.

The graduating seniors are reminded of the annual Alumni Reunion weekend to be held June 11, 12, and 13 on campus. This will be the first opportunity for the class to function with the Alumni Association and make its presence felt at an Alumni gathering. A truly wonderful weekened is planned, and reservations can be made through the Alumni Office in Mendel Hall.

Care and Feeding of '55 Grad

Of course, there should be no compulsion as to starting work exactly on time or working in periods of greater than 40 minutes in length. Walter must never be told that he is wrong. In this way Walter will turn out to be a top-notch employee.

If these instructions are carried out, and each in turn looks upon Walter with understanding and compassion, Walter will never have to leave the confines of his ivy-covered world.

Seniors: The Curtain Is Going Up

WE are the disillusioned, pessimistic, embittered youth of America. We have lost our idealism; we have no hope in the future; we are disgusted by the failures of the past. For us there is little left to defend because world peace has become unattainable. We are synical before our time — we believe in nothing, we hope in nothing, we love nothing. Pleasure is our God and money our goal.

Only a Negative

This is a photograph of youth as the authors of today see us — but only a negative, where everything is in reverse. If we develop the negative you will see that youth is a positive force to change the world.

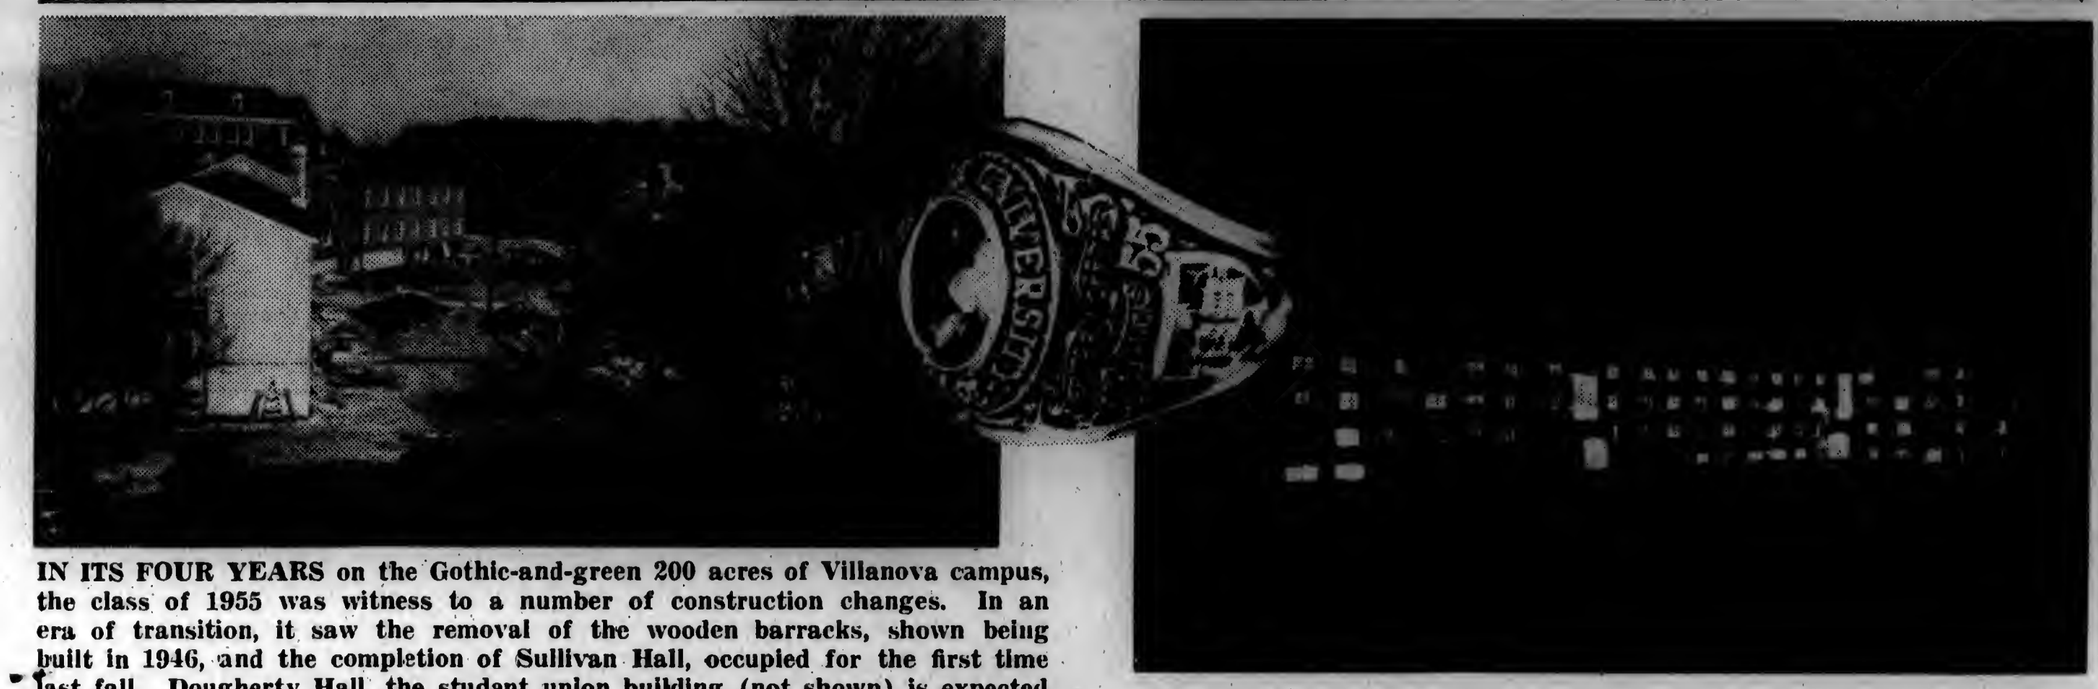
We are not disillusioned or pessimistic nor are we embittered. We have not lost our idealism but only modified it to the point where we see things more realistically. We have everything to defend because our Christian Democratic way of life is the only medium through which world peace is attainable. Sincerity is our only sin, not cynicism. Our credo is hope in ourselves and love of others. Our only god is God; our only goal is to lead ourselves and others to him.

Authors Correct

Perhaps what the authors say is true of the average American youth. But the average American youth is not a Catholic University graduate—we are. As men of Villanova we have received gifts worthy of the Magi; the frankincence of parental devotion, the myrrh of educational discipline and the golden blessings of our Catholic eritage.

Words cannot express our gratitude for the love and devotion of these gifts. The only true expression of our appreciation that we can offer is action—the action of utilizing these special gifts to our fullest capacity. Only then will we fulfill the obligations we owe to God, to our country, to our parents and our teachers as Christians and Americans.

We have a mandate as apostles of Catholic Action to teach all nations. Ignorance can only be overcome by love. We know the theory and the principles of the love which can positively change the world by erasing this ignorance. Now, we must apply them.



Our Faith is not a list of repeated platitudes. It is a real, vibrant, dynamic way of life. It does not begin or end at any specific time, but it is a minute-by-minute, day-by-day, lifetime role. We are not in the audience—we are before an audience. The world is our stage—and the world is watching us—watching for us to fall out of character.

Since we are Catholics, we must play the role as Catholics sincerely. It is not a part to be assumed at our convenience but it is a role to be played everywhere, at all times. The scene may shift, the audience may change, but the part remains the same.

Change of Audience

Soon the scene will shift to the parade ground or the deck of a rolling ship. In the military our audience may not be friendly, but indifferent, perhaps even hostile. Yet it is here that we must begin to change the world by love. The scene will shift again—to the home, to the business office, to the community. We will have a new audience, yet here, too, we must continue our apostleship of love which can rid the world of disillusionment, pessimism and bitterness.

It is now time for us to make our entrance upon the stage of life. We are not promised happiness—only the right to pursue happiness. We are not promised wisdom—only freedom of speech. We are not promised riches — only equality of opportunity. We are not promised peace—only liberty. It is up to us to insure them for ourselves. The time is now, the curtain is going up.

IN ITS FOUR YEARS on the Gothic-and-green 200 acres of Villanova campus, the class of 1955 was witness to a number of construction changes. In an era of transition, it saw the removal of the wooden barracks, shown being built in 1946, and the completion of Sullivan Hall, occupied for the first time last fall. Dougherty Hall, the student union building (not shown) is expected to be operating next fall. The ring is that of the class of 1955, one of the most handsome college rings worn today.

The '3.0 Men,' Ahem

The deans of the respective schools have singled out the following men for special recognition today for academic excellence. These men have achieved a 3.0 cumulative average or better for seven semesters of study.

Late Ball Scores

On May 18 Penn State pounded three Villanova pitchers for 11 hits and an 8-0 victory. Five Villanova errors contributed to the rout.

The only bright spot for Villanova in a very dreary day was the triple killing pulled in the seventh inning, when, with runners on first and second and none out, Penn State was retired third to second to first and home.

Delaware Dredged

With an NCAA tourney bid still a possibility, the Mainliners defeated the University of Delaware on May 21 on the Villanova diamond by a score of 6-0. Dan Severino, Wildcat right-hander, gave up four hits and struck out twelve. Jack Helm led the team at the plate with a triple, double, and single. Only one Delaware man reached second.

Penn Defeated

In the final game of the season Villanova defeated Penn 6-2 at Murphy Field.

Dan Severino gained his fifth decision in the eight starts as he held the Quakers to six hits and registered nine strikeouts. He retired the first nine batters.

The Wildcats jumped off to a 1-0 lead in the second inning on two walks and an error. Aided by home runs by Ron LaMontagne and Bill McGarry the Wildcats moved ahead, 5-0 after five innings.

Many Villanovans may not know it, but the mother of a college girl will be among the members of this year's graduating class. Mrs. Louis Carr, who will receive her B. S. in Nursing today, is the mother of a junior at the University of Cincinnati, Joanne Carr. She also has two other children, Patsy, who graduated from Lower Merion last Friday, and Andrew.

Mrs. Carr is also Night Supervisor at Lankenau Hospital.

Late Campus News:

Law School Building To Be Started In Fall

GROUND will be broken on September 22, 1955 at the corner of Spring Mill and County Line roads, marking commencement of the erection of Villanova's new Law School. The building will house a maximum of 350 students, thus permitting continuation of the school's tradition of high admission standards and individualized attention to the students.

Incorporated in the building will be faculty offices, seminar rooms, a large classroom furnished as a court room, accommodations for the student law club, and three levels of stack space designed to accommodate 150,000 volumes.

Looking back at two years progress during which the Villanova Law Library has risen from zero to 36,500 volumes, Arthur Pulling, Librarian, said recently, "We are exceedingly grateful to the members of the bar of Pennsylvania for the many gifts of books that they have made to this library."

Eventually, a new dormitory for the law students will be built next to the Law School building. Until that time the undergraduate halls will continue to house the students of the law school as well.

At present, working drawings of the new Law School are being completed by Henry D. Dagit and Sons, Philadelphia architects. A professional atmosphere will be the aim of the interior and exterior styling of the building.

Sophs Elect Decker

IN a special election held to break the tie vote between two candidates for the office of president of the Class of 1957, John Decker defeated Arthur Odabash by a vote of 314 to 178.

The new president is an on-campus resident student hailing from Garden City, Long Island, N. Y. He is in the Engineering school. His opponent, Odabash, is a resident student in the Commerce and Finance school of the University.

Capt. Drury To Retire

ON the thirtieth day of this month Captain Martin J. Drury, U.S.N., commanding officer of Villanova's N.R.O.T.C. Unit, will conclude thirty years of Naval Service.

The Captain has commanded destroyers and attack transport ships; he was the Damage Control Officer for the cruiser Marblehead and the Executive Officer for the cruiser Quincy. Before assuming the office of Professor of Naval Science at the University he was the Inspector General for the Fourth Naval District.

Who's Who Committee To Submit 50 Senior Names

Francis Cardinal Spellman, D.D., Cardinal Archbishop of New York, and most prominent guest at the St. Thomas of Villanova celebration, joins University President Rev. James Donnellon, O.S.A., in breaking ground for the new law school building. The plant, to include housing quarters for students as well as classroom facilities and faculty offices, will be constructed on the corner of County Line Road and Spring Mill Road.

Cardinal Spellman Guest:

Celebration of St. Thomas' Feast "Most Impressive"

Francis Cardinal Spellman, Archbishop of New York, helped Villanova glance into its past and take a long look into its future during the day-long ceremonies commemorating the 400th anniversary of the death of St. Thomas of Villanova, the school's patron saint.

Following a Solemn Pontifical Mass in the Field House Sept. 22, opening up what priests called "one of the most impressive observances ever held on the campus," Cardinal Spellman was awarded an honorary Doctor of Literature degree by the Very Rev. James A. Donnellon, O. S. A., University President.

Law School Groundbreaking

Later in the afternoon the Cardinal turned the first spadeful of dirt on the site of the proposed law school building on the hill overlooking the Pennsylvania Railroad tracks.

After the Mass—the first solemn pontifical Mass celebrated at Villanova since the centennial celebration in 1943—Dougherty Hall was dedicated by the Most Rev.John F. O'Hara, Archbishop of Philadelphia.

In his address, Cardinal Spellman said that America soon might become the last stronghold of free civilization. He urged colleges to preserve truth and the ideals of freedom and Americanism.

"The important role of the university is to fit our youth intelligently, purposefully and courageously to face the varied and mighty problems that confront us as individuals and as a nation. Youth needs not only knowlege but a philosophy of living."

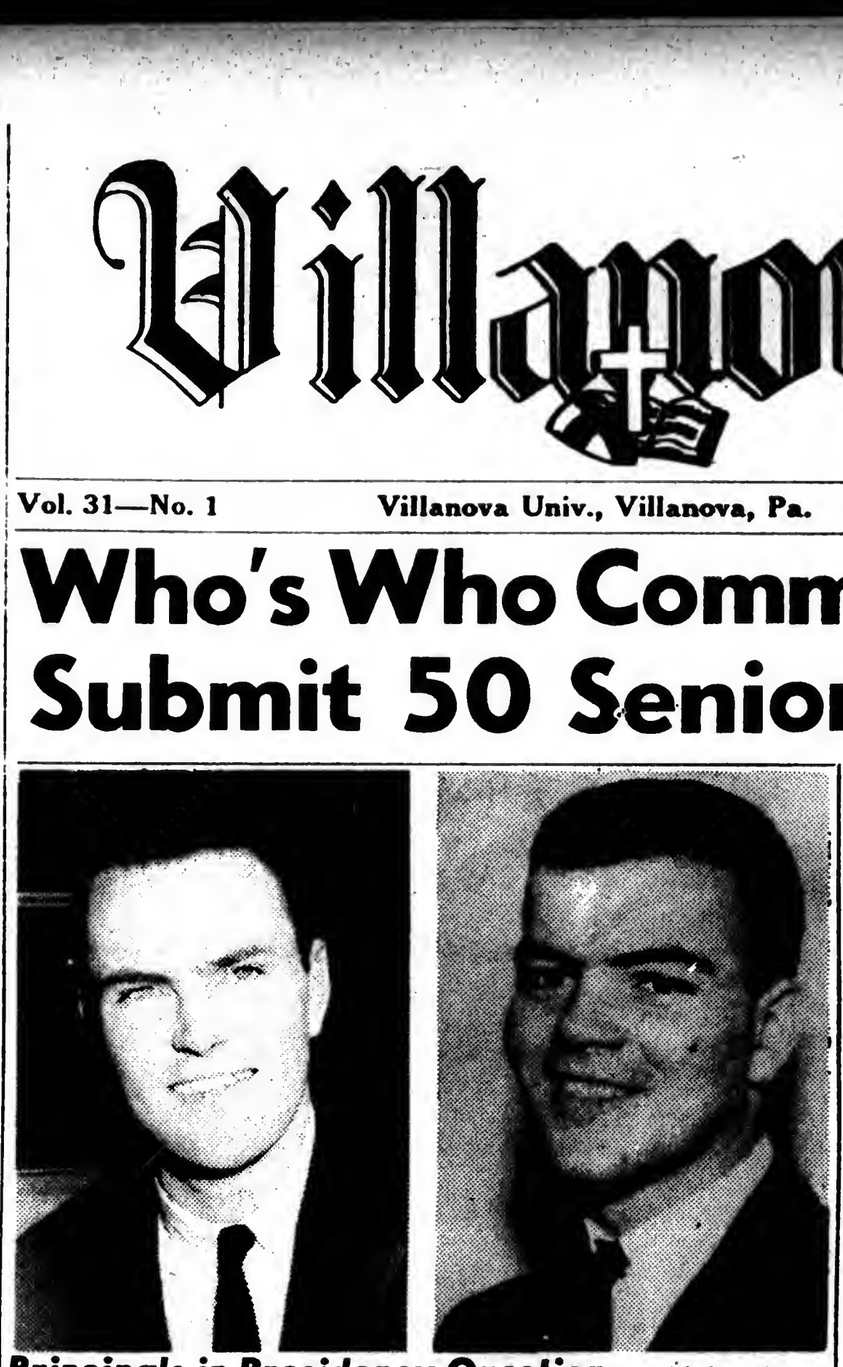
Ground Broken For Law School On County Line

Ground for the new School of Law building, at the corner of Spring Mill and County Line Roads, was broken on Sept. 22, day of the St. Thomas of Villanova fourth centennial celebration, by His Eminence, Francis Cardinal Spellman, Archbishop of New York and the Honorable Horace Stern, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. However, the Very Reverend James A. Donellon, University President, says that construction must await the return of the plans from the architect and the publication of bids.

Facilities for 350

Classroom facilities in the law building have been planned for a total enrollment not exceeding 350 students, which will permit the continuation of the Law School's tradition of high admission standards and individualized attention to the students. The central portion of the layout will contain administrative and faculty offices, seminar rooms, and accommodations for the student law club.



A major feature of the new structure will be a large reading room, occupying an entire floor of a wing in the rear of the building. Below this floor there will be three levels of library stack space accommodating 150,000 volumes. The rapid growth of the Villanova Law Library has made this an urgent necessity.

Among the special facilities included in the plans is a large classroom furnished as a court room, to be used both for mock trials and for appellate arguments. A judicial bench and bar and a jury box will furnish Principals in Presidency Question — Pictured are Tom Mullen, left, present acting president and official vice-president of the Class of 1956, and Frank Hartmann, who resigned the presidency to enter the Augustinian seminary. The question of whether to elect a new president or have Mullen move up into that post was put to the seniors in poll form by moderator Rev. Thomas A. Calpin, O. S. A., last week, but as of yesterday the results had not officially been made known.

Social Season Underway:

Blazer Ball October 14; Sophs Prepare Cotillion

Villanova's social season will get off to a dancing start on Oct. 14 when the juniors put on their Blazer Ball. Two weeks later the sophomores will dress up the Field House for their Sophomore Cotillion.

The Blazer Ball, designed to weld a closer link among the third-year men, will be closed to juniors. Music will be provided by the Commodores.

Sophs Go South

For their Cotillion the sophomores are dipping back into Civil War history for their theme.

They've chosen "The Battle of Richmond" theme for the dance, to be held on the eve of the Villanova - University of Richmond football game.

Mike Rafferty, general chairman of the cotillion, said a band has not been selected. Tickets, priced at $2.50 a couple, will be on sale in the Pie Shoppe.

Rafferty promised the "most different" Cotillion in sophomore class history.

Bob Schiller, chairman of the Blazer Ball, announced a seasonal theme for the unifying dance. Tickets will cost $2 per couple.

Decorations Announced

Decorations will consist of pumpkins without candles, cornstalks. A pond, framed with wooden trellises, will be set up in the middle of the Field House. Co-chairmen of decorations are Mike Guida and Dick Cooke.

Other chairmen: Joe Keffer, tickets; Dave Borcik, band; Jack Shea, publicity, and Art Odabash, refreshments.

The Blazer Ball was organized when the junior class' request for a ring dance was turned down by the Rev. George Mc-

Peer Appoints Three Students To New Group

The newly-organized President's Council on Students will meet "shortly" with the Very Rev. James A. Donnellon, O.S.A., University President, according to Student Council Chairman Dick Peer.

Peer has already chosen three members of the Council to meet once a month with Father Donnellon to form a "closer relationship" between students and faculty.

Seniors Harry Nash and Henry Whelan and junior Jack O'Rourke will join Peer and the Rev. George McLaughlin, O.S.A., Dean of Student Activities, on the president's council.

Replaces S-F Committee

Father Donnellon suggested last May that the council be formed to replace the three-year-old Student-Faculty Committee. Father McLaughlin was appointed to the group by the Father President.

When the President's Council was suggested Father McLaughlin called it "a growth in the development of cooperation among all groups on campus."

Peer said the new group should be "a faster working or-

List Then Narrowed To Thirty

A list of 50 seniors, from which 30 will be elected to Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities, will be submitted to administration officials Oct. 14.

The list is being compiled by a five-man committee appointed by Student Council Chairman Dick Peer.

During its first regular meeting of the year Council also:

Deferred action on a day hop's plaint of overcrowded conditions in parking lots adjacent to the campus.

Basca Award Chairmen

Appointed chairmen to organize each hall's participation in the annual Nick Basca decorating contest, to be judged on the night before the North Carolina State - Villanova homecoming football game.

Discussed plans for the campus-wide blood drive, scheduled for the last week of October. Jack Essig, a Council member and midshipman executive officer in the NROTC unit, was named drive chairman.

DICK PEER

SC President

The senior committee is tradionally made up of the president of the class in its sophomore year, in this case, Bernie Steinfelt; its junior year president, Harry Nash; its senior class president, Tom Mullen (acting president); the editor of the VILLANOVAN, Harry Nash, (giving him two votes of the six); the editor of the BELLE AIR, Dick Fitzpatrick; and the editor of the Villanova ENGINEER, Jake Clancy.

To the Seniors . . .

Frank Hartmann's decision to enter the Augustanian Seminary not only took from the Class of 1956 one of its most promising and capable members, it also left the seniors facing the problem of filling Frank's vacated presidency post.

A good bit of discussion had been circulating recently regarding the course of action to pursue in the matter, and a good many procedures were suggested. Feeling, however, that no clear-cut handbook ruling or precedent covered the situation, class moderator Rev. Thomas A. Calpin, O. S. A. concurred with the steering committee in the conviction that the class members should have the authoritative say in the matter, and polled the seniors accordingly.

Regardless of the course of action chosen, it is hoped that the class, so outstanding in the past three years, will resolve the problem with as much insight and wisdom as it has shown previously. Once the new president is installed, the seniors should, and no doubt will, back him with the same bigness and unity and enthusiasm that has prevailed since the fall of 1952.

And the Freshmen . .

For the first few weeks of each school year the two groups observed with the most interest are he Orientation Committee and the freshmen class. It is common knowledge that the purpose of Orientation is to give to the freshmen a taste of the fellowship and spirit which is such a big par of life here at Villanova.

This task is complicated by the indifference of some committee members, the desire of a small minority of the frosh to "put something over" on he upperclassmen, and many other factors.

This year, however, Villanova has been blessed by a happy combination of willing freshmen and a spirited Committee. Certainly there are some who haven't abided by the regulations concerning Orientation: we can only hope that in the very near future they will realize the true worth of this period. But the ohers are to be commended for having accepted orientation willingly. These are the freshmen who have taken their first big step in becoming Men of Villanova.

And to a New Era...

The University's expansion plan, now heading into its third phase in form of the new law building, has produced for Villanova one of the finest edifices ever to grace any campus in the form of Dougherty Hall.

Although its dining facilities will not be open probably until late in the semester, the student union building, its cornerstone laid barely two weeks ago, is already offering some of its space for organization usage. The radio station, the newspaper, the student activities departmen and several ohers are already set up in part, and the barbershop, Roger Peet's university shop, and the bookstore will soon set up permanent shop therein.

With a building like Dougherty Hall soon to be available, however, it's not overly difficult to be patient. Ultra-modern in every respect, the building will become the focal point of the school's physical life and he symbol of the advent of a new era for Villanova.

The new era, of course, is just beginning. Its possibilities are limitless.

Some Progress Noted:

A Study of Segregation A Year After SC Decision

It has been approximately one year since the Supreme Court handed down its decision upon the question of racial segregation in the nation's schools. It has also been one year since the writer has had something to say about the still "burning" issue. I would like, at this time, to once again take a look at the question to see what progress, if any, has been made during the first year of the anti-segregation decision.

In December, 1954 the Supreme Court of the United States decreed that racial segregation was a direct violation of the Constitution, and ruled that measures must be taken to end segration in the American public school system, especially in the Southern part of this country. Now that a new school term has begun, we may take a look at the happenings throughout some 17 southern and border states, which were directly responsible for the Court's action as regards to this issue. Thousands of white and negro students are regularly attending classes in nine of the states, most of which lie in the fringe area. The majority of these border states, except to carry out the integration to its limit. However, in eight states which represent the Deep South no change can be seen, and the schools will remain segregated until a long legal battle has been carried cut. Some of these states have employed a considerable amount of legal talent and are prepared for years of arguing in the courts.

Changes on the Borders

It is mostly around the borders of the old Confederate states that the changes are taking place. Increasing numbers of white schools are allowing Negroes to enter their classes. This is, however, happening in areas where the ratio of Negroes to whites is smallest. Resistance is stronger in rural areas with a high percentage of negroes.

One of the particular sorespots last year was the state of Deleware. We may note that this state began the change-over last year along with Maryland, West Virginia, Missouri, and Arkansas. I am sure that the immediate action of these states plus that of the District of Columbia has inspired other states toward lifting the ban. One of the obstacles that the state of Delaware had to surmount was the harranging of the rabble-rousing demogogue, Bryan W. Bowles. At this time, a year later, Bowles has completely faded out of the picture. The states which have accepted integration are Delaware, West Virginia, Maryland, Kentucky, Tennessee, Missouri, Arkansas, Oklahoma, and Texas. The states which have not accepted the Supreme Court ruling are the old Confederate states, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Florida, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana. There has been some progress made in Louisiana due to the efforts of the Catholic Church, which has a much wider influence there than in most Southern areas and plans for the integration of parochial schools are being considered. A number of organizations are being set up in these states with special legal committees to help communities that may be used by negroes for admission to schools. Echoes of the old "Klu Klux Klan" have been heard resounding throughout Georgia and Florida. Louisiana also has a number of prejudiced organizations of which one is known as "Southern Gentlemen."

Communist Exploitation

This whole business of social prejudice is particularly distasteful and definitely has international implications. The Communist Party is certainly exploiting the issue to its fullest extent.

The countries of the world look upon the U. S. as being insincere. In the United Nations organization our representatives preach the doctrine of equality of rights and opportunities, yet we cannot resolve this basic difficulty in our own homeland. How can we hope to solve world problems when we cannot agree at home?

What is the answer? Brotherhood in Christ is the basic one, but the solution is too idealistic for the arrogant, misled people who continue to campaign for segregation. The only practical solution is the gradual breaking down of the traditions which are at the base of the problem. States such as Texas and Arkansas have broken with the tradition of the Deep South, and if two states are willing to forgive their barriers I can not see why the others do not. I am confident that a constant hammering at the foundations will weaken the entire structure, so that some time in the not too distant future all the states will comply. When that time comes we, as a country, will find it quite a bit more easy to live in the true Christian spirit—The brotherhood of man among all the countries upon the face of this earth.

WHAT SHOULD SCHOOL DO TO UP SENIOR TRADITION?

September 25, 1955

Dear Sir:

Villanova is completely lacking in senior tradition. Other colleges and universities have senior dorms, lounges, walks, special permission in regards to hours and car useage, etc. Villanova has none of these traditions which should make senior year in college a special one.

I would like to see the official opening of Dougherty Hall be a senior dinner, also one of the lounges be set aside for the use of seniors alone.

Yours truly,
William F. Meyer

OLD GRAD LASHES OUT AGAINST MAGAZINE ARTICLE

Dear Sir:

I think the "Post" has played a pretty dirty trick on Villanova. Publicity is nice, but not this kind. Your paper should express Villanova's distaste.

If you want to know how one "old grad" feels, there is attached a copy of my letter to the ("Post") editor. I'm sure many others have similar thoughts, and that you'll hear them . . .

And here's the "old grad's" letter to the "Post":

Dear Sir:

I've just finished digesting an article in your September 24th issue entitled "Big Time Football Blues". I failed to see the "why" for this article. For what reason did you choose to lay bare my alma mater's family football secrets? I'm sure they wouldn't request a thing like this, and I can't think of what real interest would be to anyone.

I'm afraid that brothers Paxton and Leaming didn't see our beautiful "woods" for looking at our football "trees". Don't you think football has run interference for Villanova's basketball, track and baseball? And it did a good job, for all three of those sports have "scored." Yes, our "woods" are mighty pretty and I'm sure Villanova's alumni are proud of the school's athletic program. I think it was wrong for the writers to "harp" so much on the last few seasons which the records prove are not indicative of Villanova football. Everyone has a bad day! Incidentally, it is my humble opinion that the lack of school spirit that authors talk about also shows on the radio announcer broadcasting the games!

If you didn't intend to be injurious by your article, you'd better figure out another way to say what you meant to—whatever that could be! There were so many, many nice things you could have said.

(Signed)
Yours sincerely
George Pequignot,
Wilmington, Del.

REMEMBER THE GREAT TIMES: DOES ANYBODY KNOW JACK?

Dear Mr. Editor:

Concerning the forthcoming game between Villanova and Boston College to be played in Boston this Saturday, I would like to express my hope that you all do what you can to encourage your student body to accompany the team to Boston.

As a former student at Villanova in my freshman year, and presently a junior at BC, I am most anxious to renew old acquaintances with members of your junior class whose names are too numerous to mention.

We at Boston College are planning much in the way of entertainment for our foes from the Main Line, and so you may assure your student body that, although your team won't win the trip to Beantown this weekend will be more than worthwhile.

(Signed)
John C. Cronin (Jack)
Watertown, Mass.

P. S. I would appreciate hearing from anyone coming up who remembers the great times we had two years ago.

The freshmen opened the current campaign with a "Sunday Social", and last weekend the upperclassmen tried to get even with them by having a jazzie concert. The Seniors trying a comeback are all set for a Meet Your Mate party this weekend. All seniors and elderly juniors, in fact anybody at all, please come.

SENIORS—

Bob Cassidy, Feature Editor of the 1956 Belle Aire, reminds all seniors that senior history forms must be turned in no later than Friday of this week, October 7. Forms, available in the Pie Shoppe, Mendel Cafeteria, and Room 222, Sullivan Hall, may be returned in completed form to boxes conveniently situated at these locations, or to the yearbook office in the basement of Mendel Hall.

A Visit With Ernest Hemingway:

The Storied Bell Still Tolls: But Softly, Softly . . . . .

By JOSEPH M. BARRETT

ED. NOTE — When senior Midshipmen Joe Barrett and Jack Kelly were on contract NROTC cruise this past summer, they had an opportunity to visit one of the most prominent and controversial creative artists of our time, Ernest Hemingway, at his home in Cajimar, in Cuba. They spent several hours in informal conversation with Hemingway, and here is the first installment of Barrett's account of the interview.

For fifty cents he would take us to the place where the ferries leave for Casa Blanca. That being understood, Jack and I hopped in the taxi and were driven through the alternately wide and narrow streets of Havana. It is a marvelous city of great contrast—extreme luxury and extreme poverty. This makes for some very interesting sights.

After ten minutes of "interesting sights" we arrived at the harbor area and boarded the ferry for Casa Blanca. The ferries which cross Havana harbor are certainly the most unusual I have ever seen. They are small and look like a child's home-made toy boat. They sit very low in the water so that I got the feeling of an impending flood of water. A single stack perches jauntily on the top and the tiny ferries puff pertly across the harbor past some of the proudest ships in the world.

Across the Harbor

We were carried across the warm water of the harbor, under the great grey bows of the cruisers, Roanoke and Newport News, which towered above us, until we arrived at the Casa Blanca landing. It was like stepping into another world. We had left the grasping, cosmopolitan atmosphere of Havana for the beginning of Cuban countryside.

There appeared to be many bus lines departing from Casa Blanca. We ran from the ferry landing to the bus stop and just caught the bus for Cajimar. Cajimar is a small fishing village on the Atlantic side of Cuba and we had been told that Ernest Hemingway was there directing the filming of The Old Man and the Sea.

Out of Casa

Once out of Casa Blanca we were in the country progressing through landscapes dotted with small farms and horizons lined with palm trees of varying heights. It is a very appealing island. The bus — which was certainly a relic of post-Spanish War days—descended from the flat land along the tapering slope to the sea. It moved along the slant street which splits Cajimar and at the bus stop we jumped down into the dirt roadway.

It is a small town of almost unbelievable quiet. The small inlet was unrippled by wind or wave and the tiny fishing boats were lying dry on the beach or moored quietly in the water. Small shacks dotted the beach area, and if that recalls a familiar image, it is not surprising, for Cajimar is the town of The Old Man and the Sea, and the fishermen live in these shacks just as the story recounted."

"We Inquired"

We inquired as to the author's whereabouts at a restaurant across the street from the bus stop:

Me: La casa del Senor Hemingway es aqui?

Innkeeper: (Fat, jovial, very anxious to please) No Senor—(Long torrent of fluent Spanish.)

Me: No! No! No Comprendo Espanol muy bein. (This was a great understatement.)

Innkeeper appears puzzled. Figures that we want to drink and tries to seat us at an outdoor table.

Me: No drink! (Fumbling for Spanish) Senior Hemingway es aqui

Innkeeper: Hemingway? (Turns to his wife and they exchange Spanish hotly and furiously.) He turns back to me and starts another torrent.

Me: No! No! No comprendo!

Innkeeper: (Very puzzled, looks about in amazement with hands spread open and winds up trying to seat us again.)

On Our Way

Jack and I look at each other and start to leave. The innkeeper begins another flood which sounds like an apology and we are politely bowed out to the street.

We walked up the street asking all in sight, "Comprende Ingles?" It seemed that we were the only people in town capable of speaking English. As we walked past a small store shack-like candy store a middle aged man stepped out from a group of old men and small boys.

"Yes, sirs, I do."

And so we met our benefactor who questioned all the people in Cajimar who could possibly

Autumn Conscience

By BOB FARLEY

While strolling about campus last week, I met a friend who had spent the summer at a southern New Jersey resort. The only apparent change he had undergone was in his acquisition of an even tan and possibly some muscle toning, but as I listened to him, I began to realize that he had found what Victor Herbert called "the sweet mystery of life"—Love. Now I warned him of the many definitions of love and then asked him what he thought it was and why he was so certain. This was his answer:

BOB FARLEY

"We are all born with different God-given talents and weaknesses, capacities and incapacities, but the one thing common to us all is an immortal soul and the greatest power of that soul is the power to love. What is love? Love isn't a thing but an action and in as much God is Pure Act, God is Love. There are no adequate words to describe and explain God. The most trite and also the most expressive words are 'I love you'."
and also the most expressive words are 'I love you' ".

Noticing a quizical look on my face he said, "Maybe after you hear my story, you'll understand."

"I took a job as a busboy at a shore restaurant, having decided this may be my last vacation for awhile since I would be a senior in the fall and after graduation, who knows? I only wanted to relax and have a good time. As usual in such a place I met many new faces, the majority being female, but for me there was to be only one, Danni. Now I don't mean to sound as if I just read True Romance or as if I believe in 'Love at first sight' because I honestly loved her before I met her, but from that day on I have loved everything a little more intensely. Certainly I believe there are many aspects of love but this was the love born in the soul, inflaming the emotions, controlled by reason, and necessarily leading to the married state by the grace and will of God. We dated for Mass, the movies, the beach, dances, parties, and just 'walk and talk' nights on occasion. Then came the test and the reason why I am certain."

Some talker, this boy, but he hadn't lost me yet so I listened as he went on.

"One night she told me that she didn't think the feeling was the same, but I knew she had been dating the football captain of one of the Academies and after all, the season was 'just around the corner'. Well, I smiled and told her not to worry about it, and I was just as happy as ever since my happiness came from loving her and that is why I am certain. Someday we'll be together again but that is God's will." He stopped talking and his countenance told me that he was thinking of someone else, probably Danni. Anticipating his departure I sighed, "Friend, please don't leave me." He smiled and whispered, "Friend, I will never leave you because, you see, I am your Conscience."

Dean Reuschlein's Singers Open Season for Alumni

The Villanova Singers made their first public appearances of the year last Thursday evening, singing first at the opening Mass of the Evening School, then at Dougherty Hall where they entertained the Philadelphia Alumni Club Fund Raising Committee.

The group sang the Mass of Jan Mul, famed Dutch composer, and chanted the propers of the Mass of the day, Michelmas. Celebrant of the Solemn High Mass was the Rev. James A. Donnellon, O. S. A., University President. At the Fund Raising dinner they offered three numbers, "Halls of Ivy", "Calm as the Night", and "Eight Bells", as well as the Alma Mater.

Three Men Appointed

Two days earlier Dr. Harold Gill Reuschlein, director and choirmaster, announced the appointments of Jack Jannucci as Business Manager and Jack Padova and Jim Heffernan as Publicity Directors. All have been associated with the Singers since the reorganization two years ago.

Jannucci will be in charge of arranging concerts for the coming year. Padova and Heffernan will be responsible for publicizing the activities of the Singers here and at neighboring colleges.

For the Freshmen, A Primer: Villanova's Why, Wherefore

Questions On Campus Activity

by Clem Birch

During the past two weeks, the class of 1959 has become an integral part of Villanova University. It is integral because without it Villanova would be minus an enormous amount of fresh spirit and new blood.

The biggest obstacle to be surmounted upon entry into the University is perhaps the unfamiliarity with the campus, the places to go with dates, and the types and functions of campus activities. One of these problems will sooner or later confront the incoming Frosh.

Problem number one:

Q. Where can I get a date?

A. Rosemont College is but a short walk. Other nearby girls' colleges are: Immaculata, Bryn Mawr, and Harcum. All of these have numerous social events where it is easy to get acquainted with the girl of your choice.

Q. Where can I go on a date?

A. You always have the movies when finances are low. But if you have a little extra cash the Drexelbrook Inn in Drexel Hill, Pa., is a quiet place with good dance music, and so is the Exton Lodge in Paoli, Pa. A little further away in Norristown is The Barn and in Jenkintown, The Paddock.

If you like Dixieland jazz and who doesn't — you'll find that just about the best around here is to be heard at Billy Krechmer's jam sessions at 1648 W. Ranstead St. in Philadelphia. Other spots to visit are, Kugler's near Broad Street under John Wanamaker's Department Store, and The Old Mill on Baltimore Pike. There is also the Anchorage on the West River Drive.

Q. Where can I take my weekend date to eat?

A. The Conestoga Mill on Haverford Road in Bryn Mawr, or the Viking Inn on Lancaster Pike in Ardmore are the local places. If you lean to the places with atmosphere, Maurice's at 236 So. Quince St. in Philadelphia fills the bill. The food is fabulous and gypay msic is piped through the restaurant.

Q. How about the local movies?

A. One apiece in both Bryn Mawr and Wayne and two in Ardmore are easily reached. There are also three theatres in the 69th Street section of Philadelphia. There are two more in Norristown. These last five are easily reached by the P. and W. railroad.

Q. Where can I get a snack at night?

A. Before 8 p. m. the Pie Shop is open and ready to serve you. After 8 you have Ben's on the campus' southwest corner or the Moo diagonally across the street.

Q. Which other publications appear on campus besides the VILLANOVAN?

A. 1. The Lynx. Twice a year, containing short stories, poems and other anecdotes.

2. The Business Whirl. Twice a year, containing some of the happenings in the business world.

3. The Villanova Engineer. A quarterly put out by the engineers containing many facts about the engineering profession.

Questions On Social Activity

Q. Where is the radio station?

A. Third floor in Dougherty Hall.

Q. Where is the VILLANOVAN office?

A. After 11 P. M. it's anyone's guess.

Q. What are all the rooms in Dougherty Hall for?

A .The pie shop, cafeteria, Rogers Peet haberdashery, lounges, radio station, VILLANOVAN office, Administration offices, and the book store.

Q. Will the lines move faster in the new cafeteria?

A. Probably not.

Q. Can I get into a fraternity? How?

A. Yes. Just watch the bulletin board in the pie shop for details.

Q. Where does Villanova play their basketball games?

A. Either in the field house, or in Penn's Palestra.

Q. How do I get to the Palestra?

A. P&W to 69th street and the "el" to 32nd street. Walk two blocks to Spruce street and the Palestra.

Q. Where is there a good hotel to put up a weekend date?

A. The Walnut Park Plaza at 63rd and Walnut Street, in Philadelphia. Twenty minutes by car, 30 minutes by P. T. C.

Chapel Notice

Chapel exercises will begin Monday at 6:45 p. m. according to the Rev. Joseph Kemme, O.S.A. university chaplain.

PUBlicly Speaking . . .

By JIM & MIKE

. . . It has been brought to our attention that certain students are hogging the recreation rooms in the bottom of Sullivan Hall These students have even gone so far as to bring their beds in with them . . .

. . . The Bryn Mawr Hospital reports three cases of hit-and-run bicycle victims, stemming from this campus. As yet the only words the patients have been able to utter, incoherenly, are "Jake Clancy" . . .

. . . Word has it that someone has taken over Dick Fitzpatrick's high diving act at Rosemont's pond . . .

. . . Classroom space is becoming so scarce that, as rumor has it, Dr. Bauer is now holding some classes in Leary Hall . . .

. . . In the future, entrance requirements at Villanova will stipulate the possession of a Villanova blazer . . .

Davis and Cover were among 37 PLC candidates from Villanova training at the Virginia center in the Summer of 1955.

There were also eight NROTC Marine candidates involved in the six-week sessions at Quantico: Midshipmen J. D. Alton, J. L. Decker, C. W. Doyle, W. D. Gould, E. H. Ernst, H. E. Knoblock, J. D. Tierney and T. F. Gorham.

Leads Colleges

Villanova sends more Marine candidates to Quantico for training as future officers than any other NROTC college in the nation, of which there are 52. The Marine Corps unit has been in existence here since the NROTC unit replaced the old V-12 program in 1946. The V-12 system was originated in 1942, the beginning of actual collegiate military training at Villanova.

New midshipmen officers are Edward Ernst, battalion commander; Jack Essig, battalion executive officer; Don Alton, Able Company commander; Julian Groeller, Baker Company commander; Pete Quinn, Charlie Company commander; Walter Gould, drill team commander; and Gino Gallina, band conductor.

New members are still needed to complete the staff of the BELLE AIR. At a meeting held last Wednesday evening in the basement of Mendel Hall, Editor-in-chief Dick Fitzpatrick said that "a photographer and copy readers are still very much in demand."

"New policies will be in effect this year," continued Fitzpatrick. Highlighting these is a new advertisement system intended to realize more money...

The BELLE AIR office is open daily from 11:30 a. m. to 1:30 p. m. for those interested in joining the staff.

Barrett, Eddinger Plan Expansion

Beginning with its first issue of the year, expected around the Thanksgiving holidays, the Lynx, Villanova's cutlet for campus litterary talent, will abandon the pocket-size ranks for a larger size in both forms and content.

The expansion of the content depends on the amount of material received from those on campus who are writers by either fact or desire. Editors Joe Barrett and John Eddinger sai the Lynx is not an arts magazine but should and will contain material from all elementsof the campus population. Everyone who submits material can be sure that it will be given personal critical attention, they said.

Taddeo Outlines Plans for IRS; UN Junket Set

The initial meeting of the International Relations Society was held during the past week. After an introduction of officers, and a welcoming of both new an old members, president Phil Tadeo outlined a tentative list of activities which would take place this year.

Trips and Sports

Plans are underway for the United Nations, and Washington D. C., trips. Dues must be payed before members will be allowed to participate in such trips. A golf contest between the IRS and the DPM Arts fraernity has been scheduled for Wednesday and Thursday, Oct. 12, and 13. Any interested members in either organization may get details from Owen Hickey in 228 Sullivan.

Announcements for the next meeting will be placed upon the bulletin boards. Freshmen as well as upper classmen are invited to join the organization.

Decker, Assistants Have Big Plans:

Juniors' Chairmen Named; Seniors Make Preparations

Dinner-Dance, Prom, Dad's Day Are Highlights

The chairmen of the Senior Class, while awaiting final action on the vacated presidency question, are going ahead with work on the various projects set for 1955-'56.

Class moderator Father Thomas A. Calpin, O.S.A., agreed with the steering committee last week that, regardless of who assumes the presidency, the chairmen appointed last May by Frank Hartmann will retain their positions.

Band Fee Lower

Jerry Guerrisi, last year's treasurer and now prom chairman, is working on prom band possibilities with a reduced band fee ceiling of $1000 at his disposal. The prom, also termed the "Belle Air Ball", is set for Friday evening, January 13.

Phil Butler, whose crew did an acknowledgedly outstanding job throughout last year, is once again in charge of decorations for the prom.

Nick Mazzoni and Tom Meaney, both experienced in the field, will handle the ticket traffic for the prom, dinner dance and Father's Day. Henry Guerrisi will work with all the chairmen in providing publicity for various projects.

Tickets ..... Nick Mazzoni, Tom Meaney
Decorations ..... Phil Butler
Publicity ..... Henry Guerrisi
Dinner Dance .. Tom McInerney
Prom ..... Jerry Guerrisi
Father's Day ..... Harry Nash

Maybe Palumbo's

Tom McInerney, chairman of the January 14 dinner dance has found Palumbo's to be the most suitable location and believes class opinion favors a return to the Philadelphia night club spot.

Father's Day chairman Harry Nash is investigating possibilities for the principal speaker for that occasion on April 21, a Saturday.

Dad's Day Meeting

Several new events may be added to Father's Day, in addition to the banquet and a baseball game and opening Mass. Nash hopes that the response to this event will be as complete and enthusiastic as was the turn-out for Mother's Day last May. He would like to meet with anyone interested in working on Father's Day in 215 Mendel tmorrow afternoon, at 5 p. m.

DPM May Play DPE Grid Game

At last week's organizational meeting, President Owen Hickey of the Delta Pi Mu Fraternity spoke of the fraternity's plans to expand the scope of activities for the coming year.

A challenge golf match with the International Relations Society has been arranged with a prize going to the winning team. There will be a play-off between the low scorer on each team.

Touch Football

A touch-football team to play inter-fraternity games is being considered. Tentative arrangemens have been made for a game with the Delta Pi Epsilon Fraternity.

A gala half-time show assisted by Delta Pi Epsilon members is to be performed at Villanova's homecoming game with North Carolina State.

Junior Week Plans Listed; Rings Fitted

Junior Week may be seven months in the future but class president Jack Decker and the steering committee have already begun thrashing out the important details for the biggest social week in their Villanova careers.

Plans for other junior year events, beginning with the Blazer Ball Oct. 14, have also been discussed with members of the class.

Chairman appointed by Decker:

Prom—Jack Fraser
Dinner-Dance—Tom Hooker
Mothers' Day—Jack O'Rourke
Orphans' Outing—Mike Boruch, Tim Kennedy and Art Odabash
Blazer Ball—Bob Schiller

Decker has already convened two meetings with his 30-man steering committee. It is in these sessions that the foundation for the year's events are laid.

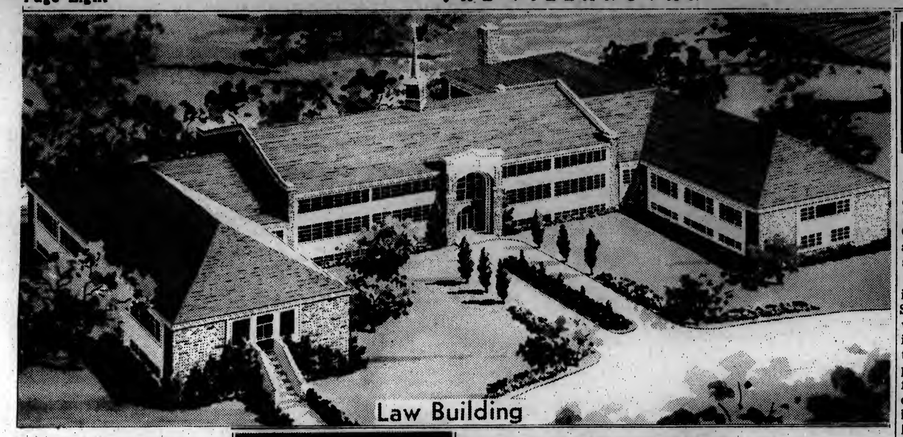
The committee's recommendations must be passed on by class members, however.

Fraser and his committee are still searching for a prom band. The administration has suggested that a band be selected asking a fee of around $1,000 to keep expenses of the prom as low as possible. The affair is designed as a "money making" event.

Some members of the steering committee, however, feel that a big name band will prove more of a drawing card. The prom band chairman, who has not been selected, will submit his findings to the Rev. Dante Girolami, O. S. A., class moderator.

Another problem facing the class is finding another social event to fill out the Junior Week schedule. Besides the Mothers' Day, prom and dinner dance, a talent show will probably be lined up.

This leaves two open dates. At Thursday's class meeting of juniors in arts and sciences and C & F, two proposals were made from the floor but no action was taken on either one.



They were: a jazz contest between a Dixieland and progressive aggregation and a square dance-hayride on one of the parking lots across Lancaster Pike.

About 160 juniors attended Thursday's session. A meeting for engineers was held Monday.

Meanwhile, second fittings of class rings were completed Thursday under the supervision of Jim Judge, ring chairman.

The main entrance to the building at County Line and Spring Mill Roads, will front on the late. The plot plans show space reserved in this large and previously undeveloped tract for eventual erection of a dormitory. Students of the School of Law will meanwhile continue to occupy dormitory space on the main campus area.

Dean Harold Gill Reuschlein announced that original specifications for the building were drafted after examination of the blue prints for all law school structure built in this country in the last decade. Working drawings are now being compleed by Henry D. Dagit and Sons, Philadelphia architects. The aim of styling, both interior and exterior, will be to create a professional atmosphere in which the students can be thoroughly trained for for admission to the practice of law.

Law School Forum

Villanova Law School Forum will open on Wednesday, Oct. 5th, at 8:15 p. m. Laurence H. Eldredge, Reporter to the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, will speak on "Recollections of British Courts."

Formerly a professor of law at the University of Pennsylvania and author of numerous legal articles and books, Mr. Eldredge has long had an intense interest in the British judicial system. He has attended the opening of the law courts in London and studied the traditions and practices which sustain the widely admired English sense of courtroom justice.

This opening talk, which will be held in Room 215, Mendel Hall, will be non-technical and informal. Undergraduates interested in the legal profession are welcome. The Law School Forum will present other programs on the first Wednesday of each month throughout the academic year.

MR. BALL
Joins Law School Staff

ND Graduate New Instructor For Law Staff

Dean Harold Gill Reuschlein has announced the appointment of William B. Ball of Westbury, New York to the gradually expanding faculty of the School of Law at Villanova University.

Mr. Ball has joined the full-time faculty as an Associate Professor of Law. He was at the time of his appointment, an Attorney for and Assistant Secretary of Chas. Pfizer & Co., Inc., of Brooklyn, and prior thereto was associated with the banking and shipping firm of W. R. Grace & Co., of New York. He is a member of the New York Bar and of the Bars of the U. S. District Courts of the Southern and Eastern Districts of New York.

ND Grad

He is a graduate of Western Reserve and holds his law degree from the University of Notre Dame where he was Editor-in-Chief of the Law Review. He saw active duty with the U. S. Navy from 1940 to 1946 and is at present a Lt. Commander in the Naval Reserve. He is a member of the Federal Tax Forum, Inc., the Consular Law Society and the Catholic Association for International Peace. For some time he served as a member of the Board of Zoning Appeals for Westbury, New York.

At Villanova, he will teach the courses in Equity, International Law and Domestic Relations.

Most Rev. Peter van Lierde

Vicar General of Vatican City Visits Villanova

Villanova received an honored son of the Augustinian order for a short visit this week. He is Most Reverend Peter Canisius van Lierde O. S. A., Bishop of Porphyriensis, Assistant at the Papal Throne, Vicar General of Vatican City, and Papal Sacristan.

Received Papal Appointment

His Holiness Pope Pius XII appointed Father Lierde to the position of Papal Sacristan and Vicar General of Vatican City. The position is similar to that of a bishop of a diocese. The appointment was made in January, 1951, shortly after the closing of the Holy Year.

Bishop van Lierde is a scholar of many interests. In November of 1954, he published a work in the Dutch language on the central government of the church. Its title is "Behind the Brass Door".

Honored by Queen

Honors come thick and fast for the Bishop. In February of 1955, His Excellency was named Vicar General of the patriarchal basilica of St. Peter's in Rome. Her Majesty Queen Juliana of the Netherlands nominated the Bishop a Knight of the Order of the Lion of Holland in June of this year.

BISHOP VAN LIERDE

In next week's issue of the Villanovan there will appear an interview with the Bishop.

Improvements in Halls, Field House, Rooms Noted

Summertime witnessed many major improvements effected in the halls, field house, stadium and about the campus grounds.

Sullivan Hall has had all its convertible rooms transformed into living quarters. Alumni Hall has a completely repainted interior, and its gym has acquired a new ceiling, light guards and brighter lights.

Fedigan Hall has also had its interior refinished, while Simpson, Delurey and Mendel halls were painted on the exterior. Good Counsel Hall was refloored with linoleum from top to bottom.

SSS-Steam Heat!

A steam pipe to convey heat to the Chemical Engineering, Naval Science and Library buildings has been laid to replace its deteriorating predecessor.

The Field house boasts a new loud speaker system, which was in operation at the opening day Mass.

Two four-inch ducts for telephone trunk lines were installed between Good Counsel and Dougherty halls. Two water coolers have been placed in the field house, two in Mendel Hall and two are expected to be installed in the C&F Building at a later date.

Spanish Olympics At Library

As part of the Centennial celebration at Villanova, the Friends of the Villanova University Library are conducting a Spanish Cultural Olympics, consisting of an exhibit in the library and a series of lectures.

Literature is well represented in the copies of the works of St. Thomas of Villanova, after whom the University is named; in those of Fray Luis de Leon, the Augustinian friar who was professor at Salamanca and a famous Spanish poet and mystical writer, and the translation into modern Spanish and English of a sixteenth century private document dated December 20, 1528.

Paintings Loaned

The arts are well represented in a number of paintings loaned by the Philadelphia Art Museum from the Lamborn collection. Especially interesting are two paintings by Fray Miguel de Herrera, O. S. A., a Spanish Augustinian priest who painted in Mexico, and two paintings of St. Augustine.

The cultural exhibit, which opened on Sept. 22nd, will be on display in the library to Oct. 12th inclusive. It may be seen daily from 8:30 A. M. to 9:15 P. M., on Saturdays from 8:30 A. M. to 5:00 P. M., and on Sundays from 2:00 P. M. to 5:00 P. M. There is no charge for admission to this exhibit.

Lectures on Program

The series of lectures, also sponsored by the Friends of the Villanova University Library are in the auditorium of the Commerce and Finance Biulding at 8:00 P. M.

Unlike the cultural exhibit, there is an admission charge of $1.25 for each lecture. Tickets for the lectures and information concerning the exhibit may be obtained at the University Library.

Fr. Hickey's Death Loss To Order

Most Reverend Joseph A. Hickey, O. S. A., former President of Villanova University and the first American to become Prior-General of the Order of St. Augustine, died last July 9, in the Bryn Mawr Hospital.

Father Hickey, 72, died after an illness of several months. He had resided at Villanova University since May, 1954.

A native of Chicago, Father Hickey graduated from Villanova in 1902. Father Hickey was ordained in the Augustinian Order in 1906. He returned to Villanova in 1910 when he became rector of the junior seminary. From then until 1925, when he became president of the University, Father Hickey was associated with Villanova.

Boston College TV Host To Villanova Saturday

By PAUL CLARKSON

On Saturday, Oct. 6th, Villanova's new-fanged Wildcats will meet the Eagles of Boston College at Fenway Park in Boston. The game is slated for 2:00 p. m. with B. C. a slight favorite.

Last season, the Jesuit school in New England posted a fine 8-1 record and it has twenty-one lettermen returning from that same team to play again this year.

Leading the parade of combat-tried veterans is big John Miller, Boston College's All-American candidate. Miller stands at 6'6", and weighs 235 lbs. He plays tackle and is outstanding on offense and defense.

Eight Regulars Return

In all, there are eight regulars returning to first string positions. The all-important quarterback slot is in the competent hands of Billy Donlan and Hank Sullivan.

Eddie DeSilva and Tom Magnarelli are two very powerful halfbacks. Playing between them in the straight-T offense which Eagle coach, Mike Holovak, employs is Middio Petrarca, a line-busting fullback.

Other experienced backs returning this season are Tommy Joe Sullivan, Don Seagar, Billy Alves and John Connolly.

On the line, besides Capt. Miller, are ends Dick Lucas and Emerson Dickie; Dick Myles at tackle; guards Vin St. Pierre and Tino Bertolini; Lenny Andrusaitis is again a tower of strength at center.

This year's renewal of the Boston College-Villanova rivalry has been chosen as the regional telecast for that Saturday, and may be seen all over the Eastern seaboard.

Won First, 33-0

The Chestnut Hill, Mass. school won its initial game this season from Brandeis by a comfortable margin, 33-0, and easily ranks with Army and Navy as powers in the East.

The game will be the twentieth meeting between the two schools in a rivalry which started in 1927. The last meeting was in 1953, and at present the record reads nine wins for B. C. and nine for Villanova, with one tie.

Touch League 2 Days Old; 50 Teams Play

Villanova University's Intramural Athletic Program was inaugurated Monday, October 3 with the Touch Football League swinging into action. Under the direction of Ed Geisz the Intramural Department hopes to have more participants than ever before in Villanova's history. A record was established last year when 3500 participants engaged in one or more activities.

Dick Jablonski (senior Arts) was recently elected President of the Intramural Council. Pete Murphy (senior C and F) and Jim Moran (soph Arts) were appointed as Co-Student Directors. This organization meets every Thursday morning in the intramural office to hear any student grievances concerning the intramural activities.

50 Teams In League

Fifty teams are scheduled to play in the Touch Football Leagues. Games are being played at Austin and Mendel fields in either 10:30, 2:30 or 4:30 leagues. This schedule has been arranged so that all students will have the opportunity to participate. Anyone wishing to officiate at these games is urged to sign up at the Intramural office.

On October 4 the Doubles and Singles Horseshoe tournament were held on Mendel Field. The basketball Foul Shooting contest has been arranged for tomorrow on the outdoor basketball courts. Results of the horseshoe tournaments were not available when this paper went to press.

Muff Day Planned

Traditional Muff Day (Move Up Forward Frosh) will take place on October 13. The Freshman Class will engage the Sophs in athletic events on Mendel Field. If the Frosh are victorious they will be no longer required to wear their "regs." If the Sophs triumph the Frosh face the ordeal of wearing their "regs" until Thanksgiving.

Villanova's nursing students are also provided for in this program. Swimming, basketball and their annual tennis tournament have been scheduled.

A BAYLOR RUNNER CASTS WARY EYE AT WILDCAT

Villanova "Looks Good" In Dropping First Two Game

Team Shows Indications Of Successful Season

By DICK BRADY

The Villanova Wildcats opened their sixty-second season of football at Municipal Stadium on Sept. 24, against the highly touted Baylor Bears, and came out on the short end of a 19-2 decision. The following Saturday, the Main Liners took the field against a power-packed Kentucky eleven at Lexington, and suffered defeat number two of the young season, 28-0.

The score of the initial contest, however, belies the fine showing made by the Wildcats. It was a question, almost entirely, of not getting the breaks. Two Villanova fumbles in the second quarter opened the gates for two Baylor touchdowns, after a scoreless first period.

Baylor got their final score early in the second half when Villanova quarterback John Ferroulo had the ball knocked from his hands while trying to pass from his own end zone. Baylor recovered, missed the conversion, and led by 19 points.

Excel in Second Half

From that point, Villanova controlled the ball game. Passing combinations by Ron Gorton and Joe Bruno belabored Baylor's defense, while the running of Rick Sapienza shattered the Bear's forward wall. Don McComb, Villanova's big end, and the team's captain, never ceased to show the ability which brought to him the title of "Comeback".

Untimely fumbles, penalties, and interceptions spelled the difference in the final outcome of the ball game. On four occasions, Villanova was within the Baylor twenty yard line, only to lose possession.

The Wildcats only tally came when a Bear fumble bounced into the end zone, where it was recovered by Villanova for a safety.

Mauled by Kentucky

Last week, after its tough loss to Baylor, Villanova seemed to lose the poise and ability of the previous encounter, and were victims of a 28-0 mauling at the hands of a power laden Kentucky squad.

Led by quarterback Bob Hardy, and his accomplice, team captain Howard Shellenberger, Kentucky passed, ran and outclassed the clawless Pennsylvania team.

Three scoring marches in the first half, and one in the second, were results of the Hardy to Shellenberger combination. Sophomore scatback Woody Herzog also presented a tough target for Villanova tacklers, as he continually roamed around the ends for large gains.

For Villanova, their usually capable passing machine was completely ineffective, and therefore, so was their scoring punch.

Fashions for Football: VU Gets "New Look"

Early arrivals for Villanova's game with the Baylor Bears Saturday night were treated to their first glimpse of the Wildcats "new look," the football team's new warmup jackets. This is in keeping with Villanova's policy of giving their athletes not only the best in coaching but in equipment as well.

These jackets were especially designed for the Wildcat squad by the Reach Co., a subsidiary of the Spalding Co. They are made of a lightweight material which affords maximum maneuverability for pre-game warmups and which are still heavy enough to protect the players in cold weather.

Pullover Style

The jackets are made of virgin wool. They are pullover jackets with tight-fitting cuffs and waistbands, a style comparatively new in gridiron attire.

The jackets are emblazoned with "Villanova" across the front in four inch raised white letters on a gold background. The jacket's parka hood is significantly embossed with a wildcat in gold, red, and black. The hoods are made in such a way that they can be zipped up over a player's head in cold weather.

Those who saw the new jackets had only favorable comments about them. Sporting the newest in football attire, Villanova could never be said to be second to Christian Dior in the football fashion world.

"Outstanding in East" Honors To Captain "Comeback" McComb

By BEN KLEMANOWICZ

Having seen Don McComb's prowess on the football field, and after talking with him, it is not hard to understand why Don has been chosen by many of the "gridiron forecasters" as one of the best ends in the East, and by his teammates as the captain of Villanova's coming football squad.

A graduate of Camden Catholic High School, across the Delaware, Don stands a tall 6'5" and fully fills the uniform with the number eighty on it with a supple 230 pounds. It was at Camden Catholic that Don first became enthusiastic about football—an enthusiasm which led to three years of varsity service. Between seasons at Camden, Don busied himself playing baseball and basketball.

When he finished high school, Don found himself faced with a preplexing problem. It seems his feats on the football field were so widely heralded that he had the option of going to almost any school in the country. Luckily for Villanova, because of its proximity and reputation, Don McComb is now completing passes for them.

Don, himself, however, wasn't quite so lucky. A starter in his sophomore year, he injured his shoulder in the first game, and was immobilized for the rest of the season. This same injury resulted in his seeing limited action last year.

Now, however, in his senior year, Don, although ready and willing as in previous seasons, is also able. When asked about the coming season, with its rugged schedule, he said: "I'm glad Mr. Dudley got us the schedule we have. I like being an underdog. Anyway, it's more fun beating the tougher ones."

He then went on to tell of the high spirits of the team, and added: "The team will really be out there trying—not only for the school—but for the best coach in football, Frank Reagan."

As for Don's private life, he is a student in the Commerce and Finance curriculum. A pre-Law major, he maintains a high C average, along with his varsity letters. Although his plans after college are not yet definite, he has hinted that he might play pro football if he received a satisfying offer.

When asked about girls, Don coyly smiled and admitted having one, a hometown sweetheart, also from Camden.

If spirit and the burning desire to win mean anything, the capable captain, "Comeback" McComb, and his teammates could prove to be the sports surprise of the year.

50 Teams In League

Fifty teams are scheduled to play in the Touch Football Leagues. Games are being played at Austin and Mendel fields in either 10:30, 2:30 or 4:30 leagues. This schedule has been arranged so that all students will have the opportunity to participate. Anyone wishing to officiate at these games is urged to sign up at the Intramural office.

On October 4 the Doubles and Singles Horseshoe tournament were held on Mendel Field. The basketball Foul Shooting contest has been arranged for tomorrow on the outdoor basketball courts. Results of the horseshoe tournaments were not available when this paper went to press.

Muff Day Planned

Traditional Muff Day (Move Up Forward Frosh) will take place on October 13. The Freshman Class will engage the Sophs in athletic events on Mendel Field. If the Frosh are victorious they will be no longer required to wear their "regs." If the Sophs triumph the Frosh face the ordeal of wearing their "regs" until Thanksgiving.

Villanova's nursing students are also provided for in this program. Swimming, basketball and their annual tennis tournament have been scheduled.

A BAYLOR RUNNER CASTS WARY EYE AT WILDCAT

Villanova "Looks Good" In Dropping First Two Game

Team Shows Indications Of Successful Season

By DICK BRADY

The Villanova Wildcats opened their sixty-second season of football at Municipal Stadium on Sept. 24, against the highly touted Baylor Bears, and came out on the short end of a 19-2 decision. The following Saturday, the Main Liners took the field against a power-packed Kentucky eleven at Lexington, and suffered defeat number two of the young season, 28-0.

The score of the initial contest, however, belies the fine showing made by the Wildcats. It was a question, almost entirely, of not getting the breaks. Two Villanova fumbles in the second quarter opened the gates for two Baylor touchdowns, after a scoreless first period.

Baylor got their final score early in the second half when Villanova quarterback John Ferroulo had the ball knocked from his hands while trying to pass from his own end zone. Baylor recovered, missed the conversion, and led by 19 points.

Excel in Second Half

From that point, Villanova controlled the ball game. Passing combinations by Ron Gorton and Joe Bruno belabored Baylor's defense, while the running of Rick Sapienza shattered the Bear's forward wall. Don McComb, Villanova's big end, and the team's captain, never ceased to show the ability which brought to him the title of "Comeback".

Untimely fumbles, penalties, and interceptions spelled the difference in the final outcome of the ball game. On four occasions, Villanova was within the Baylor twenty yard line, only to lose possession.

The Wildcats only tally came when a Bear fumble bounced into the end zone, where it was recovered by Villanova for a safety.

Mauled by Kentucky

Last week, after its tough loss to Baylor, Villanova seemed to lose the poise and ability of the previous encounter, and were victims of a 28-0 mauling at the hands of a power laden Kentucky squad.

Led by quarterback Bob Hardy, and his accomplice, team captain Howard Shellenberger, Kentucky passed, ran and outclassed the clawless Pennsylvania team.

Three scoring marches in the first half, and one in the second, were results of the Hardy to Shellenberger combination. Sophomore scatback Woody Herzog also presented a tough target for Villanova tacklers, as he continually roamed around the ends for large gains.

For Villanova, their usually capable passing machine was completely ineffective, and therefore, so was their scoring punch.

Fashions for Football: VU Gets "New Look"

Early arrivals for Villanova's game with the Baylor Bears Saturday night were treated to their first glimpse of the Wildcats "new look," the football team's new warmup jackets. This is in keeping with Villanova's policy of giving their athletes not only the best in coaching but in equipment as well.

These jackets were especially designed for the Wildcat squad by the Reach Co., a subsidiary of the Spalding Co. They are made of a lightweight material which affords maximum maneuverability for pre-game warmups and which are still heavy enough to protect the players in cold weather.

Pullover Style

The jackets are made of virgin wool. They are pullover jackets with tight-fitting cuffs and waistbands, a style comparatively new in gridiron attire.

The jackets are emblazoned with "Villanova" across the front in four inch raised white letters on a gold background. The jacket's parka hood is significantly embossed with a wildcat in gold, red, and black. The hoods are made in such a way that they can be zipped up over a player's head in cold weather.

Those who saw the new jackets had only favorable comments about them. Sporting the newest in football attire, Villanova could never be said to be second to Christian Dior in the football fashion world.

"Outstanding in East" Honors To Captain "Comeback" McComb

By BEN KLEMANOWICZ

Having seen Don McComb's prowess on the football field, and after talking with him, it is not hard to understand why Don has been chosen by many of the "gridiron forecasters" as one of the best ends in the East, and by his teammates as the captain of Villanova's coming football squad.

A graduate of Camden Catholic High School, across the Delaware, Don stands a tall 6'5" and fully fills the uniform with the number eighty on it with a supple 230 pounds. It was at Camden Catholic that Don first became enthusiastic about football—an enthusiasm which led to three years of varsity service. Between seasons at Camden, Don busied himself playing baseball and basketball.

When he finished high school, Don found himself faced with a preplexing problem. It seems his feats on the football field were so widely heralded that he had the option of going to almost any school in the country. Luckily for Villanova, because of its proximity and reputation, Don McComb is now completing passes for them.

Don, himself, however, wasn't quite so lucky. A starter in his sophomore year, he injured his shoulder in the first game, and was immobilized for the rest of the season. This same injury resulted in his seeing limited action last year.

Now, however, in his senior year, Don, although ready and willing as in previous seasons, is also able. When asked about the coming season, with its rugged schedule, he said: "I'm glad Mr. Dudley got us the schedule we have. I like being an underdog. Anyway, it's more fun beating the tougher ones."

He then went on to tell of the high spirits of the team, and added: "The team will really be out there trying—not only for the school—but for the best coach in football, Frank Reagan."

As for Don's private life, he is a student in the Commerce and Finance curriculum. A pre-Law major, he maintains a high C average, along with his varsity letters. Although his plans after college are not yet definite, he has hinted that he might play pro football if he received a satisfying offer.

When asked about girls, Don coyly smiled and admitted having one, a hometown sweetheart, also from Camden.

If spirit and the burning desire to win mean anything, the capable captain, "Comeback" McComb, and his teammates could prove to be the sports surprise of the year.

GRIST FOR THE MILL

By BOB STRAYTON

Spirit is infectious, like mass hysteria.

Just two short weeks ago, a poorly rated, inconsequential football team took the field against one of the best in the nation. At the end of the first half, the big-time power was leading by twelve points. The spectators in the stands were all apathetic towards the outcome. Most felt it was just a question of time before the behemoth of the gridiron exploded the game wide open. None thought the poor underdog stood half a chance.

At the outset of the second half, the Major Power scored another touchdown, enlarging its lead to nineteen points. As if one, the spectators thought together that now was the time. They wholly believed that they would witness a 52-0 belaboring of the unforunate, out-classed Minor Power. They mused over the following day's headlines, and foresaw another disastrous season for the Minor Power. It was, of course, their privilege to think what they wanted, and to anticipate what was to come. After all, they had all either paid their tuition or bought their groceries.

They were the spectators.

Saw No Reason to Lose

Luckily for the Minor Power players, they didn't have quite the same outlook, probably because they hadn't paid their tuition or bought their groceries. The only thoughts they had—in unison—were glorious, but deluded, thoughts of winning. They saw no reason why they should lose. Just because they had been humiliated in front of the spectators for two seasons previous was no reason for being humiliated again. So, they faced the Great Power, and they played as if they thought they'd win. They played well, and they looked good, and then something happened which shouln't have. They began humiliating the Major Power.

They started insignificantly, with a good passing play, or maybe a twenty yard run. Combinations of passing plays, and series of strong ground attacks followed the initial threats, and soon the Major Power was being pushed around. It couldn't gain possession of the ball for any length of time, and when it did have the ball, it was still pushed around. In the entire second half, it could garner only one first down. The oneness of the Minor Power's desire was just too much to cope with, and the Stalwarts bogged down.

The unexpectedness of the little team's spirited play left the spectators baffled at first, but they soon came to the full realization of exactly what was happening, and they liked it. They began to cheer for the Minor Power—yell and cheer as they hadn't done for two years. As a group they had scorned; as a group they now cheered.

Moral Victory Attained

Although the final score favored the Major Power, the spectators knew that the little team had "won." The term used for that type of conquest is moral victory. That is exactly what it was.

Needless to say, the game in question was the Villanova-Baylor altercation. Villanova lost, and yet they won. That may be an equivocal statement, but it is the truth. As far as the records of the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference are concerned, Baylor defeated Villanova at Municipal Stadium on September 24th. But victory for the team is more intangible than that. Had the Wildcats acquiesced to the superiority of the Baylor football team, it would have meant the difference between another disastrous season or a good one. Last year was a prime example of passive concession to superior teams by Villanova. The lack of spirit evident on the playing field was transmitted to the stands in the form of a dearth of cheering from the fans. It was not the fault of the team, nor of the coaches and spectators. It was the fault of all. Desire can win ball games, and it has, but not a passive desire that lacks the proper frame of mind. That frame of mind can only come about through a united desire on the part of all concerned—players, coaches, and spectators.

The Spectators Must Prove Selves

The performance of the team in the Baylor game strongly indicated that the necessary desire was there, at least on the part of the team and coaches. The actual strength of their desire showed itself in the second half, when the team would not let itself be beaten or disgraced. In the second half it was not beaten; it was never disgraced. When the tea became revitalized and wanted to win, so also did the fans. They cheered long and loud to prove it, and when the game was over, they were satisfied. The team had proven itself. Now its up to the spectators.

Spirit is infectious, like mass hysteria.

Track Team Finds Summer Is Fruitful

By JOHN CURTIN

Even while school was out this summer Villanova University athletes were making track headlines. Six members of the Wildcat track team, generally conceded to be one of the best collegiate outfits in the county, appeared in four different meets in the United States and overseas walking off with several top honors.

On the 29th and 30th of last May, the annual ICAAAA track meet was held at Randall's Island, N. Y. In this meeting of track team from all over the U. S. the Villanova entry placed third. High flying Wildcat Don Bragg took the pole vaulting honors with a 14 foot, 6 inch leap, and the Blue and White mile relay team of Al Peterson, Warner Heitman, Jim Moran, and Charlie Jenkins turned in a 3 minute, 15 second mile to also take top honors. Anchor man Jenkins ran the last lap in 45.9 seconds to assure a 'Cat victory.

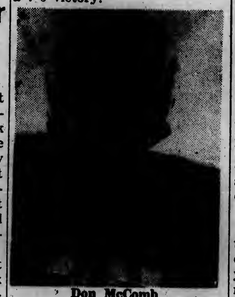
Bragg Sets Record—

The Villanova lads again gained recognition in the NCAA meets at the Los Angeles Colliseum at the end of June. Once again it was Don Bragg paving the way as he cleared 15 feet, 1 inch to set a new intercollegiate record for the pole vault. Bragg is considered one of the few alive today with a chance of going over 16 feet in the pole vault. Charlie Jenkins, another mainstay of the team, placed second in the 440, turning in a 46.8 run, one-tenth of a second behind winner J. W. Mashburn.

In the middle of August, at the AAU meet in Boulder, Colorado, Jenkins ran the 440 in 46.7 seconds to beat Mal Whitfield, one of the top runners in the country. This time was only-one tenth of a second off the meet mark for the distance.

'Cat Miler Runs in Ireland

While this awesome display of Wildcat talent was taking place in this country, Ron Delany, Villanova crack miler, was showing his form in old Erin. Running for the Irish Republic, Delaney turned in a 4:05.9 mile, only 5.9 seconds above every miler's dream, the four minute mile.



With this array of ability the Main Liners are sure to be one of the best teams around come next spring. They could very well be the best team in the country. Here's a piece of advice, keep your eyes on this bunch of speedsters, they're out to win.

Freshmen Defeat Wyoming Seminary in First Game

By DARYLL DITENFEST

The winter's labor of talent scouting for football material seems to have paid off for Frank Regan and his coaching staff. Villanova's Junior Wildcats travelled up to Kingston, Pa. last Saturday, and there met powerful Wyoming Seminary in their first grid test of the season. The Freshman team won, 42-0.

Wyoming, a perennial Eastern power as far as prep schools go, succumbed to the overwhelming ability which the Freshman displayed. Last year, the best Villanova could do was eke out a 7-0 victory.

Don McComb

Working without the services of their flashy quarterback, Jim Grazione, who broke his wrist in practice last week, the Villanova team seemed hindered not in the least.

Scored Twice a Period

In each of the first three periods of play, the Wildcat youngsters tallied twice. Rollie West, a highly regarded halfback, tromped 34 yards to start the scoring binge. His score was followed quickly by another, when Joe Nardo finished a 40 yard drive with a 7 yard sprint.

Again in the second and third periods, Villanova found the goal line. Art Billings intercepted a pass on his own 16, and followed the sidelines 84 yards for a touchdown. Within minutes, Tom MacPhearson made it 24-0 with a 70 yard punt return. Bill Mallary started the second half scoring on a 30 yard pass, and Jim Rohr and Billings concluded the festivities with sneak plays near the goal line.

Used Many Players

Dave DeFilippo, in his first year as a Villanova coach, substituted freely during the 48 minute ball game, but the depth of the Freshman bench caused no dearth of talent on the playing field. Only twice did Wyoming Seminary threaten to score.

"Cross Country To Build for IC4A's": Elliott

The Villanova cross country schedule for 1955 will officially open on Oct. 12 with a home meet with La Salle college. Coach Jim "Jumbo" Elliott will field a team of eight men against the squad from La Salle. Members of this years team are Alex Breckenridge, George Brown, Ron Delany, Warner Heitman, John Kopil, Al Ligorelli, Al Peterson and Bill Reilly.

Coach Elliott has said that he thinks that this team will do "as well as last year." In an interview with a member of the Villanovan staff, "Jumbo" said that he will not have the squad at top capabilities at the beginning of the season. He will bring the team along slowly in order to have them in their best shape for the ICAAAA meet on the 14th of November.

Squad Has Seven Meets

Elliott will rely a great deal this year on Johnny Kopil, an outstanding runner on last year's team, in his tough seven meet schedule. The Wildcats will run in six dual contests before their trip to the IC4A's. Besides facing La Salle and their perennial foe, Army, the Villanova squad will meet Pitt, always tough because of Arnie Sowell, one of the greatest track men in country, St. Joe's, Georgetown, and Quantico, a new face in the cross country field.

Elliott's prediction for as good a season as last year's is based on the fact that he will have a veteran team. All members of last season's squad have returned, and all are lettermen. With this sound basis, the Blue and White may very well better their record of 1954.

This is, of course, all supposition; but one thing is certain. The Villanova lads will give a showing which befits the Villanova tradition.

To Be Indexed

To provide easier reading and more orderly arrangement, the VILLANOVAN will be departmentalized and indexed. Editorials, letters to the editor, serious topic treatments and polls will occupy Page Two; creative work and columns will be on Page Three; features, newsfeatures and columns will accupy Page Four, with more features and picture lay-outs on Page Five. Clubs and organization activities are set on Page Six; class and fraternity news on Page Seven, and faculty, administration and campus building news on Page Eight. Sports will occupy Pages Nine and Ten and part of Page 11; Page 12 will be devoted to notices of club meetings and organization activities. The sports department, under co-editors Bob Ford and Strayton, will pay particular attention to intramural sports.

Writers Needed

Competent writers in all fields —news, features, sports—are urged to contribute to the campus publication. Anyone interested should come to the new Dougherty Hall offices Thursdays between 5 and 11 p. m. Those interested in photography should contact Joe Ezerski in Simpson Hall or Sig Holtz in Sullivan Hall.

Four new officers have been assigned to the Villanova NROTC until this year headed by Captain Neale R. Curtain, U.S.N., who succeeds Captain Martin J. Drury, U.S.N. (ret.), as Professor of Naval Science.

Captain Drury, upon retirement from the navy this past summer, was promoted to the rank of Rear Admiral and now holds a full-time teaching position with the University's mathematics department.

Former Comptroller

Captain Curtin, who graduated from Annapolis in 1928, was formerly the comptroller of the Fourth Naval District.

Large Turn-out for Roles:

CastChosen, WorkProceeds On "Caine Court Martial"

The curtain rises once again in the field house as Belle Masque prepares for its fall show, "The Caine Mutiny Court Martial". The scheduled time for Captain Queeg, U.S.N., and company to arrive is Nov. 4 and 5.

Bell Masque, under the direction of Father William Krupa O.S.A., has cast the lead parts for the show, and practice has already begun. Charles Brockman, a veteran from "Command Decision," was awarded the part of Lt. Barney Greenwald, and Don Seaton, another experienced Bell Masquer, has the coveted role of Lt. Cmdr. Philip Francis Queeg. Walt Doyle, known for his excellent roles in the past years in such plays as "The Admirable Crichton," "Stalag 17" and "Command Decision," will portray the part of Captain Blakley.

Make Masque Debut

Newcomers of the Belle Masque stage include Joe Ezerski, John Murray, Ray Clarke, Andy Iaccarino, Joe Barrett, Jim Grady, John Erdlen and Jim Gilligan.

Jim Judge and Tom Curran will handle publicity and business for the show. All those interested in these fields will watch for a meeting this week. Andy Iaccarino and John Walsh have been appointed ticket chairman.

Jack Lavery and Joe Chinnici, co-chairman of the stage crew, announce that they have been working for over a week on the set which was designed by Jake Krupa.

Mike Clark announced that great enthusiasm was shown at the first meeting by both the old and new members. Due to the large number of co-eds that turned out for the Belle Masque all-male show a special class in make-up will be held by Father Krupa.

"Business Whirl" Holds Inaugural Staff Meeting

The C&F magazine, "The Business Whirl," held its inaugural meeting of the year Thursday at 10:30.

New members were introduced to the format and policies of the latest campus publication by Editor-in-chief Phil Keane.

Keane emphasized the functions peculiar to each editor and his staff in the general correlation of the magazine.

He also reasserted the publication's policy that all students are invited to submit business-type articles to himself or members of the staff.

Other members of the editorial staff include Bob Cassidy, Frank Scarpa, Jim Clark, Dick Bellwoar, Paul Donohue, Jim Greenlee and Henry Whelan.

Any student interested in working on the "Business Whirl" may contact Phil Keane or members of the staff at the new "Business Whirl" office on the second floor of Dougherty Hall.

St. Thomas' Celebration

The morning part of the day's activities moved along without any major hitches. Traffic was shuttled along the grounds by members of the Student Council and other juniors and seniors. Adequate parking facilities were provided on Mendel Field.

Sun Breaks Through

About the time Carinal Spellman, achbishops, bishops, monsignori and priests lined up for the procession from Dougherty Hall to the Field House for the Mass, the sun peeped through the clouds and shone until after the dedication of the student union builing, Dougherty Hall.

In the Field House during the Mass, the colors of the vestments of Cardinal Spellman, who presided at the Mass, and the other members of the hierarchy seated along the stage and the temporary platform in front, contrasted with the reds and yellows and blues on academic robes of faculty members and guests from neighboring colleges and universities.

The Most Rev.J. Carroll McCormick, Auxiliary Bishop of Philadelphia, was celebrant of the Mass.

Chats with Students

Cardinal Spellman pleased many students with the friendliness he showed all through the day. After the groundbreaking ceremonies for the law school building he stopped and spoke individually to each undergraduate along his path.

When the Cardinal, Chief Justice Horace Stern of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court and other officials had broken ground for the new building, the Cardinal remarked: "If they keep on at this rate we'll have her foundation completed."

Preliminary plans for the celebration were initiated about four months ago. From the beginning administration officials had hoped to secure Cardinal Spellman to preside over the activities in connection with St. Thomas of Villanova's feast.

And the Cardinal had wanted to visit Villanova, according to Father Donnellon, University Presient. It was the New York Cardinal's first trip to the campus.

Chemistry Dept.

New faces in the Chemistry Department of the University are Dr. Clarence Heiniger, and Dr. Donald Schwartz.

Dr. Schwartz graduated from the University of Missouri with a B. S. in Chemistry in 1949. He gained his Master's degree at Mountain State College where he taught on a fellowship for a year. In 1955 the doctor was awarded a doctorate from Penn State. He hopes to continue some research in organic oxidations while in charge of analytic chemistry.

Dr. Heiniger, a graduate of Villanova in 1950, received his Ph. D. from the University of Rochester in 1954. He spent the year 1954-55 at Princeton University as research assistant to Professor John Turkevich. Dr. Heiniger hopes to continue research at Villanova in x-ray defraction, study of an important part of the structure of hemoglobin.

The Chemistry Department also welcomes back once again former part-time staff member, Mr. Robert Brumbaugh, who wil continue in the same capacity.

School Retreat Scheduled for Tomorrow

Father Kemme, the University Chaplain, announced today that the annual Villanova University Fall retreat would take place tomorrow. The exercises will consist of Mass at 9:00 A. M., Conferences at 11:00 A. M. and 2 P. M., and will conclude with a Holy Hour beginning at 3:30 P. M. Attendance cards must be obtained by all undergraduate students at the Chaplain's office where they will be available both Monday and Tuesday of this week.

Two Retreats

In reality, two retreats will be conducted on the campus this Thursday due to inadequate seating facilities in the field house. All spiritual exercises for seniors will be held in the University Chapel, while those for juniors, sophomores, and freshmen wil be held as usual in the field house.

The Retreatmaster for the seniors will be Father John J. Coffee O. S. A., the Master of the professed at St. Mary's Hall. Father William McDermott of the Augustinian Mission Band will preach the retreat in the field house.

Confessions will be heard at 9:45, 11:30, 2:30 and 4:30 o'clock.

The Bell Still Tolls . . .

locate the elusive author:

Hemingway was here, he is not here now.

Yes, he is here now. Right down the street.

No, no, you're wrong, he's in Miami.

And finally we came to a small house in an alley back from the main road. Here lived the boy who looks after Hemingway's boat, the Pilar. Our new friend questioned her and turned beaming from the conversation.

He Has Returned

"Aha! Now we have something. The old woman says that he has returned from Miami and is at his home in San Francisco de Paula which is twenty miles from here. He is awaiting the arrival of Mr. Spencer Tracy, who will be in the picture."

He proceeded to draw a detailed map showing the route to San Francisco. After short contemplation, he wrote an additional note for us to show to the various bus conductors stating that we were relatives of "Mr. Hemingway, la novelista."

"This," he said with a sly look, "is to add more weight to the note, to make it something of importance."

As we walked together to the bus stop our friend told us that he had worked for Standard Oil in New York an now was a "retired man" living in Cajimar because, "it is peaceful and the people are good." He stopped and said, "You of course know the story of The Old Man and the Sea?"

We nodded.

The Old Man

He looked across the street and pointed in the direction of the candy store where we had found him. "There, sitting by the door, is Anselmo, the old man of the story. He gave the, how do you say . . . theme of the story to Mr. Hemingway."

Suddenly, from the lazy group of people by the store, one figure was pulled into the sharp focus of my attention and I saw the old man. He is old, very old, but not defeated in age. His figure is gaunt and he was seated on a wooden chair which leaned against the door frame. His shoulders are bent and shrunken and his hands—which were resting quietly on his knees —appeared very large and bony. But his eyes are the one thing that I can't forget about him. They are enormous light blue pools out of which he looks calmly, perhaps sadly, at his surroundings. They are not old eyes and he quickly sensed our intent stare. He turned his gaze upon us and looked without curiosity until we turned away. We had no inclination to go over and attempt to speak to him. It didn't seem like the thing to do and our guide did not suggest it.

We continued down the street and our friend told us that Anselmo was now too old to fish the "big ones" and that he contented himself with fishing for small ones and sitting in the sun. He said that the old man was regarded as the town hero because, unlike most fishermen, he told the truth and had no truck with stories about the "one that got away".

The bus rattled into town and we climbed aboard with our guide shepherding us to the end and seeing us off with a friendly wave. As the bus climbed the hill out of Cajimar I thought of the old man and the town and the great simplicity of it all. From this setting and this character had come a Nobel Prize.

San Francisco de Paula is a small town, more than a village, and it is situated on high ground in the countryside overlooking Havana, Cuba. Just off the highway outside the town lives one of the most famous men in the world.

Here's the line-up for year-opening meetings of clubs and frats; whether you're Frosh or upperclass, make a choice and be active.

PHYSICS CLUB

Last Thursday the Physics Club commenced its '55-'56 season with the club's president, Charles Schwerdtfeger, taking the opportunity of the first meeting to review the club's constitution, to discuss plans for future meetings and to acquaint the freshmen with the upper classmen of the club.

Other officers of the club include James Shea, a junior, representing the club in the Student Council, and Jack Solarski, a sophomore, the treasurer. The remaining office of secretary will be filled from the freshmen members near the end of the first quarter, thereby insuring representation from each class among the officers.

Plans were discussed at the initial meeting for future lectures and demonstrations. The second meeting will take place Oct. 1 at 10:30 a.m. in the physics lab when the club will see a demonstration on "Polarization of Light".

Schwerdtfeger invites all students to attend or join the Physics Club. He said the purpose of the organization is "primarily the avancement of knowledge and ability in physics and secondarily to contribute to the social development of its members."

SCHOLARSHIPS—

Freshmen entering Villanova next September will have two additional scholarships for which to vie.

Food Fair Foundation, Inc., has announced the setting up of six scholarships, two each at Villanova and St. Joseph's and La Salle Colleges.

The grants are valued at $2,000 apiece by the supermarket chain through which the foundation operates.

Scholarship committees at the three institutions will select the students, members of the incoming freshman class, who will receive the grants.

The foundation did not specify in what curriculum the scholarships may be used.

Meanwhile, a high administration official killed a rumor which reported that Villanova's scholarship fund had dryed up.

The official said the university was giving the same scholarship it had handed out in the past.

SPANISH CLUB—

Villanova's Spanish Club opened the year at its initial meeting Thursday, Sept 29, with an address of welcome to new members and an introduction of the new officers by the club moderator, Fr. Lorenzo Lozano.

President John Eddinger then spoke to the members, informing them of the club's annual events, Spanish Night at the end of November and Cervantes Night in the spring.

Also, a letter from the Hispanic Institute was read by Secretary John Mullhall offering to provide members with Spanish - speaking correspondents. Spanish students desiring to write to young men and women in Spain and South America should leave their names with Fr. Lozano.

Spanish Club officers for the year are: Eddinger, president; Joseph Kenney, vice-president; Mullhall, secretary; and Joseph Giusti, treasurer.

The first meeting of A.S.M.E. will be held next Monday, October 17, at a location to be posted later this week. Engineering Dean Stanley Morehouse will address the members at the meeting, which is open to all new members.

Plans for the society's first field trip of the semester will also be discussed.

"Opportunities for Engineers in Technical Writing and Publication Work" is the title of a talk to be delivered to a meeting of the American Institute of Chemical Engineers on Tuesday, Oct. 11, at 7:30 p. m. by Mr. John Mellecher, Editor of "Chemical Engineering Progress".

Engineers and science majors interested in this subject are cordially invited by club president John Salvo and his staff: vice-president Ed Oschell secretary Jerry White, and Treasurer Jack Miller.

The first meeting for this semester of Alpha Delta Chi, the graduate nurses' society, was held Tuesday, Sept. 29, in the C&F Building.

New members were welcomed, and Sister Alma was selected as moderator. Plans for a picnic to be held Tuesday, Oct. 4 were discussed. Miss Ozorowski, President of the society, presided.

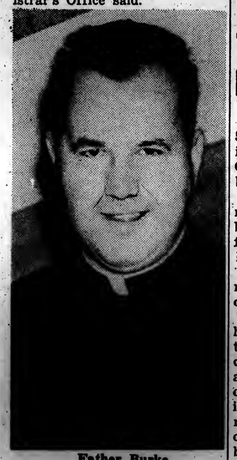
Vol. 31—No. 2 VILLANOVA UNIVERSITY, VILLANOVA, PA. October 12, 1955

Seniors Vote, 299-168, For New Election Of President; Nominations at 10:30 Tomorrow

Enrollment at All-Time Peak; 1100 Freshmen

With a 15.4 per cent increase in day school students, the university's enrollment reached a new high of 3,192. But the number of freshman nurses was less than last year.

The figure includes all undergraduates and law school students.



This year's freshman class numbered 1,064, an increase of 10.6 per cent over last year. The Class off 1958 contains 768 students, the Junior Class has 638 and the Senior Class numbers 498.

A breakdown of the freshman class by divisions shows:

Almost half—499—students enrolled in the C & F School. Following the engineering curriculum were 319 and 231 students were registered in the Arts & Sciences School.

Twenty co-eds, seven fewer than last year, were enrolled in the Nursing Division.

In announcing the enrollment figures, the Registrar's Office reported that the university accepted 1,840 of the 4,804 applications received for places in the freshman class. Seventy-six of these applicants did not enter after being accepted, the Registrar's Office said.

Closed to Juniors:

Halloween Theme Is Mood For Friday's Blazer Ball

There won't be any goblins at the Blazer Ball Friday night, but just about everything else along the Halloween theme is being used to lend an autumn atmosphere.

About 350 couples—the dance is closed to juniors and their dates—are expected to dance along to the music of the Commodores from 9 til 1.

Imaginative Decor

Cornstalks and pumpkins without candles will be set up along the stage, according to decorations co-chairmen Mike Guida and Dick Cooke. They also plan to put up a pond, framed with wooden trellises, in the middle of the Field House.

Ticket sales are being pushed this week by Joe Keffer, chairman of ticket sales. They cost $2.50 a couple.

Keffer and his ticket salesmen were hampered in their work because the pasteboards did not arrive from the printer until last weekend.

This is the second successive year that the Blazer Ball has been scheduled as the opening event of the juniors' event-filled third year. Until last year, the ball was a Junior Week fixture.

But the Class of 1956 decided the dance, which had been overshadowed during Junior Week, might help pull members of the class together at the start of the year so they could work more effectively on junior year planning.

And last week class president Jack Decker invited all juniors to turn out Friday night for the ball, even if they lack

Who's Who List To Administration For Screening

Administration screening of a 50-man list to select the 30 seniors to Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities will begin this week.

The list, compiled by five members of the senior class, has been submitted to the dean's office, registrar's office and chaplain's office.

Results will probably be announced about the second week of November.

Requirements for the coveted honor are a 2.5 or beter cumulative average, at least three extra curricular activities and passable chapel and disciplinary records. The academic and activity requirements are flexible and may be waived and activity requirements are flexible and may be waived by administration officials.

Villanova was granted three additional Who's Who berths this year from the number selected last year. Increased enrollment and the accompanying

Election Tentatively Set Wednesday; Mullen Still VP

The senior class, having voted last week to elect a new president to succeed Frank Hartmann, will continue resolution of the problem with a nominational meeting tomorrow morning at 10:30 in C&F auditorium.

A vote taken during retreat last Thursday brought about the move for a new president, after a previous poll of the 470-man class had brought in only 220 replies. Class moderator Rev. Thomas A. Calpin, O.S.A., requested the class members to designate one of three choices on their attendance cards: 1—have vice-president Tom Mullen move up into the vacated position; 2—hold a new election; or 3—take no action whatsoever.

The vote was a "conclusive" one — 299 to 168, in favor of election of a new president.

The nominational meeting tomorrow will be in charge of Student Council elections chairman Bob Fredericks, who has announced that all fifth-year men will be ineligible to nominate, ineligible to run, and ineligible to vote.

Fredericks said that the election will probably be held a week from today—next Wednesday; actual details as to time and place will be posted and announced.

The whole situation came about with the resignation of Hartmann, who, a short time before the semester began, made his decision to enter the Augustinian seminary.

The first question to arise upon return of the seniors to school was what course of action to take to fill the vacancy. Father Calpin, feeling no clear-cut precedent or constitutional ruling existed in the matter, polled the class through religion sections, but less than half the group returned the ballots. The first ballot consensus was also in favor of a new election.

'Regs' at Stake Today in Annual Muff Day Games

Villanova's sixth annual Muff Day will be ushered in this afternoon by a crowd of cheering freshmen. Muff Day was originated in order to give the Frosh a chance to rid themselves of their regs before the prescribed time of Thanksgiving; to accomplish this task they must defeat their tormentors, the sophs, in a number of track and field events. The word "Muff" actually means "Move Up Forward, Freshmen".

Muff Day was inaugurated by Mr. Gene Powers, a former director of the intramural department. Later on it became incorporated with the Student Council, and presently it is under the direction of Mr. Ed Geisz and his intramural staff.

Muff Day also serves the purpose of interesting the freshmen in the various intramural activities.

All freshmen are invited to participate in Muff Day which consist of numerous track events, a football throw and throw and kick for distance, a baseball throw, also for distance, a wheelbarrow race, (Co-eds invited), a tug of war, a frosh-soph touch (?) football game. The outcome of the day's scoring usually depends entirely on the results of this game.

The frosh are usually strong favorites in this entire titanic struggle due to their tremendous enthusiasm and vast numbers.

Regard for Sanctity

Before the student body could even join in the Divine Praises at last week's retreat, some student, evidently a Catholic in name only, had only this to add to an already sacriligeous Holy Hour: "Thank God that this is over for another year." The regard for sanctity and for any surrounding students had been far removed from his mind by other comments that we are not able to print.

It is a sad state of affairs when a Catholic University student becomes so callous and so disrespectful that he has no regard for the presence of his very Maker.

This student had expressed his thoughts in profane terms but perhaps he is just one of many that have lost the realization of the seriousness of a day of recollection and the opportunity that it affords to all of us for a bit of spiritual introspection.

Easily noticeable from almost any position during the Mass, Benediction or the conference were those far more deeply engrossed in reading or in talking to those next to them. It is readily conceded that the Field House is not conductive to a sacramental atmosphere but the fact remains that any University student should have a mature enough mind to overcome any material obstacles with genuine spiritual thought.

It is the sincere hope with the opening of the Spring Retreat, that this student and others will instead say, "Thank God for another chance!"

Toast to the Band

Perched in front of their TV sets Saturday, Villanova students were pleasantly surprised at the neat formations and quality of the music during the appearances of the school's tiny marching band.

Since the news leaked out that the bandsmen would appear over a 33-station regional TV nework during the VU-Boston College game, campus "doubting Thomases" had wisecracked about what the band would look like.

"How will the TV cameras even pick up our little band?" they asked out loud.

Three students didn't take time out to answer the cynics. They quietly went about rounding their charges into shape for the performance.

Band president Jack Gilfillan outlined on paper formations for the bandsmen and student conductor Bob Schiller supervised the musical preparations. Then Walt Gould, drillmaster for the smart-stepping NROTC drill team took over and marched the musicians up and down and all around the Villanova Stadium, polishing up the formations.

Intensive preparations all week had the approximately 60 musicians favoring blistered feet even before an early morning practice Friday.

This student interest is what Red Grange, the Illinois football immortal, meant Saturday when he described "the unique" Villanova band as "one of the finest small bands in the country."

A band which has no professional director, rehearses outside class hours and is supervised by student officers. Grange might have added that the musicians supply the blazers, grey flannels and white bucks they wear so collegiately.

It took a TV performance to do it, but Villanovans now have the word: even the band is going big time.

A Young Bard Rambles Ode Upon Collegiate Woes

By Bob Farley

If your first class is 8:30 and
it's now 8:29,
And you have to walk to Belle Air
But you're in the breakfast line,
Don't get upset and nervous,
The brain needs food to think
And they'll still be holding classes
When your coffin starts to sink.

If you have a test tomorrow,
And the books just aren't here yet
Don't creep about the campus
In a deep symphonic fret,
Get out there and start walking
Right on down the pike
And visit Professor Kelly
And his prize pupils, Jim and Mike.

If you come home late some evening
And there's someone in "your rack",
Don't suddenly awaken him
With a crack upon the back,
Just keep on looking
Til you find an empty "sack";
And next time come home early
When it's not so blasted black.

If your date this coming weekend
Sits bored, without a smile,
Don't wonder if you've lost the charm
That once was so worthwhile;
She probably read the do's and don'ts
In some new fashion book
And is trying to impress you
With the latest college look.

If you wake up some fine morning
With a squirrel upon your lap,
Don't begin to panic,
Feel sorry for the chap.
He use to live in solitude
In a tree not very tall
Right in the middle of Where is standing Dougherty Hall.

If you need a bibliography of twenty-five books or more
And the library shelves contain only twenty-four
Don't complain and walk around
With your head bent to the ground;
Just be a man and give the prof.
The list of what you found.

If you want some special help
In any branch of knowledge
Just wander over casually
To Immaculata College;
The library is quite wonderful
But the books you'll never miss
When the solution to your problem
Is nothing but a kiss,
And if someone should tell you
That it's against the rule,
Believe me, they're just kidding,
Ask Mitsi, Eileen, or Jule.

If you have a weighty problem,
And to the office go,
You'll probably get the answer,
"My hands are tied" or so,
The same old helpful answer
So often heard before,
But now it seems to help you
Just a little more.
Above all don't you worry
They'll soon know something's wrong,
And when they find your roommate's dead,
You'll hear a different song.

If you have read it this far,
It's time I let you go.
What good the facts will do you,
No one will ever know;
But if you think I'm kidding,
Then you have been deceived
So I'll leave you with the parting words,
"I meant it, yes indeed."
And if you see me walking
Down the railroad track,
Don't worry which way I'm going
'Cause I won't be coming back.

'Nomad Newsman' Queries Freshmen

By MIKE RUSSO

Every freshman who has come to the University from his respective high schools must form an opinion of the school as to the advantages that can be obtained this year. We are going to give the freshman a chance to voice this most cherished opinion.

What is your opinion of Villanova University?

Mary Esther Screem—Nursing—"I think it's just great, it can't be beat."

Trudy Bulterman—Nursing — "The best school in the country."

Jack Seber—Engineering—"The school is great, but there is too much work."

Charlie Bowling—C. & F.—"Half the guys in this institution belong in an institution."

Mike Flynn—C. & F.—"There should be more social life and less academic committments."

Neal Radcliffe—C. & F.—"Why ask me?" You've been here three more years than I have."

Bob Foley—C. & F.—"This staying in at night and early hours on the week-ends cramps my style."

Do They Need Arts?:

An Arts Man Probes Engineering Question

by Pete Quinn

"It don't make no sense to me why engineers should have to study history, English and stuff like that." This is not a typographical error, but rather a direct quote from a sophomore engineering student. Upon hearing the statement, we were urged to look further into this problem just to note the overall opinions of engineers.

While questioning sophomore engineers in informal discussions, we found that most of them were of the same opinion as the one quoted above. They were engineers—that was their future—so that study alone should they now pursue. Liberal arts, they tell us, has no place in the factual science of engineering.

Seniors Think Differently

But our interests were now keyed up rather high, so a few members of the graduating class were sought out. These students—every single one of those questioned—were firmly convinced that at least a smattering of liberal arts studies are to be definitely approved of in an engineer's course of studies. Some of our senior engineers even went as far as saying that all engineering courses should be extended to five years in order to permit more arts subjects to be studied.

So here we have a problem to be resolved: arts or no arts for our engineers. We cannot concieve of any engineer, after all his study, wanting to exist into the working world and not, in the years to come, obtain some position of executive calibre. And today, arts studies seem so essential to that executive position.

Arts Trend Today

The trend in our business world of today shows a definite leaning towards hiring the arts students. Any position of authority requires abilities that are not found in a mathematical formula, but which are found in a well-rounded education. As a man gradually works his way up the well-worn ladder to success, both business and social engagements require and even demand that he be able to express himself intelligently on many broad topics that may never enter his immediate fields.

It seems as though the conclusion to be drawn here is the only logical one. Man naturally desires to make something of himself. In the business world, an executive must be a man of broad education. Engineers, being rational animals, also desire to rise in their fields. Therefore, engineers should have a broad education.

The VILLANOVAN urges its readers to submit letters to the editor on any pertinent subject, controversial or otherwise. The letter must be signed, but the name will be withheld from publication upon request. All letters become property of the newspaper and may be edited when such is considered advisable.

A Visit With Ernest Hemingway:

A Massive, White-Bearded Man: "He Melted Away Our Formality"

ED. NOTE — When senior Midshipmen Joe Barrett and Jack Kelly were on contract NROTC cruise this past summer, they had an opportunity to visit one of the most prominent and controversial creative artists of our time, Ernest Hemingway, at his home in Cajimar, in Cuba. They spent several hours in informal conversation with Hemingway, and here is another installment of Barrett's account of the interview.

A visitor may drive there or take the number seven bus line which runs from Havana through San Francisco de Paula. If the visitor asks the bus conductor for directions, he will wave in the direction of a small dirt street which leads away from the paved highway.

buildings crowded with poor people whose faces reflect the same expression that may be seen on the faces of our poor. It is a universal look. They watch the visitors quietly for this is not an unusual sight. Many people, great and small, trek up the slum-lined street.

The street begins a steady ascent until it comes to a gate. Here it curves to the right and a better class of homes can be seen along its extension. Few continue along the road where it bends, for the gate is the entrance to the home of the famous man. On either side of the gate grows a high dense green hedge which on the right follows the curve of the street and on the left extends for an indeterminable distance.

On the gate are two signs, one in Spanish, one in English:

NO VISITORS PERMITTED WITHOUT APPOINTMENT

And so Jack and I came to the gate and stood side by side, reading the sign. We turned and looked at each other:

"What do you think?" I asked. "It looks as if it means what it says."

Jack stood quietly for a minute and a little boy approached us. He went to the side of the gate and showed us how to enter through a smaller gate.

"Si," he said. "Si." He smiled at us.

St. Thomas of Villanova parish in Rosemont will not vacate its chapel on the Villanova campus, persons attending Sunday Masses were told.

circulating which hinted that Priests said a rumor had been the Rosemont parish would sell or vacate the Villanova chapel. Other Masses are offered in the Rosemont church.

The Rosemont parish has grown so large in recent years that Villanova students have been ordered not to attend Masses in the chapel after 7:30 a. m. on Sunday.

Some uncertainty about who owns the campus chapel may exist, according to one campus source.

The LYNX: Here's the Outlet For Anyone Who Writes Well

John Eddinger, co-editor of the LYNX with Joe Barrett, looks over some material for the next issue.

The Campus Literary Magazine Urges All Students To Contribute Their Work

By DON KEMPF

As a showcase for student inventiveness in the field of literature, the Lynx has always been hailed as one of the brighter spots of student activities. With Jack Eddinger and Joe Barrett as co-editors of this year's publications and a staff headed by Barry Ballister and Bob Strayton plus many interested and promising sophomores, this year's issues should receive even more acclaim. Moderators for Lynx are Mr. Mitchell and Dr. Phillipson of the English department.

Widen Lynx Appeal

When interviewed by the VILLANOVAN Dr. Phillipson had this to say, "This year we are going to try to counteract the idea that the Lynx is for and by English majors. While we hope to make it more interesting to a greater percentage of the student body, we also plan to maintain the high standards for which we have been noted."

Dr. Phillipson added that he was very impressed by the summer edition under the direction of Fr. McShea, and termed it the 'best' he had ever seen.

A meeting on Sept. 28 commenced the drive for material, which was labeled by Joe Barrett as the number one problem. He said that there is too much latent talent on the campus and that it was the job of the Lynx to get those people writing.

Mr. James Mitchell

Publication of the first issue is scheduled for sometime just prior to Thanksgiving.

New Larger Format

Besides having a greater appeal on the inside, the exterior will be dressed up with a new format. In size, the Lynx will be increased from 5½x7 to 6x9. Another new feature will be the addition of more art and photography work.

As added stimulus to creative student writing, the Lynx will sponsor a short story contest in the spring, open to all non-staff writers, and featuring cash prizes. Joe Barrett predicted "if certain contingencies work out, the short story contest may become the hottest news on the campus."

Mr. Barrett urged all writers interested in the Lynx to give material to him in room 344 Sullivan or to the English office in the Basement of Austin Hall until the temporary delay of a central office is settled.

A CURTIS MAGAZINE

Strictly Opinion

By DON ALTON

In the last issue of the VILLANOVAN, an old grad sounded off about the article by our "favorite" sportscaster, found in the "Post". This "friend" and associate of Villanova University considered it proper to discuss Villanova's spirit and athletic ability in the pages of a national magazine. This column agrees with the old grad. We not only commend Villanovans for the spirit they have manifested during the losing seasons, but we also congratulate them for their Christian patience regarding this national slap at their university.

* * * * * * *

While we are on the subject of sportscasters . . . how about an increase in play-by-play broadcasting talents from the ex-WFPG and present WIP announcer. Example . . . that makes it a first down for Villanova . . . and now Kentucky comes out over the ball . . . The poor person who has to sit through a football game as reported by our "friend" should get a medal.

* * * * * * *

During the past years at Villanova we have been privilged to watch our college grow to the standing of a university. In this expanson we have seen the sloppy attire change to coat and tie, the birth of our excellent law school, a new domitory, and as a final touch . . . the Student Union . . . Dougherty Hall. These are but the first of a long line of events in Villanova's expansion program. Some of us will not be around the green campus of Villanova long enough to watch the rest of the program take shape, but we have one thing to suggest in this modernization program. Do not let the modern Villanova be governed by a set of outdated rules and regulations. We look forward to the day when seniors will be afforded some of the special priviledges as in the case of Rosemont and Georgetown.

* * * * * * *

This column overheard one of the Class of '56 in an animated discussion over one of his subjects. We all realize that this does not happen as a general rule at Villanova . . . especially in the Pie Shoppe. This course was referred to in such glowing terms as . . . "the most practical," "interesting," and even "worthy of study". The name of the course? . . . correct . . . Religion 109, Marriage Guidance. This seems to be a well-thumbed book.

* * * * * * *

We are in for another issue of "Who's Who" at Villanova. In the past years we have heard it pronounced more like . . . "Who in the world was he?"

* * * * * * *

Our neighbor across the tracks . . . Rosemont . . . has taken to a new fad. We are indoctrinated to those freshman mixers of old, but this "meet your mate" party sponsored by the seniors was a new innovation. We hope that the men of Villanova who braved the weather and the "tea" enjoyed themselves last Sunday. What with the freshman and senior class getting the social season started, we hope the middle classes aren't in need of any prompting. The cry seems to be . . . "let's have a party!" We hope they are not limited to one social event a semester.

* * * * * * *

This tired typist will end up with a few words of welcome to the class of '59. You men are starting off with a whale of a lot of advantages, and a few disadvantages, over the outgoing class of '56. This is the largest class in our history, and it had been written that there is safety in numbers . . . have a ball!

Now we must all put out our lights . . . it's eleven o'clock.

What Is Prime Purpose:

by Jim Greenlee

The Idea of a University: As Seen by the Student

"A habit of mind is formed which lasts through life, of which the attributes are freedom, equitableness, calmness, moderation, and wisdom; or what I would venture to call the philosophical habit. This is the main purpose of a University in its treatment of its students."—Newman.

Since this is "that time of year again" when the campus reverberates to the steps of vacation-bronzed students reluctant to resume college life after a gratifying interlude, now would seem an appropriate time for thought on a topic such as the one quoted.

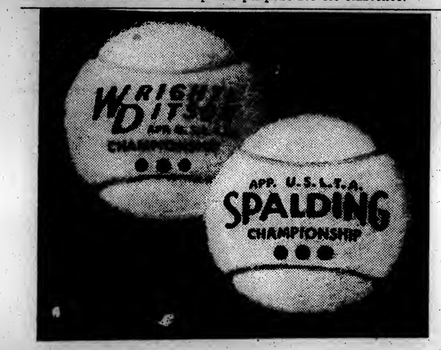
How does the University inculcate in its students this philosophical habit?

Antithesis of High School

The student finds the University the antithesis of high school. No longer must he acquiesce to the stringent discipline of secondary education, but he must recognize that he has attained manhood and is expected to act accordingly. He is no longer compelled to attend classes or even remain in school. He does so of his own volition. He finds that his new autonomous standing in school is balanced by a modification of parental supervision. Freedom transposes adulthood for adolesence.

Old Principle Prevalent

Whether the student considers the University "his home away from home" or spends merely his classroom hours there, associating among any such a understanding student body as that which is found in a University must be conductive to fair play. This spirit of fair play is exemplified on the athletic field and in the classroom, whether the team be a varsity or an intramural one; whether the class be engineering or law. In the University the age old principle of "justice evened by temperance" is ever prevalent.



Four years of collegiate life should promote the virtue of calmness in any student. It may come as the result of repetitious classroom tests, divergent club interests or the other heterogeneous activities of a large campus. The minor "crucial moments" of college life condition the student for the major crises of life.

Judgment from Experience

Moderation suggests restraint from excess. It is readily comprehensible that any person living, studying and fraternizing in a Catholic university inevitably must be introduced to any attribute as dominant and vital in daily life as this.

The most apparent goal of the University is to imbue wisdom in its students. This cannot be gained by mere association. It is acquired over a period of time by experience and study. The end product is good judgment based on experience.

This should not be interpreted as meaning that the burden of instilling the philosophical habit in the students rests entirely with the University. It is the responsibility of the student to be sensitive to the teachings and aims of the University. Only then can it be successful in the prime purpose for its existence.

Look for the Spalding "Tennis Twins" Wherever Top Tennis Is Played

There are good reasons why Spalding's tennis twins are used in more major tennis tournaments than all other tennis balls combined.

Top players want a tennis ball that can take rough treatment . . . and give uniform performance set after set. They pick the Spalding and the Spalding-made Wright & Ditson over all others for uniform wear and better bounce qualities.

Red Cross On Campus Two Days

This year's blood drive will be held Oct. 26 and 27 when a Red Cross Bloodmobile unit will take over the Armory in the Navy Building and receive donations from 10 a. m. until 3:30 p. m.

Jack Essig, chairman of the campaign to solicit donors, said his committee hopes to surpass the record turnout last October when Villanova students and faculty members donated 308 pints in a one-day visit.

Villanova's goal this year is 288 pints. The lower figure was brought about by a cutback in finances alloted to Bloodmobile units and a decrease in personnel and facilities assigned to each unit.

Other reasons for the decrease: It costs the Red Cross $6.30 to process and deliver each pint, participating hospitals defray only a small fraction of this amount and each bloodmobile unit may collect only 144 pints a day.

Anyone between the ages of 18 and 59, in sound health and weighing over 110 pounds may donate. Students under 21, however, must have a permission slip signed by their parents. These slips are now available in the Chaplain's Office, Navy Building and Nurses' Lounge.

Turf & Tinsel, Padova at Helm, Has Big Plans

Villanova's Turf and Tinsel Club opened its season with a general meeting last night. It was attended by the old members of the club who participated in the cast, dancing chorus, stage crew, and business staff.

John Padova, the club's new president, hoped the meeting would revive the spirit of previous years in order to maintain Turf & Tinsel's "fine reputation."

Padova expressed a wish that the Freshman class would take an active interest in the club and plan to attend its December Open House Meeting.

At that time the plan and theme of the Spring musical production will be announced.

The offices of vice-president, secretary and social chairman were filled respectively by Joe Redmond, Nick Rinaldi, and Owen Hickey last spring.

The "Big Three" of T. & T.—John P. Kelly, the cast director; Bob Whelan, general director and George H. Noake, the choreographer—were also present.

ASME—

The first meeting of A.S.M.E. will be held next Monday, October 17, at a location to be posted later this week. Engineering Dean Stanley Morehouse will address the members at the meeting, which is open to all new members.

Plans for the society's first field trip of the semester will also be discussed.

This year's world series is over and for a week now, many students have been spending their ill-gotten gains. Yankee fans, unaccustomed to losing, were especially irregular in their behavior. Richie Heine's nervous system gave out by the seventh game, at which time, rumor states, he had to be rushed to the hospital.

The pie shop reports cigarettes sales for the series went up 200 per cent . . . Three Yankee fans were ejected from a window on the third floor of Sullivan Hall for welching. Others are selling their blood.

This year's series attendance was especially high around local television sets. As attendance went up at television sets in the area, inversely the attendance of Villanova lads at neighboring schools went down. This we cannot understand. Can baseball be more important than the tea?

It has come to our attention that three party-hungry sophomores journeyed to Brooklyn after the last game to get in on the celebration. Yankee fans are hinting at a deal to get Robin Roberts, Ted Williams and Stan Musial to insure victory in future world series.

One freshman collapsed between C&F and Belle Air Hall from the weight of his 40 pound hi-fidelity portable radio.

Special news flash . . . Pedestrians on campus are once again safe as Jake Clancy's bike has a flat tire.

Jam Session:

by Peter Scott

Krechmer's Alley

The alley between Market and Chestnut that connects 16th and 17th Streets is Ranstead St. It is a dark, narrow, and secret alley and its only eyes are a beckoning sign jutting out over a doorway that brightly reads "Jam Session".

You enter the alley, shutting the city behind, and open the door to a narrow room with jazz artists pictured on the left and a bar on the right. You squeeze by the people to the back of the bar where, in a corner, soft light plays about a small sound stage. The shadows reach up to a half balcony, "the riff cliff," a section for couples.

Shop Talk

Suddenly you're aware of the quiet talk. "Armstrong, Milligan," New Orleans are the topics and the conversation flows smoothly from one to another. You sense the ease of belonging everyone has for this hole in the wall. For this is the home of Billy Krechmer and the midnight home of many jazz enthusiasts.

A short balding man steps to the platform, puts a clarinet to his lips and brings forth a slow bouncy "intro" to "Sweet Lorraine". This is Billy Krechmer. He is backed by a trumpet, piano, and bass. Krechmer specializes in a particular type of Dixieland. It isn't loud and bouncy, but it moves, the rhythm is either very slow and treated as blues, or it is up tempo with accent on solo improvisation.

Krechmer doesn't compromise or commercialize. That is why his place is what it is, a hideaway for jazz lovers of his variety.

Long Sets

Krechmer plays four to five hours each night in his own unique fashion. Then you get the main idea of the place, the people; they love music and that's why they're here.

The people are young, old, bearded, shaven, educated and uneducated. It doesn't take money or a degree to get in or enjoy his music.

You walk back to the door, look briefly around and try to breath the place into your lungs. You walk out and anticipate your return.

Villanova Marching Band Stages "Alcoholic Antics"

Last Saturday, millions of people enjoyed the entertainment by the music and precision marching of the Villanova band, through the eyes of N. B. C. Television from Boston. This twelve minute spectacular was presented before the game and at half time.

For the pre-game exercises, the band spelled out in script, the word 'Cats. Turning to the Boston College Eagles they formed the greeting "HI" in block lettering.

Alcoholic Antics

Half-time produced a very fine and amusing show with the band outlining a beer mug, filling it, tipping it over and pouring the beer.

With two outstanding performances under their belt, and having already entertained millions of amusement seekers, the band will again be seen when they strut and toot in high style for the spectators of the Villanova - North Carolina State game.

Frosh Swell Ranks

The band, which this year is fifty strong, has impressed the public with its snappy marching, fine playing and sharp collegiate apparel. The freshmen, who represent approximately half the group, have upped the membership to an extent where formations, marching and playing will be of superior quality, as in the past two performances.

Father Joseph Burns O. S. A., moderator, has expressed his satisfaction with the band and the favorable comments which it has brought, and will continue to bring to Villanova, also his thanks to the designers of the formations, Bob Schiller, Walt Gould and Jack Gilfillan. Walt Gould contributed his own time to drill the band. Bob Schiller's knowledge of music and ability to conduct the band have been of indispensable value. Bob, Walt and Jack wish to convey their thanks to the hard work, enthusiasm, and cooperation of the band members.

Singers Plan Choral Festival Next Spring

At a meeting of the officers of the Villanova Singers last night, Dean Reuschlein announced April 14 as the date for a Choral Festival. This is similar to an affair which is staged among schools in the Big Ten, with the idea of stimulating interest in choral singing among the students of schools concerned. The colleges expected to participate are: Rosemont, Immaculata,, Pennsylvania, St. Joseph's, La Salle, Chestnut Hill, St. Peter's of Jersey City, Temple, Bryn Mawr and Villanova.

Schools Contacted

Several other topics were discussed including the arrangement for a student conductor and the possibility of appearing at alumni clubs in the area. Dean Reuschlein told the officers of the invitation by the South Jersey Alumni Club to make an appearance during either January or February. Newly appointed business manager Jack Jannucci was given the assignment of writing to the girls colleges and alumni clubs, and try to arrive at some sort of schedule.

Other officers attending the meeting were Bob Ford, president, Joe D'Aquila, secretary, Charlie Ross, librarian, Richie Dunn, Student Council Representative, Padova and Jim Heffernan, Publicity Chairmen.

Main Liners Appear

In the meantime, the Singers quintet, the "Mainliners", made their first public appearance at the Owl Hop. The members of the "Mainliners" are Joe Valenti, Jack Padova, Joe D'Aquila, Bill Smith, and Charlie Brockman. Spokesman Joe Valenti said that their next appearance will probably be at the Blazer Ball,, October 14, and until then, "there will be nothing but practice."

Sanctuary Society Convenes

Father Kemme, University Chaplain and moderator of the Sanctuary Society, called the organization into conference this week to elect a new secretary.

Election Held

This was necessitated by the resignation of Anthony Tomasullo, who entered the Augustinian Order this summer.

Patrick Young, (senior - finance) from Raleigh, N. Carolina, was elected to fill the vacancy. Other officers of the Society are Robert McDonnell (senior-finance), president and Gerald Donnelly (senior-engineering), vice-president.

The president announced that an organization meeting will be held shortly to formulate plans for the year. New members will be invited to join the Society at this meeting.

A.S.M.E. Group Attends Phila Meet Tonight

A delegation of Villanova mechanical engineers, led by Mr. Greyson, faculty moderator, will attend the dinner and meeting tonight of the Philadelphia division of the Society of Automotive Engineers at the Engineers Club. The speaker of the evening, Mr. Gillette of the Ford Motor Company, will speak on the Carrera Panamericana, the epic Mexican Road Race.

The first general meeting of the society will be held on Monday, October 17. All junior and sophomore ME's who are not members are particularly urged to come. Dean Morehouse's talk will stress the many benefits accruing from a student's membership in the ASME.

On the agenda for this fall are lectures on diesel engines and gas turbines as well as field trips to the DuPont fuel and oil research laboratory, the Ford assembly plant in Chester, and Schmidt's brewery. A joint trip with the ASCE to the Bethlehem steel plant is also planned.

Alton Predicts Top Year for Campus Voice

According to Don Alton, Station Manager of WVIL, the University radio station is in for its most successful season to date. The station began broadcasting last Monday night.

Through the courtesy of the American Tobacco Company, makers of Lucky Strikes, the station has received a teletype machine for receiving up-to-the minute news, sports, and weather forecasts. These reports will come from the offices of the United Press. Luckies will also sponsor a 15-minute sports show to be presented to WVIL listeners every night.

Because it was so favorably received last year, all-day broadcasting will again be regular part of the schedule. Virtually uninterrupted music will be presentcd from 8:30 a. m. to 6:00 P. M. at which time regular broadcasting will be resumed. Alton stated later that through the courtesy of various record companies, complimentary records are being given to the station. This will contribute to a rapidly expanding music library.

Plans for the very near future include an increase of variety shows and line broadcasting of home basketball games.

Activities of Engineering Societies:

A.C.S. Meets Tonight, 7:30; A.I.E.E - I.R.E Sets Plans

John Downing
A.I.E.E.-I.R.E.

Tonight at 7:30 p. m., the Villanova Chemical Society, Villanova's student chapter of the American Chemical Society, will hold its first evening meeting of the year. Bob Fredericks, president of the society, announced that the speaker will be Dr. Patrick Friel of Princeton University. Dr. Friel will lecture on the properties of the element carbon. Refreshments will be served after the meeting.

Growing Fold

At a business meeting held last Monday, Dr. Clarence Heinizer, the societies new moderator was introduced. Dr. Heinizer, who replaced Dr. Robert P. Kosh, welcomed new members and urged them to cooperate with the society. Seventeen freshmen joined the Society at this meeting, bringing the total membership to over forty.

At the previous A.C.S. meeting, president Bob Fredericks appointed a social committee to inquire into the feasibility of a communion breakfast and a spring dance under club auspices.

Villanova's A.I.E.E. - I.R.E. student branch held its first business meeting of the year last Monday morning in the Dynamo laboratory. Chairman Jack Downing welcomed the assembled electrical engineering students to this year's activities and outlined the group's tentative schedule.

Rev. John A. Klekotka, O.S.A., and Professor John B. Clothier, counselors of the joint branch spoke to the students, emphasizing the advantages of membership in the national electrical engineering societies.

Field Trip Planned

A field trip to the Naval Air Development Center, Johnsville, Pa., will be held by the group next Wednesday, Oct. 19, Downing announced.

He urged all the electrical engineering students to join the student branch and share in the benefits of professional affiliation.

Chairmen Press Preparations for Soph Cotillion

"The Battle of Richmond" will be the theme of the Sophomore Cotillion to be staged on Friday evening, Oct. 28, in the Field House.

Mike Rafferty, a second year Arts student, is the general chairman of this informal affair.

Since the University of Richmond football squad will invade the Main Line campus on the following afternoon to battle the Wildcats, the Civil War theme of the dance should put all Blue and White enthusiasts in a spirited pre-game mood.

Not Closed to Sophs

This affair will not be closed to the class of '58, but members of all classes are invited to attend what promises to be one of the highlights of the fall social season.

Admission is $2.50 per couple.

Pete Palmer and Leo Rogers, will serve as co-chairmen of the decorations committee while Tony Lisa and Ted Macri have been appointed the program committee leaders.

Publicity will be handled by Pat Nicholson and George Fraunces will direct the refreshment committee.

Harry Yeakel and his orchestra, which played for last year's Cotillion, will again provide the music for dancing. The Yeakel orchestra has played for many affairs in the Main Line area.

OPERA-CLASSICA—

Opera-Classica music club will present the second and third acts of "La Traviata" tonight at 7:30 o'clock in Barry Hall Lounge.

Orphans' Plans' Are Discussed

No action has yet been taken to secure a band for the Junior Prom, according to class president Jack Decker.

But discussion of band possibilities and other plans for Junior Week and the three Orphans' events in December is scheduled during a meeting of the class steering committee today at 5 p. m. in 215 Mendel.

Any plans made by the steering committee must be approved by the class. Decker said another class meeting will not be held until some concrete plans for Junior Week have been worked out by the steering committee.

Meanwhile, Decker announced the appointment of class vice-president Don Kelly as chairmen of Junior Week.

Kelly will work with the chairmen of other Junior Week events and coordinate plans.

Decker also has divided the three Orphans' projects among the three chairmen. Art Odabash will supervise the dance Dec. 7. Class secretary Mike Boruch, and end on the varsity football team, will be in charge of the Orphans' Outing Dec. 10. Tim Kennedy will be chairman of the Orphans' Party Dec. 14.

NROTC Ball Set For Drake Hotel

On Nov. 4, the NROTC-sponsored military ball will be held at the Drake Hotel, 16th and Spruce Streets. "The hotel with the beautiful ballroom will afford all the facilities to make the evening one of the finest and most enjoyable of Villanova's fall social season," said Owen Hickey, senior member of the NROTC recreation committee.

This year's dance will be semi-formal with no flowers required. Uniform of the day for all midshipmen will be Dress Blue Baker with four-in-hand ties. The orchestra that will provide the middies with the mood music is still contingent upon open dates available with the popular local bands. Officers and their wives will be honored guests.

FACULTY WIVES

Very Rev. James A. Donnellon, O.S.A., Villanova president, will address the Faculty Wives Club tomorrow at 8:15 p. m. in Barry Hall.

During the first meeting of the academic year new members will be welcomed.

Three Men Consider 1956 Affair

Three seniors, commissioned by acting president Tom Mullen and the Class of 1956 steering committee, are investigating the possibilities of a good dinner dance at some time in the second semester.

The move is based on the poll sent out to the seniors last May, in which the great majority of replies favored staging another dinner dance.

Time Considered

The actual time for the extra affair, intended to aid to the social impact of the class' final year, is still being considered. There have been suggestions of these dates: the Saturday night prior to graduation, the same night as the Junior Class dinner dance during Junior Week (Father McLaughlin and the junior officers are reportedly opposed to this move, however), or some other weekend during the second half of the year.

The seniors investigating the advisability of the project are ticket co-chairman, Tom Meaney last year's ring chairman, Owen Hickey, and Nick Mazzoni, who handled ticket affairs for the junior year and is serving again in that capacity.

Will Report

The three-man committee will report its findings to class moderator Rev. Thomas A. Calpin, O. S. A., Mullen or the to-be-elected president, and the steering committee at the next meeting of that group.

Any suggestions from class members concerning prospective dates and locations for the dance will be welcomed, Mullen said.

Villanova ROTC Involved in Rare Ceremony

With colors flying and band blaring, the Villanova NROTC drill team will executive the impressive pageant of a formal guard mount at half time of the Villanova-North Carolina State game, Oct. 22, at the Villanova Stadium.

Sergeant Waryha, assistant instructor to the Marine Corps Unit at Villanova, said that it would be the first time any N.R.O.T.C unit has preformed this rare ceremony, one of the most colorful performed by a small unit.

For those not too well acquainted with drill maneuvers, the formal guard mount may be described as the changing of the guard in a formalized manner. Every nation from England to the Soviet Union has its version of the formal guard mount.

"Caine Court Martial" Is Gradually Shaping Up

Behind the door of Belle Masque's office, behind the curtain of the Field House and in the mind of every member is the purpose of bringing Captain Queeg, his company and the startling officers of the Navy vessel the USS Caine to the stage of the Villanova Field House.

The play "The Caine Mutiny Court Martial" was written by Herman Wouk after he began to study Navy Regulations back in the 1940's. The result of his research was the 494 pages of his best seller, "The Caine Mutiny" from which this play was derived.

Promise A Hit

Belle Masque members, renowned for their smooth running and very entertaining past performances, are in their third week of rehearsals and guarantee that the "Caine Mutiny" will continue their string of fine presentations.

Andy Iaccarino and Jake Walsh, who have been appointed co-chairmen of the ticket sales, report that tickets are expected to go on sale in a couple of weeks. The cost of tickets for the "Caine Court Martial" which will be presented on November 3, 4, 5, will cost $1.00 for students and $1.25 for general admission. The curtain will rise at 8:15 p. m.

Co-ed Artists

If anyone has noticed someone walking around campus with make-up on, don't worry, they are only the guinea pigs on whom the co-eds practice make-up techniques. The make-up course, being held by Father Wm. Krupa, O. S. A., has proved very successful and by the time the show comes around, Belle Masque wil boast of the finest make-up crews in the Philadelphia area.

Joe Eserski (right), who will play the role of Mark in Belle Masque's November production of the "Caine Mutiny Court Martial," goes over the script with Belle Masque president Mike Clark.

Dean Reuschlein Addresses DPE Gathering Tonight

Dean Harold Gill Reuschlein of the Villanova Law School will be the guest speaker at the Delta Pi Epsilon fraternity meeting tonight.

The dean will speak immediately after a business meeting at 7:15 p. m. in 201 C&F. Fraternity president Lou Donatelli said guests are cordially invited. Subject of Dean Reuschlein's talk was not announced.

Donatelli announced the details for the first social function of the school year at a business meeting last week.

Dean Reuschlein, who came here from the University of Pittsburgh to direct the infant law school, has seen the school move to the front and earn a citation from the American Bar Association for the fast way it has developed.

Banker Main Speaker

Mr. Charles E. Mystetus, Vice-President and treasurer of the Beneficial Saving Fund Society was named as the main speaker for the fraternity Communion breakfast to be held Sunday, Oct. 16 at the new Stouffers Restaurant in Wynnwood. Nine o'clock mass and and corporate communion in the University Chapel will precede the affair. Special seating arrangements will be provided in the Chapel for fraternity members.

Mr. Mystetus graduated from Roman Catholic High School in Philadelphia, and attended Villanova College before his association with the Philadelphia banking firm. Twenty-eight years of loyal service with the Society has made Mr. Mystetus an authoritative professional in the Mutual Banking field. As

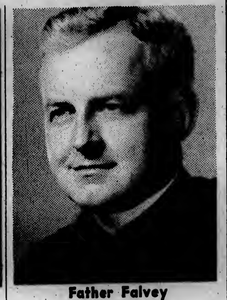
Father Gillis, Distinguished Author, Closes SCO Lecture Series Tonight

Father James M. Gillis, C.S.P. closes the lecture series of the Spanish Cultural Olympics tonight in the C&F auditorium. His topic will be "Slanting of the News in the United States Press, Especially in Regard to Spain."

This year the Catholic Press Association paid tribute to its premier journalist by presenting him with their annual award. Father Gillis was editor of the Catholic World for twenty-six years; a few months ago he discontinued his Sursum Corda column in the Catholic Newspapers. He is the author of a great many books and articles in numerous magazines.

The new Father Gillis Catholic Center in Boston, when completed, will bear witness to Catholic appreciation of his achievements in enlightening his readers on current affairs.



Father Gillis was a most controversial editor of the Catholic World. Three times President Franklin D. Roosevelt tried to have him ousted from this office due to his cutting criticism of F. D. R.'s policies. Father Gillis was an aggressive writer, pulling no punches at any time. Consequently he was highly criticised by the men about whom he wrote. President Roosevelt did not succeed, however, in disposing of Father Gillis, and he continued on his writing crusade against any sort of political corruption.

Outstanding Trial Lawyer Joins Law School Staff

Appointment of Peter P. Leibert, III to the faculty of the School of Law was announced today by Dean Harold Gill Reuschlein.

Mr. Liebert will serve as Lecturer in Law, teaching the course in Pennsylvania Practice to third-year students.

An outstanding trial lawyer, Mr. Liebert served, after his graduation from law school, as law clerk to the Honorable Horace Stern, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. He served for two years as an officer in the United States Navy. After his return from service, he served as law clerk to the Honorable Allen M. Stearne, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. He is presently engaged in private practice with John J. McDevitt, III.

Mr. Liebert graduated from St. Joseph's College with an A. B. degree in 1938 and from the Law School of the University of Pennsylvania in 1941. While at the law school he was Associate Editor of the University of Pennsylvania Law Review. He has served as Chairman of the Junior Bar Association of Philadelphia, and is presently a member of the Board of Directors of the Lawyer's Club of Philadelphia and various committee of the Philadelphia Bar Association. He is also a member of the American Bar Association, the Pennsylvania Bar Association and the St. Thomas More Society.

Intramural Department Revamped

The intramural department, headed by president Dick Jablonski, has changed the scope and activities of this active campus organization. The council and the two student directors have organized a feasible system by which there will be a representative present in the Alumni Gym to prevent any violations that might possibly occur. In addition to this, the council resolves all disputes in the football, basketball, and softball leagues. The gym will be open for use by the student body as soon as the present repairs are completed.

The entire Villanova battalion will be presented at the Richmond game.

Drill team Commander Walt Gould has worked long hours with the drill team as has the executive officer Jay O'Neill.

"Campus Cops" Are Performing Various Duties

Men in blue have been seen for the first time on Villanova's campus this year. Already being dubbed "the campus cops", this new police force has been busy directing traffic and patrolling the temporary site of the book store in Dougherty Hall.

Drawn from the ranks of Philadelphia's retired officers, these men were hired by Villanova to maintain order and discipline in Dougherty Hall.

Rev. J. J. Curran, speaking for the Administration, said that full cooperation with this new authority is expected. It is hoped that these men will be able to speed up the efficiency of the new building in such matters as lines, etc. Their duties also include the opening, closing and patrolling of the building.

At present the officers are attempting to alleviate the University's parking problems until the opening of their assigned "beat".

BA Publication Conference Held Over Weekend

Thirty-four hundred students and faculty members, representing 130 preparatory and high schools from seven eastern states and the District of Columbia, were hosted by Villanova University in its eighth annual publications conference held here last Saturday.

Sponsored by Belle Air

The parley, sponsored by the Belle Air in conjunction with the Cook Publishing Comany and the Carl Wolfe Studios, opened at 8 a. m. with registration in the field house, followed by a general meetin gat 9 a. m. The program featured a number of panels and exhibits on every phase of school publications operation, including: Layout typography, photography, engraving, new sources, cartooning, art techniques, and writing.

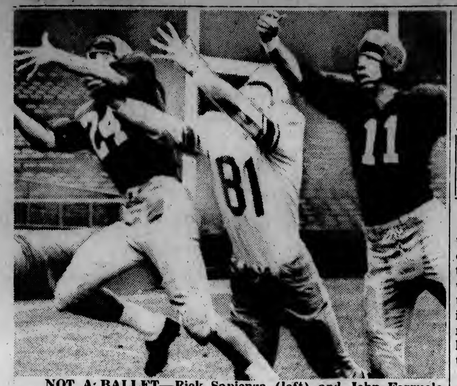
The conference was climaxed by Benediction of The Most Blessed Sacrament at 4:45 in the Grotto of Our Lady of Good Counsel by Bishop Peer Canisius Von Lierde, O. S. A., Vicar General of The Vatican and Papal Sacristan.

Prominent Speakers

Martin Quigley, editor, publisher, and prominent Catholic layman was the meeting's principal speaker. Other lecturers were Francis X. Martinez, Philadelphia public relations executive and former newsman; Leonard J. McAdams, a member of the Inquirer news staff and Carl Wolf, prominent Philadelphia photographer.

Throughout the conference a group of blazer-clad Villanovans were on hand to guide the guests around the campus.

Chaplain's Office Announces List Of Seminarians



The Chaplain's Office has announced that during the summer six Villanova undergraduates entered secular and religious seminaries.

They were:

Frank Hartmann, a C&F student from Glenside, Pa., and president-elect of this year's senior class; Charles Tirrell, '57, an Arts student from Phillipsburg, N. J.; Anthony Tomasulo, '57, a C&F student from Cranford, N. J.; Leo Carley, '57, an Arts student from Homesdale, Pa.; Dennis Cunningham, '57, an Arts student from Trenton, N. J.; John Hines, '58, a veteran and C&F student from Upper Darby.

Hartmann, Tirrell and Tomasulo entered the Augustinian seminary at Staten Island, N. Y. Carley entered St. Mary's Seminary in Baltimore. Cunningham entered the Franciscan Seminary and Hines is enrolled at St. Philip Neri Seminary in Boston.

Sapienza's Running Spurs Villanova's Land Attack

Between the commercials and network interference, N.C.A.A. television fans along the eastern seaboard managed to see a football game last Saturday as V. U. and Boston College bowed into the regional television program.

Villanovans everywhere squirmed through a disasterous second half after watching a Wildcat cross the last white line for the first time this year in the opening half. The Eagle's vaunted line wore away Villanova's stubborn resistance and had things their own way after the pause for refreshment.

Ends Are Standouts

There were times when the entire right side of the Wildcat line was erased as the end was pushed somewhere into Back Bay and the tackle turned in on the center of the line. At this point, the merely adequate B. C. back would mince a hole big enough for the proverbial Mack Company product. However, it was a different tale on the left side as big Don refused to be moved.

Although injured, junior Van Injaian managed to shore up the right side while he was in.

All was not as dark as the day for the outmanned Cats refused to lay down, a point which probably did not go unnoticed by T. V. viewers. Soph Bill Magee led an aroused and fresh Wildcat squad back from the 28-7 depths to a late second touchdown agaist some B.C. reserves. The final score was respectable.

Individual notes—Villanova's Rick Sapienza of Everett, Mass. —playing before home state fans—showed the Beantowners flashes of fine form.

However, there was one brilliant performance in the gray drizzles of Fenway Park. The "Free-State Flash", Baltimore's Dave Parr, showed pseed, poise and defensive ability seldom seen in a second year man. No Wildcat name was mentioned more than Dave's and his late scoring dash through the B. C. forward wall and secondary was a thing of beauty. He took Magee's hand-off, shot through an open-close hole and raced thirty-one yards to the goal.

Quinn Defeats Novoa to Win Tennis Tourney

The intramural tennis tournament was brought to a close last Friday when Vinnie Quinn took the measure of Gene Novoa on the university courts in straight sets, 6-2, 6-2.

Using a very strong forehand to keep Novoa deep, the Long Islander consistently dropped placements that couldn't be reached. In the first set Quinn had litle difficulty and raced to a comfortable lead. Novoa rebounded to take the next two games but Quinn regained his poise and subsequently was in complete control.

Same Pattern

The second set followed the same pattern. After dropping the first two games, Novoa suddenly came to life and took the next pair. His tactics changed from the defensive to the offensive and, his confidence regained, Novoa was on the verge of taking a 3-2 lead when the turning point of the match took place. With the score 40-love in Gene's favor, Quinn returned a serve high and deep. It looked like the shot would go past the base line and Novoa let it go only to see it fall in. This proved to be the spark Quinn needed and at once he took the play away from the soph engineer from Cuba and went on to win the game.

Last Bid

That proved to be Novoa's last bid and Quinn won the last three games of the set with comparative ease.

For Quinn this was his second championship. In the spring of his freshman year he defeated Terry Cooke of the Class of 1954. This was the first competition in which Novoa had competed at Villanova.

Sophomores Shine As Club Shows Improvement

SPORTS CHATTER

A Foundation Is Laid

College football is a touchy proposition. It is very touchy to the student whose hunger for victory often remains unquenched. The student must face people from all walks of life who fanatically follow college football. To these somewhat biased fans, who see only football's cold hard surface, who do not bother to penetrate its depths, a winning team is great, a losing team is unbearable. Students at Villanova face this situation perhaps more than any other students in the East. Villanova is well known university, but Villanova loses football games. How can this be? This burning question is easily answered.

Was anything strong and solid ever built without a firm foundation? Of course, not. Villanova, upon its recognition as a university, immediately went over its head in scheduling football games, for one reason only: a concrete foundation. If we are to become a football power we certainly cannot do it by playing a second rate schedule. A building must be erected by painful labor, by slowly working on one story at a time.

Villanova football may undoubtedly be compared to this building. We have laid our foundation and are on our way up. Every beam is being carefully riveted into its place by painstaking effort. An effort that cannot rest entirely on the foreman, in this case coach Frank Reagan. He works day and night drawing up plans for this undestroyable structure, plans which are tried, tested and put to use by his untiring crew of workers.

These workers, our team, are setting up Villanova's football framework. It is now up to us, the student body, to apply the finishing touches. We must demonstrate to the team our vast supply of patience and our unconquerable spirit. Spirit can make or break a football team, or surmountable comfort to a team to know that they are staunchly backed by their followers. Inevitably the underdog springs forth into a surging, fighting powerhouse. The Brooklyn Dodgers lost, lost and lost again, five straight World Series. But through spirited determination, through their fan's undying patience and spirit, "next year" finally came to Brooklyn.

Next year is now on its way to Villanova. A year that will see Villanova as champs, the fighting, surging powerhouse bursting into its own, backed one hundred percent by cheering Villanovans, students and alumni alike. The foundation has been set, the walls erected, and now the roof is ready to be nailed in place, to be secured by a string of victories, victories which are near at hand. Everyone knows we have two successive home games played in our own stadium, and everyone should realize that at these game the roof can be secured at last. We are almost three thousand strong here at Villanova, and three thousand voices can produce a deluge of noise. Three thousand men can manifest infinite spirit, and spirit is catching.

It will spread immediately to the men in blue and white on the field, it will blanket the stadium, smother the opposition and excite the Wildcats. It will bring the needed shot, the thirst-quenching victory. It will portend future victories, one after another. Villanova's football structure will then be complete. Then we can say to the world, "Villanova football has arrived."

The Villanova Wildcats took the field in hustling fashion and for one half over 10,000 rain-soaked fans saw a fighting Mainline team hold favored Boston College to a seven point draw.

Americo Sapienza returned the opening kickoff 20 yards to the Wildcat 30. On the third play the Eagles recovered a Villanova fumble on the Cats' 40. Boston moved their polished attack to score in nine plays within five minutes.

However, Dave Parr, the day's outstanding ball-player, returned the kick for 30 yards and after an exchange of punts Parr recovered a Boston fumble on their 33 yard line. This preceded the prettiest play of the day as Van Injaian took a 20-yard pass from Lammers and raced to Villanova's first touchdown of the season. Lammers converted.

McComb Tops on Defense

Following the kickoff, Don McComb showed defense at its best when he smothered the BC quarterback for two successive six-yard losses.

In the opening minutes of the second quarterback for SRDL seconr quarter Parr returned a punt to the BC 45, and from this point to the half both teams played clean, bruising football. Boston recovered a fumble midway through the period on the Villanova 32 and moved the ball to the five. It was here that the Wildcats played their finest minutes. With first and ten to go the Eagles were thrown for a loss of 8 yards and two no gains. Don Wood climaxed the stand by blocking a field goal atempt. Don Luzzi recovered on his own 20. A fifteen yard penalty put the Wildcats on the eight as the half ended.

BC Opened Strong

The third quarter opened with BC's class and power beginning to tell as they drove 63 yards in five minutes to score and convert for their 14th point. Late in the same period Boston drove from their own 35 to score again and convert to go ahead 21-7.

The Wildcats looked their worst at this point as they fumbled the kick-off and were downed on their own seven. The visitors finally punted away at the end of the period. Boston came from mid-field as the last quarter opened and added another seven points to put the Cats 21 points down.

With a litle over 10 minutes to play Frank Reagan sent in ten new men quarter-backed by soph Bill Magee. Magee passed and ran to the Boston 31. From there the flashy Parr took Magee's handoff over tackle and dashed through the Boston secondaries to score. D'Alonzo converted. Parr recovered a BC fumble on his 12 and Magee found McComb down on the fifty with a thirty yard pass. On the last play of the game Magee went around left end and was goal-bound when he pushed out on the eight.

Cross-Country Team Opens Today Against Explorers

Alex Breckinridge

Villanova's cross - country team, which opens its season at home with La Salle this afternoon, continued to prepare itself for what may be its best season.

Jumbo Jim Elliott, the man who doesn't believe in losing, voiced his hopes for a fine season, but stressed the fact that the IC4A meet was "the big one." According to Elliott the harriers are priming themselves gradually so that by Nov. 14, the date of the IC4's, they will be at their peak. Although he avoided a direct statement, Jumbo intimated that he expected a good season, capped by a win in the IC4A meet.

Kopil, Delany, Breckinridge —Wow!

The boys on the squad are all seasoned veterans. John Kopil, Ron Delany and Alex Breckinridge form the nucleus of the team and Elliott figures them to be as good as anyone the opposition might have. Joining this threesome are George Browne, Al Ligorelli,

Intramural Football Results

Two tied ball games, one a double shut-out, highlighted the first week of competition in the Intramural Football leagues. In one case, in which Delta Pi Mu and the Old-timers played to a scoreless standoff, the officials were able to award a victory to DPM on a basis of first downs. In a game between the Delurey Devils and the Blues touchdowns and first downs were equal, and the game will be played off at a later date.

DPM Wins

Delta Pi Mu defeated the Old-timers by a score of four first-downs to two. Both teams played well but DPM had two touchdowns called back because of penalties. The winners were sparked by the offensive play of Hugh Davis, Bill Hattrick and Bob McCaffery. However, it was the Oldtimers' defensive play within their own twenty that prevented several touchdowns by their opponents.

Saints 7—Barons 0

The Saints put over a second period score to turn back the Barons 7-0 in another closely-played game.

The Barons got the ball on downs and with four yards to go on third down, tried a pass. Dick Montgomery intercepted on the Baron 40. Led by excellent blocking, Montgomery galloped 60 yards for the touchdown. A pass from Ralph DiCicco into the waiting arms of Joe Colitz added the extra point.

A scoring threat by the Barons in the last quarter was squelched.

Devils 6—Blues 6

The Blues gave the DeLurey Devils a quick six-pointer but came back with a score in the last minute of the game to deadlock the final score at 6-6.

Hugh Barnwell passed to Don Mattingly for the Devil touchdown. Barnwell's pass for the extra point fell short of the intended receiver.

The Blues threatened to score several times but were held in check by the tough Devil defense. It wasn't until the last minute that the Blues got their real chance.

Terry McHugh snatched one of Barnwell's errant tosses on the Devils' 30-yard-line and behind some well-timed blocks, scampered into the end zone. The whistle blew before the Blues could get the point after touchdown play underway.

Horns 15—Sinners 0

The Horns, led by Eddie Zipf, romped all over the Sinners after scoring once in the first period and being held in check until the third quarter. A pass from Tom Gorman to Dave Burn's scored the first six-pointer. Zipf took the hand off from Gorman for the PAT.

In the third period Bob O'Connell's toss was intercepted by Frank Leone, who ran 15 yards for the score. O'Brien blocked Reynold's pass for the point after touchdown attempt.

Dick Cross added the last two points in the fourth period when he trapped Mike McFadden in his own end zone.

Parades, Rallies To Build Spirit For State Game

Three parades around around campus have been scheduled by the Student Council spirit committee to build enthusiasm for the Villanova-North Carolina State Homecoming football game Oct. 22.

Climaxing the spirit activities will be a parade the morning of the game. Campus fraternities have agreed to enter floats and students and their dates are invited to review the floats during the parade.

But the pre-weekend spirit-kindling will get underway next Wednesday night at 7:15 with a parade around the grounds winding up in the Field House with a pep rally.

After the fire engine's sirens have been quiteded, students will hear brief talks from Head Coach Frank Reagan, Athletic Director Bud Dudley and team Captain Don McComb.

Two nights later judging for the annual Nick Basca Award will be conducted during a girl-filled rally in the Field House around 8 o'clock. Before that students and girls from Rosemont, Immaculata and Chestnut Hill will stride along behind the faithful fire wagon, beginning at 7 o'clock.

Committees in campus residence halls are already outlining the exterior decorations they hope will bring the Basca Award to their hall.

Judging the decorations will be the Very Rev. James A. Donnellon, O. S. A., university president; Capt. Neale R. Curtain, commanding officer of the NROTC unit and Mr. William Driscoll, head of the physics department.

Villanova Goes "Big Ten" Meets Hoosiers Saturday

By BRUCE MARTIN

At Bloomington, Indiana this Saturday Villanova will meet its fourth straight "Big-time" opponent, the University of Indiana. The Hoosiers, although having dropped their first two games, are much beter team than their record indicates. Atfter opening the season with a heartbreaking loss to Michigan State at Bloomington, they dropped another close game to mighty Notre Dame, 19-0, at South Bend. Last Saturday they played Iowa.

This year Indiana faced a tough problem in replacing their great quarterback, Florian Helinski, who graduated, but head coach Bernie Crimmins, ex-Notre Dame all-American, came up with a more than adequate replacement in six-foot, 182 pound, junior, Eugene "Chick" Cichowski. In the Missouri game last fall Cichowski completed seven of 23 passes attempted for 61 yards. This season against Notre Dame Chick looked great pressing the Irish all through the game with his outstanding passing and play calling from the split-T.

Campbell at Half

At left halfback is Milt Campbell, celebrated Olympic decathlon star and current National collegiate and AAU high hurdles champion, who excels on both defense and offense. Last season Campbell averaged 5.1 yards per carry, returned a punt 77 yards for a touchdown against College of the Pacific, intercepted a pass and ran for the winning touchdown against Michigan, and scored on a 13 yard blast over tackle to give Indiana a one point victory over Northwestern in the final three minutes of play. This year against Notre Dame it seemed as though he was in on almost every tackle and carried for good yardage whenever called upon by Cichowski.

Bob Schafer, Hennessy, Arizin With Warriors

The Philadelphia Warriors are going places this year, with the deciding factor in their surge for the top being three men from Villanova. These three greats, Paul Arizin, Larry Hennesy, and Bobby Schafer have spectacularly led the Wildcat five for the past eight years with their driving play and unsurpassed spirit. Now, in 1955, a Villanova dream has come true, for these three stars are now united on the same team.

Arizin In 3rd Season

Paul Arizin, Villanova's all time All-American, came fresh out of the University and topped the N.B.A. in scoring. He then spent two years serving Uncle Sam only to come out of the Marines last year and finish second in league scoring.

Larry Hennessy, Villanova's greatest play maker, went from the University directly into the service, where he starred in Army ball. This year he came immediately to pour in his famous one handers for the Warriors.

Schafer After Starting Berth

Bobby Schafer, all time Villanova scoring champion, who graduated last year after his brilliant career with the Wildcats, is determined to break into the Warrior's starting five with his "automatic" set shot and his all around drive and hustle.

All three of these men, we of Villanova are sure, will make our name highly esteemed and respected in the wonderful world of sport.

Track

Bill Reilly, Gene Maliff, Al Peterson, Warner Heitmann and Ted Turlinger. All are capable and experienced track men who have distinguished themselves in the past. Peterson, Heitman and Maliff are members of Villanova's crack mile relay team which caused such a stir last year.

Santee to Compete

Of course Villanova will sorely miss Bill Rock who graduated last year after a fine career here. But he will be back this year to run against his Alma Mater. Bill will be wearing the colors of Quantico Marine Base, a new addition to the schedule. Joining Rock will be the fabulous Wes Santee. Another famous name in the track world, Arnie Sowell, will compete for his team, the Pitt Panthers, against the Cats on Oct. 15.

In addition to the meets with La Salle, Pitt and Quantico, the harriers will encounter, in a six day period at the end of this month, St. Joseph's, Georgetown, and Army. All these teams are known for their speed and their depth. Only three meets are scheduled for Villanova's course: La Salle, Pitt and Quantico.

Feature

vasion of Hoosier-land and Big Ten ball should prove rougher than Saturday, brighter days are coming in the season's waning games.

There were moments Saturday when the Cats brought cheers from the little group in front of the flickering screen of 344 Sullivan. Things are looking up and for a change we had the best band on the field.

The previous week Stanford was shown upsetting Ohio State on the series of controlled televising of N.C.A.A. football. In comparison with that game, last Saturday's showed up admirably for thrills and class. The Cats displayed a disciplined approach to what could have been a humiliating defeat and rebounded smartly in the last stanza.

This is directly traceable to the fine tutelage of Frank Reagan whose knowledge and skill vecome more evident with each game the Cats have played for him. The time is already on the horizon when Villanova will be known football-wise as "the Notre Dame of the East."

The seeds of this were seen Saturday in an untangible . . . attitude.

Wallop Princeton:

Frosh Club Performance Seems Key to Future

by Roger Lynch

Villanova football followers had reason to say "wait till next year" Saturday night after the freshman club rolled over Princeton's freshmen 27-7 on the losers' field.

The baby Wildcats took the offensive right from the start and on the third play of the game Rollie West took a hand off and raced off-tackle 31 yards for the touchdown behind crisp blocking.

Princeton threatened with about five minutes left in the half, but the power-laden Wildcat forewall held the Tigers on the four-yard-line for four downs.

The losers didn't score until the last play of the game on a 15-yard pass into the end zone. The point after touchdown attempt was successful.

After the half time break, West flashed into the end zone and snagged a 30-yard pass from quarterback Jim Grazione, the hotshot prospect from South Catholic High School's 1954 city champions. The extra point kick was no good.

When Princeton decided to try a passing attack, Villanova co-captain Bob Vincent intercepted a stray toss and raced 39 yards for the tally. Dave Kwitkowski kicked his second extra point of the day.

The last score came right after the fourth period opened. Grazione swung around end on an option play and weaved 91 yards for the final six-pointer. Kwitkowski's boot was good.

Co-captain Vincent and Mike Poileti showed great potential on the line and Bill Bogely and Joe Nardo flashed speed and power, according to the coaches.

West, in his touchdown run, gave Wildcat fans hope for the future and showed them why he was sought after by college scouts while bulling his 205-pound frame through the opposing lines during his high school days at Abingdon Township, a Philadelphia suburb.

Judging from Coach Dave DeFillippo's smiles after the game, he's happy too with the yearling squad.

Frosh Prepare For Muff Day Activities

Today is the day of decision for the Freshmen class. The annual "Muff Day" festivities will take place on Mendel field starting at four o'clock. The right to discard the traditional "regs" is the reward of battle if the frosh win. A sophomore victory, however, means extension of the period of "dinks, ties, and rolled up pants" for another week.

A sideline note that is of no small interest is the fact that this years Sophomore Class lost Muff Day as freshmen and is determined not to suffer the humility of two successive defeats.

O'Rourke to Organize

Vice-President of the Student Council Jack O'Rourke will organize the class of '59 as they pit forces against their upper class rivals in a tug-of-war, egg tossing contest, wheelbarrow race, foul shooting contest, 100, 200 and 440 yard sprints, and a footbal kicking contest. The finale of the program is the annual "touch" football game.

To keep the program moving and assure order to the proceedings, the Intramural Department under the direction of Father Dunne and Edward Geisz will officiate at all events.

Spring Semester Dean's List Is Announced

By having a quality point average of 3.0 or better, 482 students were named to the dean's list for the spring semester.

Of these, 146 were members of the June graduating class, 122 were from the Class of 1958, 110 from the Class of 1956 and 102 from the Class of 1957.

The C & F School led the list with 186 honor students. The Arts and Sciences School had 156 on the honor roll, the Engineering School, 120 and the Nursing Diviison, 20.

Eleven men attained a 4.0 (straight "A") average. They were: Edwin K. Daly, Mark McCormick and Thomas Mentzer, who received bachelor of arts degrees in June; Frank Adams, Arts '56; Francis Thornton, physics, major '58; Thomas Hess, who received his civil engineering degree in June; Anthony Silvestri, Engineering '58; and these students from the C & F School: William Mowatt and Henry Whalen, '56; John Acri, '57 and Attilio DiMartino, '58.

New Moderator Presented

At the same meeting Mr. William Pierce, an accounting instructor in the C&F school, was presented as the new fraternity moderator, filling the vacancy created by the resignation of Charles Vogan from the University staff.

The first steps toward the pledging of new members, was taken by the appointment of junior Lou Calemoco as pledgemaster. Calemeco is now selecting his assistants and promises the best "Hell Week" in fraternity history.

Donatelli announced that plans are taking form for the touch football game with D.P.M. which will probably be held the morning of the Richmond game, Oct. 29, on Austin field.

DPE officers, in addition to Donatelli, are: Burns McLindon, vice-president; Jack Morgan, secretary; Don Weir, treasurer, and Hank Knoblock, Student Council representative.

Jack said, "Well, I didn't come this far not to go through with it." He laughed. "We'll probably get gunned down, but let's go."

"Wonderfully Silent"

We thanked the boy and slipped through the opening. A narrow, flower - lined walk stretched upward before us and curved out of sight to the left. It was wonderfully silent behind the hedge, not eerily silent, but peaceful in a way that makes one feel productive and capable of artistic endeavor. I don't think I imagined that for we both agreed later that if a person could not work, there, he could not work at all.

We followed the path and as talked nervously for we were expecting loud voices and forceful ejection to be our reward for entering. To the right of the path and continuing upward were small fields of crops and perhaps a quarter of a mile away a single laborer worked in the fields.

We walked around the curve of the path and came suddenly upon the house. It was white and seemed very nice without being pretentious. The front door was open and through the screen door we could see a hallway and the rear windows of the house. Jack knocked softly on the screen door and we waited. Through one of the front windows we saw a movement. A great form rose from a chair and I saw a flash of broad shoulders, white beard and large head. We knew who it was.

Ernest Hemingway came to the screen door, opened it, and looked down at us. "Hello, come in," he said.

We mumbled a request for a few minutes of his time and he led us into a pleasant living room in which his life is reflected in several ways. Upon one wall is a painting of a bull fighter in the midst of a pass with a great black bull rushing by. Another wall shows a poster advertising bullfights in Barcelona, Spain. Around both of these are the mounted heads of various African deer-types shot by the author. There were many books and a copy of the New Yorker Magazine in the room. We had interrupted the author's reading. I couldn't make out the title of the book. In one hand was his trusty drink and within easy reach there was a table crammed with the "makings".

He eased himself slowly and carefully into an over-stuffed chair. I was surprised at his size. He stands probably six-two and before his abdomen went to pot he must have been a beautifully built man, for his shoulders are broad and his calves are still knotted with hard muscle. (He was dressed in shorts and a light sport shirt.)

His features are American (whatever that means) and he is a handsome man in a simple, rugged manner. Upon his left temple there is a small swelling, probably a tumor resulting from the airplane crashes. The famous white beard was in the process of growing in and his steel-framed spectacles perched rather incongruously on his nose.

formed the steering committee that he would take the presidency only through the procedure of the vice-president stepping up into the post, maintained throughout that parliamentary procedure entitled him to the position.

The conditions of his election to the vice-presidency last May, however, (when his opponents were screened out, and the Council ruled out an 11th hour write-in ballot, giving him the post unopposed), reportedly influenced many of the class members to feel that a new election should be held.

Since most engineers will be unable to make the meeting tomorrow, they are urged to have a classmate in attendance nominate for them.

Intramural Football Results

Two tied ball games, one a double shut-out, highlighted the first week of competition in the Intramural Football leagues. In one case, in which Delta Pi Mu and the Old-timers played to a scoreless standoff, the officials were able to award a victory to DPM on a basis of first downs. In a game between the Delurey Devils and the Blues touchdowns and first downs were equal, and the game will be played off at a later date.

DPM Wins

Delta Pi Mu defeated the Oldtimers by a score of four first-downs to two. Both teams played well but DPM had two touchdowns called back because of penalties. The winners were sparked by the offensive play of Hugh Davis, Bill Hattrick and Bob McCaffery. However, it was the Oldtimers' defensive play within their own twenty that prevented several touchdowns by their opponents.

Saints 7—Barons 0

The Saints put over a second period score to turn back the Barons 7-0 in another closely-played game.

The Barons got the ball on downs and with four yards to go on third down, tried a pass. Dick Montgomery intercepted on the Baron 40. Led by excellent blocking, Montgomery galloped 60 yards for the touchdown. A pass from Ralph DiCicco into the waiting arms of Joe Colitz added the extra point.

A scoring threat by the Barons in the last quarter was squelched.

Devils 6—Blues 6

The Blues gave the DeLurey Devils a quick six-pointer but came back with a score in the last minute of the game to deadlock the final score at 6-6.

Hugh Barnwell passed to Don Mattingly for the Devil touchdown. Barnwell's pass for the extra point fell short of the intended receiver.

The Blues threatened to score several times but were held in check by the tough Devil defense. It wasn't until the last minute that the Blues got their real chance.

Terry McHugh snatched one of Barnwell's errant tosses on the Devils' 30-yard-line and behind some well-timed blocks, scampered into the end zone. The whistle blew before the Blues could get the point after touchdown play underway.

Horns 15—Sinners 0

The Horns, led by Eddie Zipf, romped all over the Sinners after scoring once in the first period and being held in check until the third quarter. A pass from Tom Gorman to Dave Burn's scored the first six-pointer. Zipf took the hand off from Gorman for the PAT.

In the third period Bob O'Connell's toss was intercepted by Frank Leone, who ran 15 yards for the score. O'Brien blocked Reynold's pass for the point after touchdown attempt.

Dick Cross added the last two points in the fourth period when he trapped Mike McFadden in his own end zone.

Parades, Rallies To Build Spirit For State Game

Three parades around around campus have been scheduled by the Student Council spirit committee to build enthusiasm for the Villanova-North Carolina State Homecoming football game Oct. 22.

Climaxing the spirit activities will be a parade the morning of the game. Campus fraternities have agreed to enter floats and students and their dates are invited to review the floats during the parade.

But the pre-weekend spirit-kindling will get underway next Wednesday night at 7:15 with a parade around the grounds winding up in the Field House with a pep rally.

After the fire engine's sirens have been quiteded, students will hear brief talks from Head Coach Frank Reagan, Athletic Director Bud Dudley and team Captain Don McComb.

Two nights later judging for the annual Nick Basca Award will be conducted during a girl-filled rally in the Field House around 8 o'clock. Before that students and girls from Rosemont, Immaculata and Chestnut Hill will stride along behind the faithful fire wagon, beginning at 7 o'clock.

Committees in campus residence halls are already outlining the exterior decorations they hope will bring the Basca Award to their hall.

Judging the decorations will be the Very Rev. James A. Donnellon, O. S. A., university president; Capt. Neale R. Curtain, commanding officer of the NROTC unit and Mr. William Driscoll, head of the physics department.

Villanova Goes "Big Ten" Meets Hoosiers Saturday

By BRUCE MARTIN

At Bloomington, Indiana this Saturday Villanova will meet its fourth straight "Big-time" opponent, the University of Indiana. The Hoosiers, although having dropped their first two games, are much beter team than their record indicates. Atfter opening the season with a heartbreaking loss to Michigan State at Bloomington, they dropped another close game to mighty Notre Dame, 19-0, at South Bend. Last Saturday they played Iowa.

This year Indiana faced a tough problem in replacing their great quarterback, Florian Helinski, who graduated, but head coach Bernie Crimmins, ex-Notre Dame all-American, came up with a more than adequate replacement in six-foot, 182 pound, junior, Eugene "Chick" Cichowski. In the Missouri game last fall Cichowski completed seven of 23 passes attempted for 61 yards. This season against Notre Dame Chick looked great pressing the Irish all through the game with his outstanding passing and play calling from the split-T.

Campbell at Half

At left halfback is Milt Campbell, celebrated Olympic decathlon star and current National collegiate and AAU high hurdles champion, who excels on both defense and offense. Last season Campbell averaged 5.1 yards per carry, returned a punt 77 yards for a touchdown against College of the Pacific, intercepted a pass and ran for the winning touchdown against Michigan, and scored on a 13 yard blast over tackle to give Indiana a one point victory over Northwestern in the final three minutes of play. This year against Notre Dame it seemed as though he was in on almost every tackle and carried for good yardage whenever called upon by Cichowski.

Many Lettermen Return

Bob Schafer, Hennessy, Arizin With Warriors

The Philadelphia Warriors are going places this year, with the deciding factor in their surge for the top being three men from Villanova. These three greats, Paul Arizin, Larry Hennesy, and Bobby Schafer have spectacularly led the Wildcat five for the past eight years with their driving play and unsurpassed spirit. Now, in 1955, a Villanova dream has come true, for these three stars are now united on the same team.

Arizin In 3rd Season

Paul Arizin, Villanova's all time All-American, came fresh out of the University and topped the N.B.A. in scoring. He then spent two years serving Uncle Sam only to come out of the Marines last year and finish second in league scoring.

Larry Hennessy, Villanova's greatest play maker, went from the University directly into the service, where he starred in Army ball. This year he came immediately to pour in his famous one handers for the Warriors.

Schafer After Starting Berth

Bobby Schafer, all time Villanova scoring champion, who graduated last year after his brilliant career with the Wildcats, is determined to break into the Warrior's starting five with his "automatic" set shot and his all around drive and hustle.

All three of these men, we of Villanova are sure, will make our name highly esteemed and respected in the wonderful world of sport.

Track

Bill Reilly, Gene Maliff, Al Peterson, Warner Heitmann and Ted Turlinger. All are capable and experienced track men who have distinguished themselves in the past. Peterson, Heitman and Maliff are members of Villanova's crack mile relay team which caused such a stir last year.

Santee to Compete

Of course Villanova will sorely miss Bill Rock who graduated last year after a fine career here. But he will be back this year to run against his Alma Mater. Bill will be wearing the colors of Quantico Marine Base, a new addition to the schedule. Joining Rock will be the fabulous Wes Santee. Another famous name in the track world, Arnie Sowell, will compete for his team, the Pitt Panthers, against the Cats on Oct. 15.

In addition to the meets with La Salle, Pitt and Quantico, the harriers will encounter, in a six day period at the end of this month, St. Joseph's, Georgetown, and Army. All these teams are known for their speed and their depth. Only three meets are scheduled for Villanova's course: La Salle, Pitt and Quantico.

Feature

vasion of Hoosier-land and Big Ten ball should prove rougher than Saturday, brighter days are coming in the season's waning games.

There were moments Saturday when the Cats brought cheers from the little group in front of the flickering screen of 344 Sullivan. Things are looking up and for a change we had the best band on the field.

The previous week Stanford was shown upsetting Ohio State on the series of controlled televising of N.C.A.A. football. In comparison with that game, last Saturday's showed up admirably for thrills and class. The Cats displayed a disciplined approach to what could have been a humiliating defeat and rebounded smartly in the last stanza.

This is directly traceable to the fine tutelage of Frank Reagan whose knowledge and skill vecome more evident with each game the Cats have played for him. The time is already on the horizon when Villanova will be known football-wise as "the Notre Dame of the East."

The seeds of this were seen Saturday in an untangible . . . attitude.

Wallop Princeton:

Frosh Club Performance Seems Key to Future

by Roger Lynch

Villanova football followers had reason to say "wait till next year" Saturday night after the freshman club rolled over Princeton's freshmen 27-7 on the losers' field.

The baby Wildcats took the offensive right from the start and on the third play of the game Rollie West took a hand off and raced off-tackle 31 yards for the touchdown behind crisp blocking.

Princeton threatened with about five minutes left in the half, but the power-laden Wildcat forewall held the Tigers on the four-yard-line for four downs.

The losers didn't score until the last play of the game on a 15-yard pass into the end zone. The point after touchdown attempt was successful.

After the half time break, West flashed into the end zone and snagged a 30-yard pass from quarterback Jim Grazione, the hotshot prospect from South Catholic High School's 1954 city champions. The extra point kick was no good.

When Princeton decided to try a passing attack, Villanova co-captain Bob Vincent intercepted a stray toss and raced 39 yards for the tally. Dave Kwitkowski kicked his second extra point of the day.

The last score came right after the fourth period opened. Grazione swung around end on an option play and weaved 91 yards for the final six-pointer. Kwitkowski's boot was good.

Co-captain Vincent and Mike Poiteti showed great potential on the line and Bill Bogely and Joe Nardo flashed speed and power, according to the coaches.

West, in his touchdown run, gave Wildcat fans hope for the future and showed them why he was sought after by college scouts while bulling his 205-pound frame through the opposing lines during his high school days at Abingdon Township, a Philadelphia suburb.

Judging from Coach Dave DeFillippo's smiles after the game, he's happy too with the yearling squad.

Frosh Prepare For Muff Day Activities

Today is the day of decision for the Freshmen class. The annual "Muff Day" festivities will take place on Mendel field starting at four o'clock. The right to discard the traditional "regs" is the reward of battle if the frosh win. A sophomore victory, however, means extension of the period of "dinks, ties, and rolled up pants" for another week.

A sideline note that is of no small interest is the fact that this years Sophomore Class lost Muff Day as freshmen and is determined not to suffer the humility of two successive defeats.

O'Rourke to Organize

Vice-President of the Student Council Jack O'Rourke will organize the class of '59 as they pit forces against their upper class rivals in a tug-of-war, egg tossing contest, wheelbarrow race, foul shooting contest, 100, 200 and 440 yard sprints, and a footbal kicking contest. The finale of the program is the annual "touch" football game.

To keep the program moving and assure order to the proceedings, the Intramural Department under the direction of Father Dunne and Edward Geisz will officiate at all events.

Spring Semester Dean's List Is Announced

By having a quality point average of 3.0 or better, 482 students were named to the dean's list for the spring semester.

Of these, 146 were members of the June graduating class, 122 were from the Class of 1958, 110 from the Class of 1956 and 102 from the Class of 1957.

The C & F School led the list with 186 honor students. The Arts and Sciences School had 156 on the honor roll, the Engineering School, 120 and the Nursing Division, 20.

Eleven men attained a 4.0 (straight "A") average. They were: Edwin K. Daly, Mark McCormick and Thomas Mentzer, who received bachelor of arts degrees in June; Frank Adams, Arts '56; Francis Thornton, physics, major '58; Thomas Hess, who received his civil engineering degree in June; Anthony Silvestri, Engineering '58; and these students from the C & F School: William Mowatt and Henry Whalen, '56; John Acri, '57 and Attilio DiMartino, '58.

At the same meeting Mr. William Pierce, an accounting instructor in the C&F school, was presented as the new fraternity moderator, filling the vacancy created by the resignation of Charles Vogan from the University staff.

The first steps toward the pledging of new members, was taken by the appointment of junior Lou Calemoco as pledgemaster. Calemeco is now selecting his assistants and promises the best "Hell Week" in fraternity history.

Hemingway

Jack said, "Well, I didn't come this far not to go through with it." He laughed. "We'll probably get gunned down, but let's go."

"Wonderfully Silent"

We thanked the boy and slipped through the opening. A narrow, flower - lined walk stretched upward before us and curved out of sight to the left. It was wonderfully silent behind the hedge, not eerily silent, but peaceful in a way that makes one feel productive and capable of artistic endeavor. I don't think I imagined that for we both agreed later that if a person could not work, there, he could not work at all.

We followed the path and as talked nervously for we were expecting loud voices and forceful ejection to be our reward for entering. To the right of the path and continuing upward were small fields of crops and perhaps a quarter of a mile away a single laborer worked in the fields.

We walked around the curve of the path and came suddenly upon the house. It was white and seemed very nice without being pretentious. The front door was open and through the screen door we could see a hallway and the rear windows of the house. Jack knocked softly on the screen door and we waited. Through one of the front windows we saw a movement. A great form rose from a chair and I saw a flash of broad shoulders, white beard and large head. We knew who it was.

Ernest Hemingway came to the screen door, opened it, and looked down at us. "Hello, come in," he said.

We mumbled a request for a few minutes of his time and he led us into a pleasant living room in which his life is reflected in several ways. Upon one wall is a painting of a bull fighter in the midst of a pass with a great black bull rushing by. Another wall shows a poster advertising bullfights in Barcelona, Spain. Around both of these are the mounted heads of various African deer-types shot by the author. There were many books and a copy of the New Yorker Magazine in the room. We had interrupted the author's reading. I couldn't make out the title of the book. In one hand was his trusty drink and within easy reach there was a table crammed with the "makings".

He eased himself slowly and carefully into an over-stuffed chair. I was surprised at his size. He stands probably six-two and before his abdomen went to pot he must have been a beautifully built man, for his shoulders are broad and his calves are still knotted with hard muscle. (He was dressed in shorts and a light sport shirt.)

His features are American (whatever that means) and he is a handsome man in a simple, rugged manner. Upon his left temple there is a small swelling, probably a tumor resulting from the airplane crashes. The famous white beard was in the process of growing in and his steel-framed spectacles perched rather incongruously on his nose.

formed the steering committee that he would take the presidency only through the procedure of the vice-president stepping up into the post, maintained throughout that parilamentary procedure entitled him to the position.

The conditions of his election to the vice-presidency last May, however, (when his opponents were screened out, and the Council ruled out an 11th hour write-in ballot, giving him the post unopposed), reportedly influenced many of the class members to feel that a new election should be held.

Since most engineers will be unable to make the meeting tomorrow, they are urged to have a classmate in attendance nominate for them.

PHYSICS CLUB—

The Physics Club inaugurates its new policy tomorrow of having more demonstrations as opposed to lectures. This will insure more interesting meetings as well as giving the club the opportunity of seeing the more elaborate apparatus of the lab in action. Tomorrow a demonstration in the "Polarization of Light" will be given.

Polarization is fast attaining prominence in many fields of industry, and yet so few really understand the elementary theories behind it. The demonstration should help to clarify these theories.

Charles Schwerdefeger, club president, said the meeting would be held 10:30 a.m. in the Physics lab as usual.

L.K.D.—

L.K.D., Villanova's Pre-Med fraternity, has announced its plans to admit 35 pledges to the frat this year. The initiation will take place in the last week of October for the lowly pledges. A Communion Breakfast for some time in November has also been planned. Villanova's president Father James A. Donnellon, O. S. A., will be the speaker at this breakfast, to be held at the Viking Inn on Lancaster Pike in Ardmore.

At the Fraternity's first meeting, in the near future, the pledges will be introduced to the officers and informed about the various functions of the frat. L.K.D.'s moderator, Mr. Joseph Gilligan, a prominent Villanova biology instructor, has announced that the fraternity's membership this year will consist of about 90 men.

Competition, Big Rallies, Parades Prelude To Game:

Halls Vie For Basca Award

Villanova varsity football returns to the campus Saturday for the first time since 1952, accompanied by two parades, fire engines, judging for the annual Nick Basca Award and a noise-filled pep rally.

Here's the order of events for the weekend:

Friday (7 p.m.) — Parade starting at Leary Hall. A three-member committee will judge decorations on all undergraduate halls for Basca Award. Students from neighboring women's colleges will join Villanova students in the march.

Friday (around 8 p.m.) — Rally in the Field House.

Saturday (noon) — Another parade from in front of Leary. All students have been invited to participate, along with three campus fraternities.

Saturday (1:30 p.m.)—Kick-off for the Villanova-North Carolina State game—the first football contest in the Villanova Stadium since 1952.

Quinn Plans

Pete Quinn, chairman of the Student Council's spirit committee, and his assistants have been mapping plans for the weekend activity for more than two weeks.

While hall chairmen make last minute preparations to dress up the exteriors of their dorms, Quinn and his committee will be erecting some kind of structure on the lawn beside the Pie Shoppe.

Quinn wouldn't elaborate on what the structure will look like. But it apparently will follow the "Beat North Carolina State" theme, which will be used in decorating dorms.

In the judging parade Friday night, Austin Hall will be appraised first, then the band and marchers will swing past Simpson, DeLurey, Fedigan, Mendel, Good Counsel, Alumni, Pie Shoppe (being decked out by day hops) and Sullivan.

Decision at Rally

Winner of the award—annexed by Simpson the past two years—will be announced during the rally. Judges are the Very Rev. James A. Donnellon, O.S.A., University President; Capt. Neale Curtain, commanding officer of the NROTC unit and Mr. William Driscoll, head of the physics department.

Other members of Quinn's spirit committee: John Henry, Jack Padova, Paul Porreca, Vince Sullivan, Jack Decker and Don Weir.

In the last football game on campus Villanova rebounded from a 14-0 third period deficit to tie the Parris Island Marines 20-20.

Class of '56 Elects Today; Junior Dinner Dance Set

Junior Class president Jack Decker, right, discusses Junior Week plans with Mother's Day chairman Jack O'Rourke. Plans for the big week are moving nicely, according to Decker, who has announced the signing of the dinner dance site.

Mother's Day Plans Also Set:

Ben Franklin Ballroom Site of Junior Week Affair

The Junior Class' steering committee has chosen the ballroom of the Benjamin Franklin Hotel in Philadelphia as the site for the class' dinner dance, the closing event of Junior Week next May.

A contract with the hotel's banquet manager was scheduled to be signed this week, according to Tom Hooker, class secretary and dinner dance chairman.

The steering committee picked the site at a meeting last Thursday. A $10 per couple ticket price has been set by the class moderator and class president.

The question was not turned over to a class vote, apparently because the class moderator and steering committee felt that a definite site should be chosen soon before the hotel books another affair for the date.

Hooker had reported earlier that the Benjamin Franklin and Palumbo's night club — where the Class of 1956 held its dinner dance last May—were the only area spots that could accommodate the class.

Six Seniors Compete For Presidency

In an unprecedented move, the University's senior class will file through Alumni Gym today to elect a new president.

The polls will be open from 10:00 a. m. to 3:00 p. m. Matriculation cards must be presented.

Candidates are: Bob Farley, Jerry Guerrisi, Don McComb, Tom McInerney, Paul Porreca and Earl Warrington.

At the time the paper went to press, the administration had not yet completed the screening of candidates.

John Henry, nominated at a meeting Thursday along with the other seven, withdrew from the running before the nominations meeting was adjourned.

Bob Fredericks, chairman of the Student Council's elections committee, warned that write-in ballots will be disregarded.

The new election, which sets a precedent according to campus observers, was arranged after class members voted to hold a new election to fill the post, vacated just before the opening of the semester by Frank Hartmann.

Hartmann, selected during regular class elections last May, resigned from school to enter the Augustinian Seminary.

Tom Mullen, class vice president, had been serving as acting president until the class decided what course to take in filling the vacancy.

Seniors, voting during the one day retreat, voted 299 to 168 to hold the new election.

Details on decorations and program at the Sophomore Cotillion remained a closely-guarded secret today—just 9 days before the anticipated event.

Pat Nicholson, publicity chairman, would release no preview of the annual sophomore presentation, but told the VILLANOVAN that this year's dance would be perhaps the most ambitious ever planned at Villanova.

Sectional Theme

The appropriate theme will be the Battle of Richmond, with the Cotillion to be given on the eve of the Villanova-Richmond struggle. Favorite songs from both sides of the Mason Dixon Line will be featured.

Tickets are now on sale at the Pie Shoppe, and may also be purchased from more than 30 sophomore vendors on campus.

Admission is only $2.50 per couple and may well prove to be the biggest social bargain of the year.

Melodies for dancing will be supplied by Harry Yeakel and his orchestra. Judging from his past performances, the music will be well worth the price of admission.

A Return Home . . .

The moment that Villanova students have been pleading for arrives Saturday—when the football team trots onto the green of Goodreau Stadium to play its first game on the Villanova campus since that very exciting Parris Island game in 1952.

With this return of the bona fide "home" game, every student who has muttered "what this school needs is to have its football team play on its own field" will have an opportunity to help make the occasion a success. He can cheer and yell and stomp his size 12's to his heart's content; and he needn't worry about his neighbors in the stands. For once, they won't be neutral, oft-indifferent observers who happened into the ball park by buying up a certain amount of radishes and raisin-bran.

While awaiting the Saturday fracas, the student might whip up a bit of extra enthusiasm by helping to decorate his hall for the annual Basca Award competition, to be judged Friday night. Pete Quinn and his spirit committee cohorts have organized the contest so that every resident and day student may take part.

The Wildcats have demonstrated their ability to play good football. Saturday they'll be tangling with a team in their own class — the rebuilding Wolfpack of N. C. State. Wheher or not the club wins, every Villanovan will have the chance to observe and enjoy what a lot of people have been clamoring for since 1952: a Villanova team playing football on its own field, surrounded by all the color and pagentry and music and atmosphere of the college gridiron tradition.

ATime to Give . . .

The annual visit of the Red Cross blood donor unit next week (see story on Page 4) presents Villanova men with an opportunity to perform a very worthwhile and self-satisfying act of Christian charity.

Several times in the past, Villanovans have passed up this opportunity; in fact, the Red Cross, after netting something like 50 pints in one visit last year, almost decided to call it quits insofar as the University is concerned. Father McLaughlin, Dean of Student Activities, asked the Red Cross to give it one more try, however, and the student body responded with nearly 300 pints in the subsequent "do or die" effort.

Even 300 pints is not a staggering figure, when one considers that there are some 3200 young men attending this institution, the great majority of whom are physically able to contribute. Those students under 21 must have the signature of their parents or a priest, and those over the "legal" mark may give blood without the signature of an elder or superior.

One hears a lot of fellows come up with reasons for not giving blood.

They say that they have no use for the Red Cross, because of things they've seen or stories they've heard, some of which may be true.

But that doesn't eliminate the good that can be done through the Cross' use of blood for those who will need it desperately.

Others say that they can't spare the blood —they're too thin, or something.

The heart replaces the pint of blood given in less than 24 hours; anybody who weighs more than 114 pounds may give.

So instead of rationalizing your way out of giving ,think instead of the good you will be doing.

Then . . . GIVE.

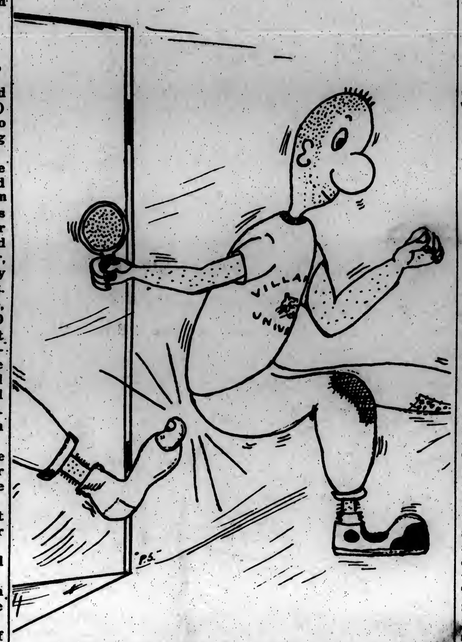
Would You Like to See Girls as Cheerleaders ?

The question about girls on the campus has been argued ever since the girls first arrived here, two years ago. Last week the Indiana rally featured cheerleading by freshmen nurses. From this, I derived this week's question: WHAT DO YOU THINK OF GIRL CHEERLEADERS AT VILLANOVA UNIVERSITY?

FROSH—PAT HUNT: If they allowed us to be cheerleaders, I'd be all for it.

FROSH—MARCIA MARLOW: The more activties the girls are in around here, the quicker we'd be accepted.

SOPH—BOB DURKIN: It would be like our football team playing Rosemont. The girls would be out of place.



SOPH—PAT NICHOLSON: I wouldn't like to see it happen, because cheerleading is one of the few things that's still controlled by the men of Villanova.

JR.—BILL KELLY: There are not enough girls here at Villanova University to warrent their presence on the cheerleading field. If Villanova had only 57 boys they wouldn't attempt a football team.

JR.—RAY CLARKE: I'm all in favor of pretty girl cheerleaders but it looks like we'll have to wait a few years.

SR.—FRED ONORATO: I think the crowd would pay much more attention to girl cheerleaders.

SR.—DON ALTON: I'd like girl cheerleaders, but I don't like the girls around here!!!

"I don't care what it was last year—You're not gonna play ping-pong in here now!"

Letters to the Editors

Dear Sir:

Concerning the article appearing in the October 5 edition of the "Villanovan", page 4, column 3, "For the Freshmen, a Primer" etc.

A number of be-blazered gentlemen and assorted freshmen (apparently not heeding the helpful dating hints,) have been seen loitering and otherwise ungainfully employed on the Campus of Chestnut Hill College.

Question—Were they lost?

Sincerely,
Fanny Fossil,
President,
Society for the Prevention of Extinction.

ED. NOTE—The aforementioned Society is said to be the Hill's oldest and most active organization.

Poet's Corner

Ode to Bob Farley

by S. E. Hoffman

"A young Bard Rambler, Ode upon Collegiate Woes."
Quite a fancy title, but true, everybody knows.
Farley's quite a poet, 'though he someplace went amiss.
(Now maybe I'm mistaken, but harken unto this:)

8:30in the morning, that's the middle of the night.
This class we will to freshmen, 'tis their God given right.

WAITING in a chow line, isn't that kind of rude?
Surely, only freshmen wait for morning food,
The upper classmen realize, in the morning—just a drink,
Freshmen begin to realize, "For whom the coffins sink."

Who always get their books on time? Who keeps the bookstore going?
Why, freshmen is the answer. Upper classmen are still "glowing."

OH, on and on I could surely go, and talk about our frosh.
For 'ere I could speak of freshmen class, and their college life, by-gosh.
But wait a minute, Farley I want a word with you.
When they see you walking down the tracks, they'll see me walking, too.
SURELY, here's the end—finis, my tribute to Bob.
Let 'em all know, and let 'em all sob.
They're losing good men—that's you and me, Bob.

Weekly Discussion Column:

Reader's Viewpoint

ED. NOTE: (To impersonalize the discussion and open it to all interested readers, within the faculty as well as the student body, the material appearing in the Weekly Discussion Column will be signed "A Reader"—although all material submitted to the Villanovan must be signed. Next week a student's contribution will comprise the column.)

The growth of a university is marked not so much by the erection of required and magnificient buildings but rather by the subtle changes effected in the character of its men. The solidarity of that discernible growth, clearly evident in the physical order, is more truly the rich emergence of a tradition that is profoundly spiritual and timeless. Thus it is in the seeking of truth that the university man shares in the dream of all mankind, through all ages, attempting to understand the master design of Creation that he may humbly lead when the less fortunate call to him for guidance. Truth and responsibility are one and of this responsibility the university man may never justly fre himself: his life is dedicated to the seeking of Christ-like justice for all.

The Challenge

Villanova University, moving forward with certain and inspiring growth, presents to the men of the university the challenge that they must share the ideal. The challenge has been accepted and will be met: all men, created in the image and likeness of God, are capable of drawing upon Him for perfection and have no cause whatever on this earth to seek less.

Let us, therefore, in all wisdom join in good faith the Fathers, the Lay Faculty and the Students of Villanova University for they are the men of Villanova who have created the University.

A Faculty Reader

The VILLANOVAN urges its readers to submit letters to the editor on any pertinent subject, controversial or otherwise. The letter must be signed, but the name will be withheld from publication upon request. All letters become property of the newspaper and may be edited when such is considered advisable.

Peering . . . .

With DICK PEER

. . . At the results of the Meet Your Mate Party held at the Tea House two weeks ago. A reliable source reports at least half of Rosemont's Senior Class now secretly married, and the other half engaged. Boy, oh boy, it turned out swell, hah?

. . . Around the countryside for places to hold those frowned?upon beer parties. We came upon a place that really fills the bill. It's called the Old Slop House, and comes well-recommended, boasting of very few fights. It's easy to get to; just take the Pennsylvania Turnpike to the end and turn left into West Virginia.

. . . Throughout the world for the next Olympics to be held on campus. The Greeks claim its their turn, because they've been warming up for centuries.

. . . Across the Pike at the parking lots where martial law is declared at sunrise every morning.

. . . At the main bulletin board which is so jammed with resident student car license numbers that there is barely room for the cut list.

. . . With bewilderment as the lovely lady placed a half-teaspoonful of salad on my plate at lunch the other day. When I asked casually what she was trying to prove, she came out with the classic statement of the week. "I can't give you anymore, it's too expensive." Just who is kidding who?

. . . At the financial depress on campus when the Navy failed to come through with those all important checks on time. The money shortage caused an overextension of credit in some circles and the interest rates climbed to a new high. Complaints were heard from all corners of the campus and there were even a few mutterings from the feminine quarter.

. . . At the prefects holding up the chow hall pillars once again this year. They're really mean fellas when they enforce the coat and tie rule, but when it comes to line-cutting, they just aren't around. As for getting the man who left the plates on the table—I don't think it's happened yet. Nice going, gang, you all get medals.

A Visit With Ernest Hemingway:

A Remembrance of the "Hard, Cold Beauty that Flowed From His Pen"

ED. NOTE: When senior Midshipmen Joe Barrett and Jack Kelly were on contract summer cruise, they were able to visit briefly with the controversial contemporary novelist, Ernest Hemingway, at his home in Cajimar, Cuba. Here is the third and final installment of Barrett's account of the interview.

Jack Kelly

There is great humility in this man and he treated us with deference and real interest. The three of us moved through the awkward stages of merely exchanging information and soon Jack and I were completely captivated by his statements and observations:

No, the hurricane should miss Cuba. It is still too early in the year for the hurricanes that form south of Cuba. So saying, he leaned forward to tap on wood. With luck, that is.

Yes, they had finished the scenes at Cajimar and were waiting for Spencer Tracy to come down for the filming of his scenes. Everything was going fine except for the star. He hadn't been signed to a contract yet and there was no way of depending on his cooperation.

I said that I had read of a new book coming soon.

He sniffled. "Is that so? Whose book is it?"

"Yours?"

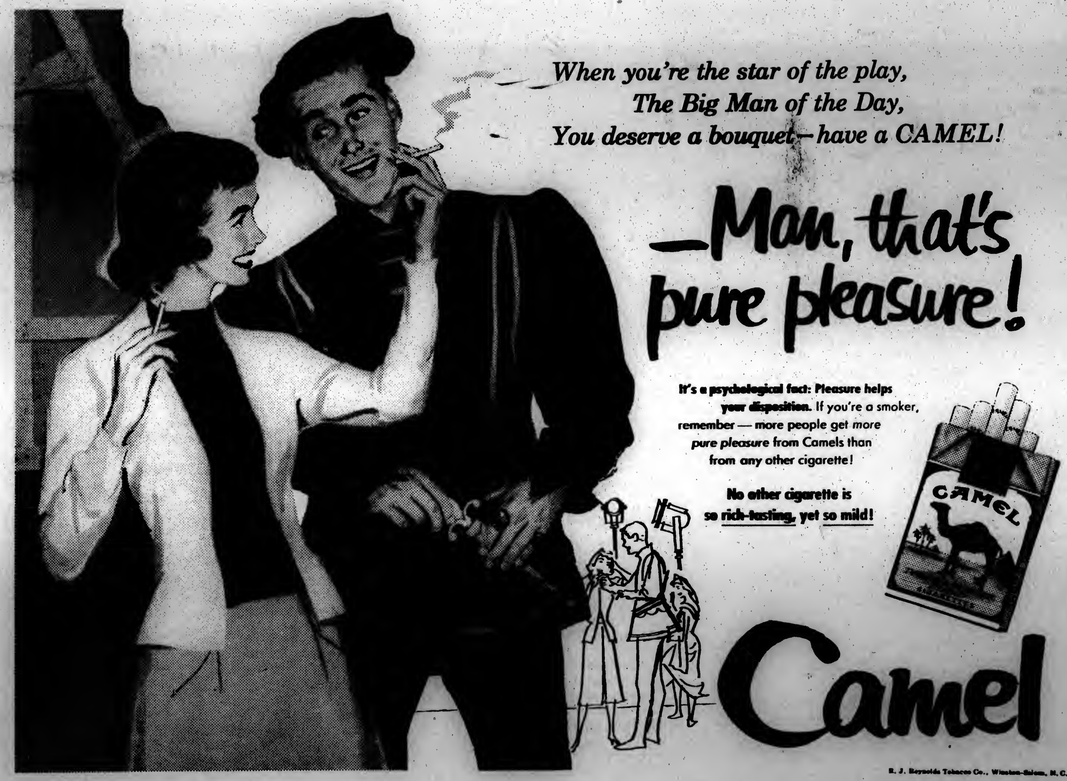
"Yes, but you don't talk about it. If you talk about it, it goes out from you and you lose it. This one has gone to five hundred pages."

"That's a little more long winded than you've ever been, isn't it, sir?"

"Yes, but I have a great deal to say this time."

Reflecting on the five hundred pages, I commented on my difficulty in getting out two thousand words in one gulp.

He said slowly, "Two thousand words are a lot, if they're in good order."



He commented on his early difficulty in putting down even a paragraph that made sense.

Jack asked if he found it easier to write freely as time went on.

He said that it was, then smilingly added: "Of course, I have to write well now." He was referring to the responsibility connected with the Nobel Prize.

Later, in reflecting on the problems connected with writing, the author said, "You

Strictly Opinion

By DON ALTON

The Chaplain's office deserves a word of appreciation from the members of the senior class for the new innovation in retreats. The idea of having the future graduates in the chapel for these moments of recollection is a fine move, and it also serves to illustrate a pressing need of Villanova.

DON ALTON

When the seniors assembled for their conferences, they filled every inch of space in Father Blessingham's parish church. Since this church is conveniently located on our campus, Villanovans are allowed to "borrow" the church from the parish . . . excepting Sundays . . . for special occasions and evening chapel.

It will be a fine addition to the campus when Villanova University joins the ranks of the Catholic institutions with a church of its own. This column would like to see the administration get a hand from some of the friends of the University in erecting a fitting House of God—one that we could call our own—among the new buildings for education.

A note to the members of the faculty from interested parties: their students. We have just passed another of those two day periods in which the faculty gangs up on the student body . . . probably in return for some of the same treatment . . . from the people filling up the classrooms. The students appreciate a good laugh once in a while, but four hourly exams placed back to back, like the Dodgers' homer line-up, is not the best situation in which to record what smattering of knowledge the few do manage to salvage. The next time this fine group of scholars assembles over the pie shoppe coffee, please flip coins and stagger the exams . . .

In case the maids are looking for those missing sheets in the halls, take a hot tip from one who knows and investigate the Austin lounge—pardon my mistake—the Nursing division headquarters. It seems that a severe amount of injuries occurred last week, and the nurses had to bandage their bloody hands. The work must be too much for those frail young freshwomen . . . they were as pale as ghosts, and they displayed definite signs of mental disorder . . . who ever heard of a Birdwatcher's Society to defend our campus? Rumor has it that the nurses made an attempt at sorority life . . . true???

In lieu of the above . . . future columns will be written from the safety of third floor Sullivan. This might be one place on campus that will not be violated by the patter of feminine bucks and kneesocks.

We have a home football game coming up this Saturday at our stadium. This will be a fine opportunity for the student body to display its spirit and support . . . in front of a dear critic. Decorate those halls . . . give every ounce of cheer you have to the excellent spirit committee, and let's teach people a lesson about Villanova . . .

* * *

Did you hear of the sad plight of some of those "monkeys"? It seems that the girls at Chestnut Hill and Immaculata refuse to wait for their dates to thumb a ride from Villanova . . . and they seem to dislike the idea for themselves. This makes one think of the good old days before the department of police started to set up a division of "garde mobile" in the Union.

* * *

Must don my jacket and tie . . . we form early these days for chow . . . twenty-four hours in advance . . .

Sullivan's Sorrow

There are in Sullivan Hall
Four hundred eager men.
As for telephones in Sullivan Hall
There are but four of them.

All through the evening hours
Receivers are never still.
Making a call is a major task,
Chances of getting one are nill.

Many fair damsels from near and far
Try urgently to call.
But oh, 'tis impossible to get
To the men in Sullivan Hall.

They call and call and call,
Until they are in a tissy,
But the only voice they hear exclaims,
"Sorry the line is busy."

Can't anything be done
About this prodigious mess,
Before four hundred eager men
Die of loneliness?

New Station Boon To WVIL

One of the reasons why WVIL, the University's radio station, is regarded as one of the nation's faster-growing college radio stations is that it has acquired a new studio on the third floor of Dougherty Hall.

Latest Word

The studio is considered the latest word in collegiate broadcasting. It is comprised of a main office, production studio, and an engineering, announcing, and sports booth. The pattern is the same as is used in professional set-ups. All new engineering equipment will be included in the program. The approximate cost of this completely modern studio is estimated in the neighborhood of $20,000.

If everything runs according to plan, WVIL should be broadcasting from the new studio about mid - November. Until that time it will continue to broadcast from its present studio.

A.C.S. Men Attend First Lecture Meet

About 30 members of Villanova's student chapter of the American Chemical Society, the Villanova Chemical Society, attended the organization's first evening meeting of the year last Wednesday.

The speaker was Dr. Patrick Friel, a Villanova graduate (1950), who is currently employed by the Sun Oil Company.

Dr. Friel discussed the "Physical Properties of Solid Aromatics". The Villanova alumnus pointed out that soft and hard cokes, obtained from the pyrolysis of liquid and solid organics, could be classed as condensed aromatics. He said that these compounds are used industrially in various ways, for example, in nuclear reacting and electroplating.

Refreshments were served after the meeting.

The next meeting of the Villanova Chemical Society will be held in late October or early November, according to Bob Fredericks, president of the society.

Resident Numbers Are on Rise

Villanova's resident population has reached 1,118, according to figures released by the office of the Dean of Men.

The figure includes counsellors in campus dormitories. Last year 1,105 resident students were reported by the dean's office at the opening of the fall semester.

The office listed 32 resident students and 86 day students from the University's law school.

A breakdown in number of resident students by halls: Sullivan, 446; Austin, 188; Alumni, 157; Fedigan, 128; Mendel, 124; Good Counsel, 51; Simpson, 42; DeLurey, 34 and O'Dwyer, 26.

Frosh Spirit Encouraging:

Overly-Lengthy Period Of Orientation Is Noted

In an opinion poll conducted early this week among the Orientation Committee (White Hats), the following remarks were noted:

Pat Nicholson—General attitude of the frosh has been good and the spirit of the class of '59, excellent. I hope they keep it. The committee will be cracking down on the frosh classes this week.

Bob Mulcahy and "Chub" McCarthy—Period is too long. There will be some crack-downs this week. In general, the attitude of the freshmen has been good.

More White Hats

Clem Birch—Period is too long since there are too few white hats. It would be better if there were more on the job and if they received good support.

Tom Springer—Freshman spirit very good.

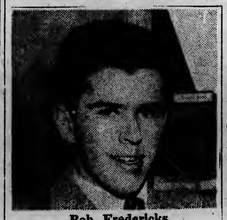
Ted Macri—Period of orientation too long. Too many parts to the regs.

Bill Smith—Period two weeks longer than it should be. Freshmen have cooperated on most occasions.

Norm Peer—The period becomes boring because of length. General freshman attitude good.

• • • •

These are just a few of the comments that were received. Many other sophs agreed with the above remarks and the amount of freshmen spirit was unanimously praised.



Do Your Part — Give!

Good Will Not Enough: Your Blood Is Needed!

Good will won't be enough.

The Red Cross needs your blood.

The annual Red Cross Blood Drive will start on campus Wednesday and Thursday, October 26-27 between the hours of 10:00 and 3:30. The donor station will be set up in the Navy armory.

Bob Fredericks

The goal for this year is 288 pints.

Anyone between the ages of 18 to 59 and in good health may give blood. Both students and faculty are encouraged to participate in the program. Those under 21 must have permission slips signed by parents—to be turned in at donation. Permission slips are available in the Navy building, Austin Lounge, the Pie Shoppe, and the Chaplain's Office.

If 20% of the students give, the Red Cross will extend automatic blood coverage for Villanovans and their families. Any donor will definitely receive for himself and his family any amount of blood necessary free of any expense except a $.15 hospital charge for handling.

The price of blood is ordinarily fifteen dollars a pint. Coverage by Red Cross guarantee is for the period of one year.

During past summers blood has been given four times under the Red Cross guarantees.

As an added incentive to NROTC students, merits will be awarded for blood donations.

The annual Red Cross blood drive is a community effort on the part of the entire school.

GIVE!

State Dept. Examinations Scheduled

The Department of State announced today that the second written examination under the new revised procedures will be given in 65 cities on December 9, 1955. Candidates must file their request to take this examination not later than October 21 and to be eligible should be:

(1) at least 20 and under 31 years of age.

(2) United States citizens of at least ten years standing, and

(3) if married, married to an American citizen.

Those successful in the one-day written test will be given a subsequent oral examination before a traveling panel which will meet in regional centers. Beginning salaries for Foreign Service Officers range from $4400 to $5500 depending on age and experience; additional benefits include insurance, annual and sick leave and a generous retirement plan.

It is expected that approximately 300 officers will be appointed during the coming year as a result of the vastly increased need for Foreign Service Officers. These will fill positions both in the Department in Washington as well as at over 250 posts in 77 countries throughout the world.

ROTC Competition

Inter - company competition between Villanova NROTC midshipmen reached high gear last week with the inauguration last Thursday of the football league consisting of Able, Baker, and Charley companies and the drill team. The games are played on Mendel and Simpson fields and are worth five points to the winner and two points to the loser.

Points for the competition are also awarded for drill performance and merits gained by the individual members of a company.

Freedom Speaks In Argentina...

by Jim Greenlee

Freedom spoke in Argentina recently and was to be reechoed globally. Another trite, stereotypted page in the age old, world wide novel of "despotism" was turned. Juan Peron, liberalist, revolutionist, messiah of the labor party, dictator and self-styled omniscient, scurried into exile.

In his exile, he trod a familiar track, following such recent notables as Hitler, Mussolini, and the Kaiser of World War I fame, who were self-ordained "world rulers". It is a path which may be traced as far as the blood stained arenas of Rome and the debauchery of Pompeii.

Each generation had their "Perons" whom they eventually set into oblivion and yet each succeeding generation has given rise to a new crop. Neither time nor experience holds the material solution to the inexorable problem.

Peron rose in typical story-book fashion. He was the ideal of the masses, the liberator who was to rescue Argentina from corrupt rule.

Once in power, he too, like his predecessors, betrayed his people. He methodically silenced both the press and the radio, thus silencing public opinion. Having already renamed a city after his wife, and having once entertained thoughts of making her vice-president, he then conjured a new and even more sacrilegious infamy. He tried to coerce the Catholic Church into beatifying Eva Peron.

The June naval revolt had been an omen, which "strong man" Peron refused to recognize. Like all other dictators he believed one can fool all the people all the time. He had to see unfriendly naval forces preparing to shell his residence before he discredited that story.

His tyranny finally had burst all bounds. His chief mainstay, the General Confederation of Labor with its 6,000,000 members deserted him.

As the city resounded the cries of "Long live the people! Liberty!" The once powerful police state dictator sought political asylum aboard a Paraguay gunboat while he awaited his exodus.

Peron seems more fortunate than most of his pedecessors on that infamous path. He escaped with his life.

Peron's fate must provide food for thought for our present day dictators. Is such a fate awaiting leaders such as Bulganin or Tito? Whether it is or not is irrevelant. There is no escape for those who attempt to suppress the freedom which is innate in man. There are those who believe Stalin and Lenin escaped justice. Perhaps a few may receive man's wrath, but also will enter into the jurisdiction of a far more competent Judge.

Junior Nurses Find Goals Worth Initial Struggles

Fresh Nurses Ham It Up At Indiana Pep Rally

Girls Receive Training At Five Hospitals Before B. S. Degrees

"Every beginning is hard," they say, and the nursing program at Villanova was no exception to the proverb. The six college student nurses who make up the Class of 1957 know that the end in sight is well worth the struggle at the start.

Conquering Heroines

The Junior girls, Dolores Cofield, Betty Ann Curran, Helen Daly, Cecilia De Muro, Sr. Theolinda, O.S.F., Rita Shigo, pioneers of the Nursing Division, received their caps in May, after two years on campus. They are now completing nine months of medical-surgical training, under University auspices at Misericordia Hospital in Philadelphia.

Girls Liberally Trained

Before they receive their Bachelor of Science degrees with their class next year, they will have received training at more than five hospitals in the area. Finally, they will receive their training in psychiatric nursing, probably in New York.

The group of the training schools available to the Juniors in this area, makes one advantage of the collegiate program obvious. Selection of the finest facilities available is only possible with Villanova as a base. The other advantages are such that the administration felt obliged to initiate a school of nursing at the University.

Girls; Good Omen

The half-dozen pioneers of the Nursing Division have been a good omen to their class from the start. Their moral support helped the freshmen to be victorious on Muff Day in 1954.

The junior nurses have exemplified the Catholic concept of nursing as a vocation. Their class and their University has reason to be proud of them. They are the first, and because of them, the succeeding classes of nurses can counter the old saying with another, "Well begun is half done."

Dr. Klein Moderator:

Industrial Relations Club Holds Active 1st Meeting

The Industrial Relations Club, at its first meeting of the year, settled down immediately under its new officers, to the agenda for the coming year, and in particular to a practical problem in Industrial Relations.

The club closed last years activities with an inaugural banquet for the members of the newly formed Industrial Administration Department. At the dinner the following officers were elected for this year: President—Leo Calebrese, Vice President—Art Odabash, Secretary—Tony Tomasulo, Treasurer—Bill Eckenrode, Student Council Representative—Jack Fraser, Publicity Director—Bill Fraser.

At this year's initial meeting, Dr. Klein Moderator, read a letter of resignation from Tony Tomasulo who left school to enter the Augustinian seminary. Attillio DeMartino was appointed to the vacancy.

Present at this meeting were Professors Bonniwell, Powell and Klein, who acted as moderators in a Wordshop. A typical problem in Industrial Relations was presented to the more than 60 members who adjourned to other rooms in groups of 5 and discussed a solution. A spokesman was chosen from each group who presented their solution later at the workshop.

After each spokesman presented his views the discussion leader called for comments from the floor. A very heated and lengthy discussion followed. At the meeting's conclusion, Dr. Klein commented on the necessity of studying a problem thoroughly before attempting a solution.

Scholarship Committee Established

The following developments came as a result of the past week's Student Council meeting.

The date was set for the Annual Blood Drive. It will be held October 26-27. Chairman of the Drive, Jack Essig urges complete cooperation of the student body. (See story in this issue).

The judges for the Basca Award, given annually to the best decorated dormitory were decided upon. They are: the Very Reverend James A. Donnellon, President of the University, Mr. William P. Driscoll, head of Villanova's Physics Department, Captain Neale R. Curtin, Professor of Naval Science. The contest will be held October 21 to coincide with the pep-rally to be held that evening.

A committee was set up with Bob Ford at its head for the purpose of publicizing scholarships to the University.

The purposes of the committee were outlined as follows: (1) gathers information on what is available in government grants, and scholarship awards; (2) keeps a file on all bulletins and catalogues for use; (3) notifies students of opportunities and urges them to apply; (4) helps students in filling out applications; (5) evaluates applicants' abilities, personalities, etc., with help of confidential letters from faculty, plus personal interviews; (6) keeps complete file on each applicant.

The undergraduate nurses were heard from. They stated that a constitution for their proposed sorority will soon be drawn up and submitted to the Council for approval.

PUBlicly Speaking . . .

by Jim & Mike

Many students are dissatisfied with certain rules and situations here at Villanova. We realize that it is not possible to please everyone. However, we would like to give the administration's position of these causes of grievance.

Due to the lack of space, it is impossible to allow the students to have airplanes on campus. A bill has been brought before the Student Council whereby dayhops commuting over two hundred miles will be given special compensation. Anyone caught buzzing the Austin Hall Lounge is subject to immediate expulsion. Our hands are tied in this matter.

In fairness to the teachers and in the spirit of true competition, sneakers will not be worn to class. In the past, students have had an unfair advantage over the instructors through the use of these silent footwarmers in ducking out of class.

Due to protestations from the Navy building, the intramural committee has once again been forced to drop the flagpole-sitting contest. It was argued that certain heavy contestants would bend the pole. However, the committee has offered to stage a gold fish eating contest instead. Contestants will qualify at Mendel pond. Darby Creek has been chosen as a training camp, in spite of THOSE boulders.

Some students desire a rougher set of rules for intramural football. The present rules were requested by the Bryn Mawr Hospital due to the shortage of beds.

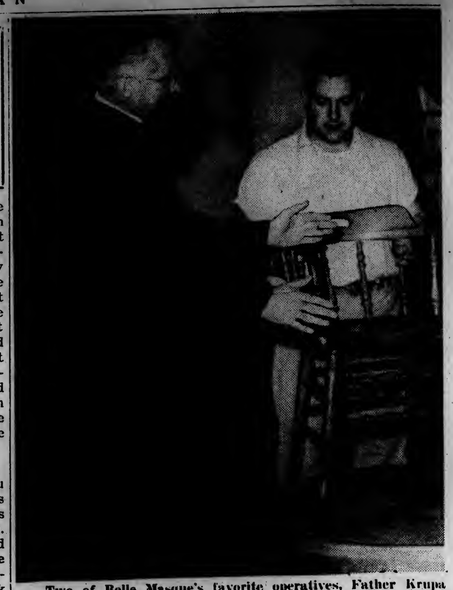
The long lines at the cafeteria cannot be helped. If the food is to be prapared properly, it must take time and the high degree of palatability which results is well worth the wait.

As regards the evening permissions, resident students, be thankful. You do not have to take your date home. She takes you. If additional time is necessary, a simple request is all that is needed. The proctors are more than willing to allow you as late as 12:45. If this is not enough, our advice is to enroll at Manhattanville.

Contrary to student expectations, it has been ruled that Dougherty Hall may not be used for student cocktail parties. Mendel field, with its own picturesque lake, has sufficed in the past and will continue to do so.

Pet Peeve of the Week: Indiana Roads.

Newly elected president of the Midshipman Quarterdeck Society Robert McCaffery discusses plans with Lt. V. M. Duronio USN for the forth coming year. Midshipman Ensign Robert McCaffery was elected president along with Mid'n Ensign K. R. Yenni as Secretary and Mid'n Ensign P. R. Stangl as Treasurer at the first meeting of the year held last week. Plans were discussed concerning the requirements to be fullfilled before the Seaboard and Blade Society, an elite organization of ROTC officers in the various schools. General plans were also presented in regard to the Societies dance in February.



Growing Big:

ICG Plans A Number of Social Events

The Intercollegiate Conference on Government, withheld from Student Council membership last year for lack of members, overcrowded 104 C&F last Thursday with its second meeting of the year. Last night the Rosemont Tea House accommodated one of its largest week - night crowds when the Villanova and Rosemont chapters held a joint meeting. Plans for several social events during the year and a mutual fund-raising campaign for a Harrisburg trip in the Spring were major points of the meeting.

Chairmen Have Ideas

At last week's meeting, Lou Donatelli, who had resigned as vice-chairman, was appointed as social committee chairman. John McNicholas, who received the nod as chairman of the membership and publicity committee, immediately set to work with his committee to disseminate information on the group throughout the campus. Don Eddington and his speakers committee will bring in several political speakers during the year for ideas on the convention, a national nominating convention. John Veith will head a radio committee which will hold political debates during the year and Guy Milne, a third-year member, will serve as chairman of the coordinating committee.

Two of Belle Masque's favorite operatives, Father Krupa and Tom Curran, arrange the sets and props for the Society's forthcoming dramatic interprestation of the "Caine Mutiny Court Martial."

Debating Society:

Beta Gamma Wants You!

"Beta Gamma needs you." That's what the signs says and they mean it. Villanova's debating society wants new talents.

Anyone without previous experience in intercollegiate debating is eligible to represent the University in a novice tournament to take place Nov. 5 at either Immaculata College or Temple University.

Audience Invited

Interested students are invited to watch the debating team in action in a series of practice debates on the guaranteed annual wage. These practice debates will be held during the next three weeks in room 101, C&F building.

Beta Gamma has scheduled the first varsity debate of the season with Muhlenburg on Nov. 19.

Distant Invitations Declined

Society moderator Mr. Joseph T. Jonas said that the debators have turned down invitations from Vermont and West Virginia so that the team can take on neighboring colleges including St. Joseph's and La Salle. There will be late season travelling, however. Both New York and Washington are on this year's itinerary.

James Welsh is president of the society and working with him are James Brady, vice-president; John McCurley, corresponding secretary; and Joseph Morris, treasurer.

Over 60 electrical engineering students will trip to the Naval Air Development Center in Johnsonville, Pa., this afternoon. The group will tour the NADC facilities for three hours, observing the research center's world famous laboratories.

NSA Speaker

Last night a large group of the E. E.'s heard Mr. J. Kenneth Lewis of the National Security Agency speak on "Magnetic Recording". The NSA is an organization charged with developing the technical phase of national defense. Magnetic recording is a part of their work which is finding important use not only in defense, but throughout industry as a whole.

Refreshments and informal discussion with Mr. Lewis followed the talk.

A.S.C.E. Plans

Plans were made to send the A.S.C.E. chapter's officers to a regional conference of Civil Engineers in New York on Oct. 6, when the Villanova chapter of the American Society of Civil Engineers held its first meeting yesterday.

Plans for the coming year were discussed and committees were set up to run the various functions of the Society.

All civil engineering students, especially sophomores, were called upon at the meeting to become active in the society.

Alpha Psi Omega

Villanova's only national fraternity, Alpha Psi Omega, an honorary dramatic fraternity, is being rejuvenated this year by its enthusiastic members, headed by Walt Doyle, senior English major.

Although the organization has been on the campus for six years, it has been dormant the last three.

At its first meeting the main topic of discussion was the choice of pledges to be invited into the fraternity. Plans are being laid to make the frat an enlarged and more active component of campus life.

Other chapters of this fraternity in the area are at Immaculata College, Beaver College, and Harcum Junior College.

Altogether Different Tactics

Lambda Kappa Delta will begin initiation of its new members tomorrow. It is undecided whether initiation will last one or two weeks.

Initiation "Different"

Following a meeting held by the initiation committee Thursday, it was learned that the initiation will be "altogether different from last year".

So far, 45 pledges have signed up.

A special feature which has been added this year is the appearance of a different medical specialist at each monthly meeting.

If any member misses three meetings during the year, he must drop out. If he wishes to re-join, he must be initiated once more.

Communion Breakfast

The fraternity will hold a Communion breakfast on Nov. 5, 1955. Father James A. Donnellon, O. S .A., University President, will say mass at the University Chapel. This will be followed by a breakfast at the Viking Inn in Ardmore. Fr. Donnellon and Rev. George McLaughlin, Dean of Student Activities, will speak at the breakfast. All fraternity members are cordially invited.

Transistor, Lecture at 10:30:

Physics Club Meets Tom'w

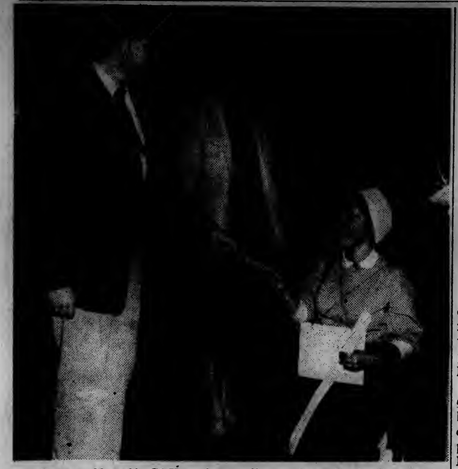
The Physics Club sponsored a field trip to Long Island's famous Brookhaven National Laboratory, the large regional center for nuclear research last Friday. The men who attended his expedition were awed by the layout of the Laboratory.

Life with Cosmopolitan

They visited the Atomic Pile, the backbone of nuclear research, which supplies neutrons for experiments, and radioisotopes for science and industry. Another big machine was the Cosmopolitan, a three billion volt atom smasher which shatters the nucleus of the atom so its fragments can be studied.

There are over 300 Brookhaven staff scientists, plus many university and industrial scientists and numerous students taking special training in nuclear science.

The trippers saw how the Laboratory uses its special tools and know how of the scientists to expand the frontiers of knowledge in physics, chemistry, biology, medicine and engineering.



Winoski and Polarization

Last Thursday at Villanova, the club witnessed a very interesting demonstration on the properties of polarized light. The demonstration was given by Walter Winoski, a senior club member.

Tomorrow the club will hear from Charles Ross, a junior, who will explain the "Physics of Transition". A transistor in operation will highlight the lecture.

Everyone who is interested is invited to attend the meeting in the Physics Lab at 10:30, said President Charles Schwerdtfeger.

Marketing Club

The initial meeting of the Marketing Club, attended by 50 members, saw the election of the following slate for the forthcoming year: President, Charlie Stone (senior C&F); Vice President, Hank Whalen (senior C&F); Treasurer, John Kennedy (junior C&F); Secretary, Tom Murphy, (sophomore C&F); Student Council representative, Bill Ward (senior C&F).

Mr. Frederick Burgess, moderator, spoke briefly on the aims and advantages of the organization. It was emphasized that the membership is open to any student of Villanova.

Representative members of industry are being contacted to appear as guest speakers at the meetings.

IRS Plans Trip To New York

Villanova's International Relations Society is planning its first semester field trip. The destination of the thirty club members making the trip is New York City and the United Nations. The date will be Thursday, Oct. 27.

They will tour the United Nations building and attend a UN session. After luncheon in a famous restaurant they will return for an interview with a foreign representative and attend another special session of the UN.

Also being discussed by the I.R.S. is the annual trip to Washington, D. C., next semester.

Incomplete List of VU Singers' Concerts Readied

Jack Jannucci, business manager of the Villanova singers, announced at a meeting of Singers' officers held last week that a skeleton schedule of concerts has been prepared.

Jannucci wouldn't name the concerts already listed until the schedule was completed, however.

Joe D'Aquilla reported that membership has increased to 65 as a result of recent auditions. "The club has been forced to close its doors to new members at least temporarily because we have reached the ideal in size for an organization of our type. In addition, we have a waiting list of some 20 men," D'Aquilla added.

The Singers' moderator, Dr. Harold Gill Reuschlein, announced that he and Charlie Ross, librarian, had purchased new music and that the club already has begun work on some of these selections.

At a rehearsal held earlier that evening, President Bob Ford welcomed the new men and reminded all members of the necessity for strict attendance this year.

McCaffery Leads Middie Officers

The Social Club of Villanova's Midshipmen Officers, the Quarterdeck Society, founded last year ,has elected senior Midshipman Robert McCaffery as its president ,and is looking forward to the sponsorship of a dance and several "smokers" throughout the year.

The group is also aspiring for membership in the National Society of Scabbard and Blade (the National Society of Midshipmen Officers).

Senior Midshipmen Dick Yenni and John Stangl were elected secretary and treasurer, respectively. Moderator of the society is Lt. V. M. Duronio, USN.

Termed an "elete organization" or ROTC officers in the various schools involved, the society will present its initial dance February 10 in the Field House.

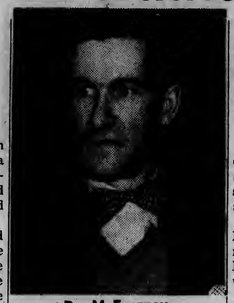
Guerrisi Lines Up Prom Bands

Jerry Guerrisi, senior prom chairman, has been making a number of contacts in preparation for an eventual prom band possibility list to be announced later.



Once a number of band choices have been lined up, the list will be presented to the class for the final pick. The prom, also referred to as the Belle Air Ball, is set for the Field House January 13.

The price ceiling for hiring a prom band has been lowered to $1000. Last year's high was $1200.

Guerrisi will be working with decorations chairman Phil Butler in providing the atmospheric theme for the Field House. Henry Guerrisi is in charge of publicity for the prom (and for all other activities) and Tom Meaney and Nick Mazzoni will have charge of ticket sales.

Dr. McEnerney

Dr. McEnerney Addresses DPM Tonight at 7:15

Dr. John McEnerney, associate professor of classics and fraternity moderator, will address the first monthly meeting of Delta Pi Mu fraternity tonight at 7:15 in 201 C&F.

Subject of Dr. McEnerney's talk was not announced by Owen Hickey, fraternity president.

A Student Council representative will be elected during the business meeting, Hickey said. The post was left vacant when Bob Ford, who was elected last May, was forced to resign on becoming president of the Villanova Singers.

Members may also discuss tentative plans for the fraternity's annual dinner dance. The affair has been held near the end of the school year in the past but it may be moved to a date earlier in the year to prevent a conflict with the heavy spring social schedule.

McInerney Closes Deal For Club

The Class of 1956 dinner dance, January 14, will be held at Palumbo's night club, the scene of last May's successful affair during Junior Week.

Dinner dance chairman Tom McInerney made the announcement after signing for the Philadelphia location late last week.

McInerney added that practically all the conditions that were involved in May will prevail again in January. Ticket prices will be $10, giving a floor show, several bands, a several-course dinner, and the same atmosphere that helped to make the May dance a success.

Palumbo's is located on Catherine Street near 11th in downtown Philadelphia. The club is made up of two floors, with an elevating and descending stage bringing floor show and band entertainment to both levels.

John Ferro, manager of the club, told McInerney that he would once again assume responsibility for the printing of tickets. He said the club will work in cooperation with ticket chairmen Tom Meaney and Nick Mazzoni in the matter of seating arrangements, just as was the case in May.

Palumbo's is a highly atmospheric location that caters to clubs, civic groups, schools and varied organizations in giving banquets and dances. The club can accommodate 300 people on the upper level and some 150 downstairs. The decorative theme is modernistic, with indirect lighting, low ceilings, subdued colors and soft backgrounds.

Dr. Klein Named Head:

Industrial Administration Course Added to C&F School

By Dr. Klein

Dr. Klein

An intensive, well-coordinated course, Industrial Administration, is being offered this fall in the Commerce and Finance school.

Dr. Walter H. Klein, the head of this new department, stated that the curriculum is designed to provide professional training for men who plan to work toward management positions in industry, men who contemplate becoming specialists in production and personnel or industrial relations, as well as men who intend to do graduate study in industrial administration or some related field.

Diverse Curriculum

The curriculum offers both cultural studies and studies that lead to responsible citizenship and professional competency in order that the future businessman may formulate and administer business policies that conform with his social responsibilities and Christian ethics.

Briefly, the basic knowledge a student must bring to the job are the following: (1) ability to interpret business tools of an accounting, mathematical and statistical nature; (2) knowledge of the more important technical principles of the various specialized fields that contribute to the successful operation of a business; (3) ability to identify problem areas; (4) ability to use sound analytical thinking in solving business problems; (5) ability to bring to human relations problems an approach similar to that used in handling technical problems; (6) knowledge of those skills which enable an individual to communicate his ideas effectively.

It is required that the student should be "well-grounded" in basic knowledge because essential particular knowledge can be acquired after graduation.

Learn by Doing

The student, through the use

In considering the merits of the new IA-curriculum, it is imperative that certain notions be kept clearly in the forefront. One, the new curriculum constitutes a program of study not just a collection of courses. Perhaps one cannot fully appreciate the impact of this statement until he has experienced both types of curricula. However, some insight into its meaning can be gained from the following quotation of Dr. Asher Isaacs, one of the nation's leading authorities on small business, concerning the new major: "Your program seems to me to be well-planned so that the student can see just what the four years will hold. It also enables a prospective employer to understand just what training your graduates will receive."

Business Info"

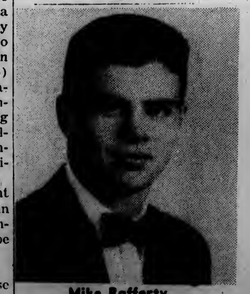
Secondly, the program places emphasis upon using, rather than collecting or compiling business information. Both aspects are equally essential and the proper concern of business schools. "Using" requires some knowledge of the problems encountered in the collection of all kinds of business data, but it does not require the detailed information that an expert in any particular field needs. In this regard it must be recognized that there exists an extensive body of knowledge concerning just the use of business information with which the IA-students must be thoroughly acquainted.

Differences Noted

Finally, the differences between such sets of questions as the following need to be fully appreciated: Should the business expand? versus How is the best way to finance a proposed expansion? or What should be the price of the product? versus What does it cost to produce the product? One such difference is that in the first question of each set the finance or accounting expert is generally best able to give the final answer while in the second question of each set the finance or accounting expert supplies part of the information needed to reach a final decision. In other words, the final decision in the latter case becomes the resultant of the pooling together of the ideas of various experts. The significance of this for the new IA-program is that there is now coming into existence a body of knowledge which suggest the best procedures of coordinating the knowledge of experts. Such knowledge, since it contributes to the effective use of business information, is an essential part of the new IA-program.

The Elective System

A. Purpose



The purpose of the elective system is to further the overall objectives of the program while giving the student ample

SPORTS CHATTER

An Idealistic Outlook

by Bob Strayton

George Eastman, Manhattan University's esteemed track coach, is reputed to have once said that the United States need never fear whether it would be well-represented on the track at the Olympic Games as long as Jim "Jumbo" Elliot's boys were able to compete. To the average layman, this statement might seem a bit hyperbolic, but to those few who choose to follow track endeavors, the truthfulness of Mr. Eastman's remark is apparent.

Traced back to the days when Fred Dwyer was burning the boards with his fine clockings for the mile, Villanova's track team could not hold a candle to the mighty aggregation assembled today under Jim Elliot's tutelage. The wealth of talent which for the past three years has epitomized the dreams of track coaches throughout the country did not come to Villanova by mere chance. It involved an arduous selection process which only the very best athletes could withstand. Of these, a mere handful were chosen for the Wildcat squad.

National Pre-Eminence for Trackmen

At present, at least five of Villanova's track men have granted national pre-eminence for themselves and their school. Charlie Jenkins, a Junior from Cambridge, Mass., for example, was a byword on the lips of track enthusiasts during last year's indoor track campaign, after his startling victory in the opening meet of the season at Boston. Don Bragg is another of equal renown. Regarded by many as being the first man with a chance to pole vault sixteen feet, Don has proved himself to be a a nemesis to opposition. His vault of fifteen feet, one inch this summer at the NCAA meet in Los Angeles was enough to earn for him a new intercollegiate record. Then there's Alex Breckenridge, the affable Scot, who gained a name for himself in his Freshmen year when he won the classic Boardwalk Mile at Atlantic City. Ron Delaney, the Sophomore from Ireland, proved to be another long distance bulwark for the Wildcats. Just this summer, Delaney ran a 4:05.9 mile in Ireland.

Aside from these four outstanding performers, who by no means encompass the great wealth of talent to be found at Villanova, the track team also boasts of Seniors Al Liforelli, Warner Heitman, and Bill Reilly, all of whom specialize in the quarter mile performance, but are versatile enough to compete in the 100 and 220 yd. dashes. The long distance running of Juniors John Kopil, George Browne, and Al Peterson have added greatly to the lebit side of Villanova's winning ledger, while Gene Maliff, also a Junior, contributes his winning efforts in the broad jump, quarter mile, and occasionally the century dash.

Sophomores To Abet This Year

With a base as firm as the aforementioned, it would seem that Villanova would need other performers as much as Rocky Marciano needs a defense, yet the farsighted Mr. Elliot is already planning for the forthcoming seasons. His rather complete stock of Sophomore talent, aside from Delaney, includes George Sydnor, who thinks nothing of doing the hundred in 9.7 seconds. Phil Reavis, with his passion for six foot, seven inch high jumps, should also abet the Villanova cause, along with Roland Simpson, a middle distance runner, Walt Budney, who also does the hundred under ten seconds, and Bob Holub, whose specialty is making a mockery out of the 120 high and low hurdles.

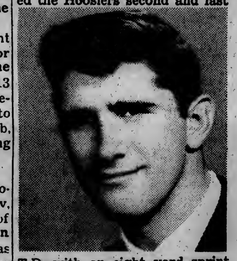
Frosh Prospects Even More Encouraging

Even before these Sophomores have a chance to prove themselves in varsity competition, they will be backed up by four Freshman fledglings. Vic DeMeo, who does the quarter and half mile distances, holds the New Jersey State championship for the former. His ability is matched by John Collymore's, who was the National Scholastic Indoor champ for the quarter mile last year. Following Collymore across the tape when he won the national 440 was Bill Rahan, who also is a member of the Villanova track family. Rounding out this impressive array of Freshman talent is Charlie Stead, a proficient dabbler in both high hurdles and the quarter mile. The fact that all four of the Freshmen do the quarter mile in less than fifty seconds might also prove of interest to followers of the banked-boards and cinders.

In considering the vast storehouse of ability represented in these twenty men, it would be safe to approach Villanova's track future with more than an idealistic outlook. As George Eastman said, just end Villanova's track team to the Olympics!

Competent Defensive Machine Noted In Villanova's First "Big-Ten" Appearance

Who's got the ball? Although it's quite hard to tell, that's Davy Parr carrying the pigskin for the Wildcats in a game which they lost, 14-7, against Indiana on Saturday.



By BILL JONES

Last Saturday at Bloomington, Indiana, a N. C. State scout watched unbelievingly as Villanova's fighting, surging line halted stunned Indiana scatbacks with incredible consistency. He saw Villanova's offence, throttled all afternoon by fumbles, interceptions, and a long string of penalties, suddenly erupt violently in the fourth quarter, striking like lightning with a 78 yard pass and run play from Ronnie Gorton to John Bauer, a pass that Ronnie heaved 60 yards in the air far over the heads of the startled hoosier defenders into Bauer's waiting arms.

He saw, most of all, an avalanche of trouble awaiting N. C. State next week.

Campbell a Standout

The big chink in Villanova's armor was Indiana's pile driving workhouse, Olympic declathon star, Milt Campbell. He clawed away at Villanova's massive line continually, penetrating it 22 times for 130 yards. He set up Indiana's first T. D., scored by quarterback Chick Cichowski on a one yard sneak, in the second quarter with his line batering three and four yard plunges. Minutes later he scored the Hoosiers second and last

T.D. with an eight yard sprint through tackle. Tom Hall made good with both extra points.

The figures bear out the unbelievable performance of the Villanova foreward wall. They stopped ten Indiana drives inside the 35 yard line, five of which were inside the 12, an incredible feat. Villanova's pass defense was also outstanding. They blanketed the intended receivers well, knocking down 16 passes while allowing but four completions.

Gorton Thorws 60

This tight bruising ball game was somewhat marred by the officials who seemed to think they were refereeing a basketball game. Something was detected amiss with an extraordinary number of plays. A grand total of 150 yards were handed out in penalties, 95 to Villanova and 55 to Indiana.

Villanova's touchdown, midway in the last quarter, was electrifying. Ronnie Gorton, faced with a third and 15 situation o n his own 22, stepped back to the 15 and looked for a receiver. He uncorked an amazing 60 yards strike to John Bauer on the Indiana 25. Johnnie took it in stride, well behind the astonished Hoosier defenders, and sprinted untouched into the end zone. He also kicked the extra point.

No one or two men can be singled out as Villanova's standouts, Villanova used 30 men and had thirty standouts. Next week, in the Villanova Stadium, comes victory.

Goodreau Stadium Site Of Saturday's N.C. State Game

By DARRYL DITENFEST

The Athletic Department's latest innovation to bring Villanova football back to the campus, goes through its first experimental stage this Saturday, when the Wolfpack of North Carolia State moves onto campus for a meeting with Villanova's team in Goodreau Stadium.

Although this will be the first gridiron meeting for both schools, State is by no means a stranger on the Villanova athletic scene. Last winter, the basketball enterprise of Schafer, Devine, and Company defeated the Southerners on two separate occasions. It should prove interesting to see if N. C. State can avenge the defeats of their fellow athletes.

Breckenridge Warms Up

Christy Leads State

Leading the attack for the Atlantic Coast Conference representatives will be their standout halfback, Dick Christy. Christy, along with quarterback Eddie West, accounted for all of the Wolfpack's scoring in its game with Wake Forest last week.

The Chester, Pa. youth caught two aerial offerings by West for the only State touchdowns of the game, which ended in a 13-13 tie. One of the pass completions saw Christy leap high to his right for a sensationl grab, epitomizing the pass receiving of which he is capable.

Pack Line Weak

Halfback Dick Hunter, together with West and Christy, completes the scoring nucleus of North Carolina State. Also an able pass catcher, Hunter has distinguished himself this year primarily as a fleet ground attackman.

N. C. State's line, however, has not proven itself to be very potent, due mainly to a lack of depth and experience, a disability which has plagued it all year.

Breckenridge Gets Two Firsts As Pitt, LaSalle Lose To VU

Continuing a tradition of winning ways, the V. U. cross-country squad defeated LaSalle and Pittsburgh in successive meets last week. The big man in each of the victories was Alex Breckinridge, the Scottish distance runner, who was the controversial shensation of last year's Boardwalk Mile.

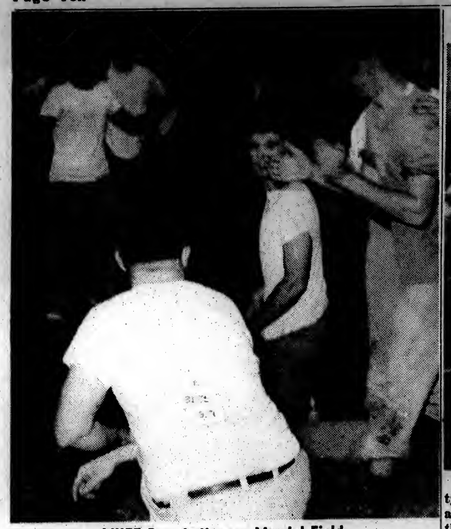
Alex romped home first in both meets as LaSalle took the high number in the first, 18-37, and Pitt was a 27-30 loser. The Pittsburgh defeat broke a string of twenty consecutive victories by the west Pennsylvania harriers.

Sowell Fifth

Arnie Sowell, the Panther middle-dstance ace and a definite favorite for Olympic honors, splashed home fifth in the wake of Breckinridge, Ron Delaney, John Kopil and Pitt's Jim Moore. Breckinridge's time over the sloppy 5¼ mile V. U. Course was 27 minutes, 45 seconds.

Ron Delaney, the Irish half-mile ace, was second and John Kopil, scholastic record holder, was third. There was a gap of five places before another Wildcat, George Browne, doped home. The race was run in a driving rain which muddied the course and slowed the pace.

Wildcat Now 2-0



Villanova's streak - breaking victory brought the season's record to two victories against no defeats. The Wildcat countryviewers had things their own way in the LaSalle meet, winning handily as Junior Alex again paced the field.

Pitt's second best effort was their first cross-country defeat since 1952, when the Panthers were beaten by Army and Manhatten in a triangular meet at West Point. In taking the measure of a team with such an outstanding record, the Wildcats give notice to all concerned that Pillanova's track victories of recent years are not a thing of the past.

Breckenridge Excels As Ever

Breckinridge, the personable Scottish import, has carried on the winning tradition ever since his arrival at the Main Line campus. Two years ago Alex romped home first to take the IC4A freshmen cross-country run. Last year, in the widely publicized Boardwalk Mile at Atlantic City, he was not listed as an actual starter and was relegated to the humble role of a pacer. However, the Scot never did stop running and set a "pace" so hot he was forced to be the tape-breaker. A heated controversy arose as to who was the actual winner and a special trophy was finally awarded to the V. U. "pacer".

The straining group of individuals above are the Freshman tug-o-war team, who lost a knotty contest to the Sophomores in the initial MUFF day event of the festivities. The Sohpomores after winning the tug-o-war, went on to win six out of the eleven events for a 79-71 finale. To the left, which also went to the able Sophomores by a 9-0.

Sophomores Win Muff Day; Frosh Wear "Regs" Until Fri.

Football Game Highlights Eleven Sports Activities

By JOHN CURTIN

Age and experience triumphed over youth and ability last Wednesday afternoon, as the Sophs struggled to a 79-71 victory over the Frosh on Villanova's annual MUFF day. And so, it's back to the Regs for the lowly Freshmen, or is it? A look around the campus shows very few well dressed young men about town, despite the dreaded Whitehat's claims of vengeance. It seems that the losers are not satisfied with the way things turned out. However, regardless of several claims of foul play, facts are facts. The scoresheet shows the Sophomores on top by eight points.

Frosh Sweep Three Events

The second year men gave a hint of things to come when they captured the first event of the afternoon, dragging their opponents to defeat in the tug of war. The Frosh roared back to take the next three events and take a three point lead, 20-17. With Joe Armon finishing ahead of the Soph's Joe Corcoran, and John Rumbarger and Emil DeJesus taking third and fourth place for them, the underclassmen won the 100 yard dash to pull even with their tormentors.

Then, the team of Kassiols and Canna taking first in the Wheel Barrel race and another class team of Waterhouse and Suton coming in third gave the underdogs the lead.

Sophs Win Egg Toss

It was Joe Armon paving the way again to capture the fifty yard dash. Sophomore Joe Corcoran placed second, Freshman Pete Kievit was third, and Al Donheisier came in fourth. The egg toss was next, and the upperclassers picked up a fast ten points as they outclassed the valiant youngsters. The following three legged race was the high spot of the day for the Frosh, as they swept all three first places to strengthen their lead. Jim McNaney and Tom Lynch lead the way in this rout.

However, Frosh spirits were to be dimmed, for now it was the Soph's turn to take three in a row. Three points were cut off the lead as Stark and Ratchford ran to a victory in the 220, finishing first and third repectively. Paquano took second position for the losers. Then, Bill Dunn outpassed all Freshman entires in the football throwing contest to cut the lead to two points, 51-49. Bill Nichols won the football kick and the Sophs led 59-56.

Football Game Decides Victors

The underclassmen weren't dead yet. The relay team of Rumbarger, Ryan, DeJesus, and McGrath took the 440. That left it up to the football game, with the Frosh leading 66-64. Spectators were treated to a scoreless first half, but it was evident that the Freshman club was having trouble.

In the third period the Sophs exploded with a fine passing attack and great defense to rack up a TD and safety for nine points. The Frosh fought back in the final frame and were on their enemy's goal line as the final gun sounded. But that was it, the Sophomores took the game and MUFF day, and the Frosh must wear Regs until Thanksgiving.

FROSH FOOTBALL—

Last Saturday, the game between Villanova's Freshman football team and West Chester State was postponed. Reasons for postponement of the game were because of the inclement weather. It was supposed to have been played in Lancaster, Pa. To date, the Frosh team has a 2-0 record, with victories over Wyoming Seminary (42-0) and Princeton's Freshman team (27-7).

IRS-DPM GOLF RESULTS

Delta Pi Mu Fraternity took the measure of the International Relations Society on the Main Line golf course last week, on the strength of a sparkling 69 by the frat's Ben Klemanowicz.

Playing on fast greens, Klemanowicz edged out IRS president Phil Taddeo, who finished with a 70.

The match was played with handicap, with the two poorest holes excluded from each entry's final tally.

Third place was taken by Pete Quinn of IRS, netting 73. Following were Marty Roache, DPM, 74; Bill Reich, DPM, 75; Frank Adams, IRS, 76; and Bert Gratz, IRS, with a 77.

Inspiration

Last Wednesday night in the Fieldhouse
A rally was held for all.
Hordes of shouting Villanovans
Quickly filled the hall.

The band did loudly play,
And the men did louder shout.
And amidst this show of spirit
The team came filing out.

We heard a few words from our captain,
And from our coaches, too.
These wise words of optimism
Did raise our spirits, blue.

The crowd filed out of the rally,
The loudest one in years.
With the words of Coach Frank Reagan
Ringing in their ears.

Our coach stood erect before the mike,
And exclaimed with a glow,
"Are we disappointed? Yes,
Are we discouraged? Hell no."

Navy Enters Four Teams In 'Spirited' Intramural Loop

The addition of a new league marked the second week's activity in the intramural football league. Villanova's Naval ROTC unit introduced four new teams into the competition, setting a new high for entries, which now total 57 for the present season. All three of the new teams—Able, Baker and Charlie Companies — have already played at least one game.

Results of last week's games follow:

"ABLE" COMPANY WINS, 12-6

This week in the Navy League, Able Co. downed Baker Co. 12-6 in a game featuring a fine passing attack by both sides. Able tallied the only score in the first half on a thirty yard pass play from Gene Fogarty to Don Alton. In the second half Baker Co.'s Bob McCaffery intercepted a pass and sprinted thirty yards for the tying points. However, a seventy yard pass-run play from Harry Cook to Joe Armon gave Able the game 12-6 in the final period.

In the first game of the Navy football League Charlie Co. defeated the Drill Team 6-0. In the closing seconds Dick Peer passed to Hank Nichols in the end zone for the only score of the game. Earlier in the game Nichols had hit consistently on the long passes.

Norm Peer was outstanding on defense for the winners while Jay O'Neill and Leo Rudegair were successful for the Drill Team.

Last Thursday, the Redskins of the Mendel League decisively defeated the Bayshore A. C. football team, by a 14-0 score. Led by the adept quarterbacking of slight Karl Smith, the Redskins came to life after a scoreless first half, and on two fine passing plays, tallied the only scores of the game.

One of the passing plays, which worked in reverse, saw John McHale intercept a Bayshore pass on his own twenty, and manuever across the goal line for the initial score. Smith threw to Mike Klesius for the point.

A short while later, with the ball in the Redskins possession, Smith sent Ted Coogan as a flanker to the lefft. When the play was in motion, Smith unlimbered a long 35 yd. aerial which Coogan snared on his own 15 yd. line to score successfully. Again a Smith to Klesius pass neted the Skins the extra point.

Key blockin by the rotund Redskin line was an important factor in the outcome of the contest. Ted Coogan, Jim Curvey, and Stan P. Wilson were the stalwarts on the forward wall who performed so competently.

A series of costly fumbles, interceptions, and penalties cost the previously undefeated Saints of the early Mendel League a lot of trouble, and their first defeat of the season. The tide-turning opposition was the Opposers, who now have a 2-1 slate.

Drawing first blood in this hotly fought battle were the Saints, when speedy Ralph DeCicco snared a pass from halfback Dick Montgomery on his own ten yard line, and ran unmolested to the goal line. The attempt at the conversion was no good, and the Saints led, 6-0 when the halftime ended.

The Opposers took command of the game in the second stanza ,however, when a Montgomerypass was intercepted on his own goal line by Bob Dealy, and run back to the thirty. That opened the flood gates for two more touchdowns, both by the Opposers, who won the game 13-6.

Mother's Day

Benjamin Franklin Hotel officials told Hooker that 500 couples could be accommodated in the hotel's ballroom.

After the juniors and their dates have dined, tables will be cleared away for dancing, said Hooker.

The steering committee vote on the question was unanimous, although some members indicated they would have preferred Palumbo's.

Rev. Dante Girolami, O.S.A., class moderator, said he went along with class president Jack Decker and Hooker in leaning toward the Ben Franklin.

Father Girolami said he considered the Franklin a "classier place". He said juniors and their dates should have a better time because there will be more room for dancing.

At Palumbo's last year, according to the moderator: there was not as much room for dancing, the class was divided into two rooms for dinner and the group had to spend most of the evening talking "in their own little group".

Palumbo's last year arranged a floor show for the juniors. This was the main reason, apparently, that some members of the steering committee favored going back to the Philadelphia night spot. There will be no type of floor show at the Franklin, but Father Girolami said the juniors should have a better time since they could do more dancing.

The dinner dance site was the only matter decided by the steering committee Thursday. Another meeting was scheduled for Monday.

A report on some bands being considered for the Junior Prom, the night before the dinner dance, was made.

The committee was given a list of 11 bands, from which five were picked. The class will vote on the band, according to Decker.

The five bands being considered, in order of preference voted by the steering committee: Russ Morgan, Richard Maltby, the Commanders, Art Mooney and Charlie Spivak. Other bands are being considered, Decker said.

All 11 bands, according to Tom Curran, Band Committee Chairman, were listed in the $1,000-$1,250 category by a Philadelphia music agent.

No band commitments can be made before Jan. 1, Curran quoted the agent as saying.

During the meeting Decker appointed Dick McEntee, a chemical engineer from Franklin, N. J., to handle newspaper publicity for the class.

Simple Setting

It is true that the set is by no means complex; all that is required is the judge advocate's bench and the witness stand. However, they are both quite intricate.

The judges bench, which will be in stage left, is approximately 4 feet, 6 inches high and 14 feet long and has a slight pitch at about a 15 degree angle from the center. The front is constructed to appear pannelled. This will serve the judge advocate and his staff of six.

The witness stand, placed in stage center, is round with one step. It is made with curved plywood supported by a series of curved beams.

To round out the picture, on stage right, front and back, are desks, the latter for the defense Counsel and the former for the prosecution. There are no rear or wall sets.

A black curtain is hung and creates a beautiful and intriguing scene.

Militarily Perfect

Careful attention has been given to the set so it will be militarily perfect. This is to be expected, for Father Krupa, Belle Masque moderator is once again doing his job of set designing.

Although hampered by band practice, dance decorating, and various other distractions of the field house, the "Masques" have leased a garage in Garret Hill in which to practice.

The actors will only have a total of one month to get in shape for the opening date, which is Nov. 3. Consequently, they hold practice until quite late in the evening.

Chairmen Tom Curran and Jim Judge announced that posters and handbills will soon flood the campus.

Andy Iaccarino and John Walsh, ticket chairmen, say they expect a sellout crowd. Tickets will go on sale next week. They may be purchased from any member of Belle Masque, or in the Pie Shop.

A Visit With Ernest Hemingway

must not stop noticing. When you stop noticing, you are dry. You must see and hear and, yes, even reach out to smell the story."

When questioned about the difficulty in attempting writing as a part-time career, Hemingway said quite sensibly, "It's very well to want to write, but after all, there must be some way to live while you are trying to do it."

On his health: "Better now. Not so good a while back, but better now." He told us how the smashed vertabrae at the base of his back forced him to write while standing for quite a while.

He rose and led us about the house. Gesturing toward a large mounted deer-type on the hall wall, he told us that it was the Kadu of which he had written in "Green Hills of Africa". The animal had a beautiful spread of antlers.

Hemingway then showed us a personal collection of African photographs taken by a LOOK photographer. As he thumbed through the picture book, he gave a running string of comments on the memories triggered by various pictures. Once to criticize the boxing style of a native boy with whom he was boxing, now to comment on the difficulty of a particular shot of an elephant, and again on the unusual tooth erosion found in the mouth of a cattle-killing tiger which he had shot.

He seems to have retained his interest and love for Africa, for it was while showing us the picture book that he really loosened up. He chuckled more and uttered a few truly Hemingway-like statements which are not written here. When he laughs you are drawn into it, for he seems to laugh at himself, at life, at the absurdity of his comment, but never at you. It's easy to laugh when you are not the target.

As we went toward the rear of the house, three or four small dogs greeted him and leaped shoulder high upon him. He spoke to them in Spanish.

We stood on the path behind the house and gazed down into the great cup of tropical lushness that stretches beneath the house down to Havana harbor. The green is dotted by the small villages we had come through on our way out. In the distance is the harbor with the great ships pulling at their anchors, and beyond them the clean sharp lines of "New Havana" and finally a line of water meeting the horizon that is the Carribean Sea.

As we turned back to the house, Jack pointed and said, "Is that the tower?"

Hemingway said, "Yes, that's where I work." He smiled. "I used to think that one day, when I had money, I would have a large slide made and when I finished work I would slide down from the tower to the pool. But I never had the money."

He led us back into the house and showed us the library which is a rather bare room about twenty feet by twelve and perhaps twelve feet high. On each of the long sides books are stacked from floor to ceiling. As we walked back to the living room we passed a den-ish type of room in which was a card table stacked four inches deep with mail. Hemingway flashed a broad, boyish grin and said, "That's to be answered immediately."

I asked if he received much mail from young people seeking his advice. He said that he does and that he tries to answer it personally but when it gets to the state we had seen it in, he is forced to hire a secretary and dictate the mail.

We stood in the living room and chatted about the problems connected with producing the Old Man and of the manner in which Hollywood has butchered African movies. Although Jack and I were quite awed by him, he had loosened up in the time we had been there and we were conversing freely.

Then suddenly, during a pause in the conversation, he said very simply, "Please excuse me, I'm shy with new people." He was obviously referring to the earlier formality and awkwardndess.

Shortly before we left, Jack said, "Sir, I'd like to ask you a question. You've travelled all over the world . . . "

"No, not the whole world," Hemingway interrupted.

"Well, most of the world. Why is it that you settled here and have a home in Cuba?"

Hemingway said, "I came here many years ago and had good luck. I wrote "For Whom the Bell Tolls" in this house and I've always gone well here. It's easy to like a place when you have good luck there."

There are a great many impressions one takes away from a meeting with this man. I have thought about him many times since that fortunate interview. He is an immense man both physically and in his "presence"; there is a warmth and a great zest for life that exude from him. It is the same dynamic force which permeates his crisp, honest prose. It is perhaps the outward manifestation of his innate courage and individual integrity.

Whatever may be said of Ernest Hemingway, he is a great symbol of our time. His fascination for young people is undeniable, for he appeals to their budding individuality with a simple message:

If the cause is good and you believe in it, then fight for it and don't complain about your problems. Don't be a bother to anyone. Drink deeply, love deeply, but don't be an emotional phony. Do your best and help one another along.

In Hemingway's first great success, "The Sun Also Rises," Jake, the mutilated ex-soldier says, "I don't wan't to know what it's all about, I just want to find out how to live in it. Perhaps by finding out how to live in it you find out what's it's all about."

When ever I think of Hemingway and of the many words that have been written on his approach to life, I think of that comment by one of his greatest characters.

Hemingway speaks a great deal of luck. He mentioned it frequently during our interview with him. Perhaps this reflects a belief that chance and circumstance rule a man's life more than the man himself, but I think not. I think that perhaps he uses the word to symbolize courage within a man, for chance and circumstance may buffet a man without ruling him or defeating him, and this is the type of story that Hemingway writes so well.

As we walked down the steps and away from the house, Ernest Hemingway called out in the silence. He said simply, "Good luck to both of you." Two hours had passed since our nervous approach to the house.

The wars and revolutions, exploding bombs, crashing airplanes, bloody and beauteous bullfights, and hard drinking Parisian days were far removed from the quiet Cuban countryside, but neither Jack nor I was forgetting what a great amount of living lay behind this man and what hard cold beauty has flowed from his pen.

B. Department Requirement

The IA program calls for a minimum of five electives of three-credits each. One elective must be taken in each of the following areas: cultural, social relations, and a technical field. The remaining two electives can be taken in any two of the above-mentoned areas. The student is relatively free to decide from what field or fields within each area he wishes to select his electives as well as the specific elective or elective within each field. Each student will be assigned a departmental adviser, and all electives must be approved by the adviser. The main purpose of such approval is to assure that the departmental requirement is fulfilled.

of the case method, problem situations and varied readings in many diverse fields is given opportunities: (1) to gain practice in using the basic knowledge that he learns; (2) to develop a company-wide viewpoint toward business problems and their resolutions; (3) to gain facility in coordinating general and specialized knowledge, and (4) to evaluate the social, cultural and ethical implications of alternative business policies.

Consequently ,through the use of certain instructional techniques, the student is required to do the same thing in class which he, as a professional man and citizen, will be expected to do later on in the world.

Hence, classes assume a professional atmosphere, and every possible effort is made to teach the courses in such a manner as to stimulate independent thinking on the part of the student and to enable him to continue learning on his own.

Information concerning the special courses offered in this department may be secured from Dr. Klein in the faculty office on the first floor of the C & F building.

MUFF Day Action on Mendel Field

Frosh Tug Away During MUFF Day Activities

The straining group of individuals above are the Freshman tug-o-war team, who lost a knotty contest to the Sophomores in the initial MUFF day event of the festivities. The Sohpomores after winning the tug-o-war, went on to win six out of the eleven events for a 79-71 finale. To the left, which also went to the able Sophomores by a 9-0.

Sophomores Win Muff Day; Frosh Wear "Regs" Until Fri.

Football Game Highlights Eleven Sports Activities

By JOHN CURTIN

Age and experience triumphed over youth and ability last Wednesday afternoon, as the Sophs struggled to a 79-71 victory over the Frosh on Villanova's annual MUFF day. And so, it's back to the Regs for the lowly Freshmen, or is it? A look around the campus shows very few well dressed young men about town, despite the dreaded Whitehat's claims of vengeance. It seems that the losers are not satisfied with the way things turned out. However, regardless of several claims of foul play, facts are facts. The scoresheet shows the Sophomores on top by eight points.

Frosh Sweep Three Events

The second year men gave a hint of things to come when they captured the first event of the afternoon, dragging their opponents to defeat in the tug of war. The Frosh roared back to take the next three events and take a three point lead, 20-17. With Joe Armon finishing ahead of the Soph's Joe Corcoran, and John Rumbarger and Emil DeJesus taking third and fourth place for them, the underclassmen won the 100 yard dash to pull even with their tormentors.

Then, the team of Kassiols and Canna taking first in the Wheel Barrel race and another class team of Waterhouse and Suton coming in third gave the underdogs the lead.

Sophs Win Egg Toss

It was Joe Armon paving the way again to capture the fifty yard dash. Sophomore Joe Corcoran placed second, Freshman Pete Kievit was third, and Al Donheisier came in fourth. The egg toss was next, and the upperclassers picked up a fast ten points as they outclassed the valiant youngsters. The following three legged race was the high spot of the day for the Frosh, as they swept all three first places to strengthen their lead. Jim McNaney and Tom Lynch lead the way in this rout.

However, Frosh spirits were to be dimmed, for now it was the Soph's turn to take three in a row. Three points were cut off the lead as Stark and Ratchford ran to a victory in the 220, finishing first and third repectively. Paquano took second position for the losers. Then, Bill Dunn outpassed all Freshman entires in the football throwing contest to cut the lead to two points, 51-49. Bill Nichols won the football kick and the Sophs led 59-56.

Football Game Decides Victors

The underclassmen weren't dead yet. The relay team of Rumbarger, Ryan, DeJesus, and McGrath took the 440. That left it up to the football game, with the Frosh leading 66-64. Spectators were treated to a scoreless first half, but it was evident that the Freshman club was having trouble.

In the third period the Sophs exploded with a fine passing attack and great defense to rack up a TD and safety for nine points. The Frosh fought back in the final frame and were on their enemy's goal line as the final gun sounded. But that was it, the Sophomores took the game and MUFF day, and the Frosh must wear Regs until Thanksgiving.

FROSH FOOTBALL—

Last Saturday, the game between Villanova's Freshman football team and West Chester State was postponed. Reasons for postponement of the game were because of the inclement weather. It was supposed to have been played in Lancaster, Pa. To date, the Frosh team has a 2-0 record, with victories over Wyoming Seminary (42-0) and Princeton's Freshman team (27-7).

IRS-DPM GOLF RESULTS

Delta Pi Mu Fraternity took the measure of the International Relations Society on the Main Line golf course last week, on the strength of a sparkling 69 by the frat's Ben Klemanowicz.

Playing on fast greens, Klemanowicz edged out IRS president Phil Taddeo, who finished with a 70.

The match was played with handicap, with the two poorest holes excluded from each entry's final tally.

Third place was taken by Pete Quinn of IRS, netting 73. Following were Marty Roache, DPM, 74; Bill Reich, DPM, 75; Frank Adams, IRS, 76; and Bert Gratz, IRS, with a 77.

Navy Enters Four Teams In 'Spirited' Intramural Loop

The addition of a new league marked the second week's activity in the intramural football league. Villanova's Naval ROTC unit introduced four new teams into the competition, setting a new high for entries, which now total 57 for the present season. All three of the new teams—Able, Baker and Charlie Companies — have already played at least one game.

Results of last week's games follow:

"ABLE" COMPANY WINS, 12-6

This week in the Navy League, Able Co. downed Baker Co. 12-6 in a game featuring a fine passing attack by both sides. Able tallied the only score in the first half on a thirty yard pass play from Gene Fogarty to Don Alton. In the second half Baker Co.'s Bob McCaffery intercepted a pass and sprinted thirty yards for the tying points. However, a seventy yard pass-run play from Harry Cook to Joe Armon gave Able the game 12-6 in the final period.

In the first game of the Navy football League Charlie Co. defeated the Drill Team 6-0. In the closing seconds Dick Peer passed to Hank Nichols in the end zone for the only score of the game. Earlier in the game Nichols had hit consistently on the long passes.

Norm Peer was outstanding on defense for the winners while Jay O'Neill and Leo Rudegair were successful for the Drill Team.

Last Thursday, the Redskins of the Mendel League decisively defeated the Bayshore A. C. football team, by a 14-0 score. Led by the adept quarterbacking of slight Karl Smith, the Redskins came to life after a scorcless first half, and on two fine passing plays, tallied the only scores of the game.

One of the passing plays, which worked in reverse, saw John McHale intercept a Bayshore pass on his own twenty, and manuever across the goal line for the initial score. Smith threw to Mike Klesius for the point.

A short while later, with the ball in the Redskins possession, Smith sent Ted Coogan as a flanker to the lefft. When the play was in motion, Smith unlimbered a long 35 yd. aerial which Coogan snared on his own 15 yd. line to score successfully. Again a Smith to Klesius pass neted the Skins the extra point.

Key blockin by the rotund Redskin line was an important factor in the outcome of the contest. Ted Coogan, Jim Curvey, and Stan P. Wilson were the stalwarts on the forward wall who performed so competently.

Redskins	0	0	0	14	—14

A series of costly fumbles, interceptions, and penalties cost the previously undefeated Saints of the early Mendel League a lot of trouble, and their first defeat of the season. The tide-turning opposition was the Opposers, who now have a 2-1 slate.

Drawing first blood in this hotly fought battle were the Saints, when speedy Ralph DeCicco snared a pass from halfback Dick Montgomery on his own ten yard line, and ran unmolested to the goal line. The attempt at the conversion was no good, and the Saints led, 6-0 when the halftime ended.

The Opposers took command of the game in the second stanza ,however, when a Montgomerypass was intercepted on his own goal line by Bob Dealy, and run back to the thirty. That opened the flood gates for two more touchdowns, both by the Opposers, who won the game 13-6.

Whatever may be said of Ernest Hemingway, he is a great symbol of our time. His fascination for young people is undeniable, for he appeals to their budding individuality with a simple message:

If the cause is good and you believe in it, then fight for it and don't complain about your problems. Don't be a bother to anyone. Drink deeply, love deeply, but don't be an emotional phony. Do your best and help one another along.

In Hemingway's first great success, "The Sun Also Rises," Jake, the mutilated ex-soldier says, "I don't wan't to know what it's all about, I just want to find out how to live in it. Perhaps by finding out how to live in it you find out what's it's all about."

When ever I think of Hemingway and of the many words that have been written on his approach to life, I think of that comment by one of his greatest characters.

Hemingway speaks a great deal of luck. He mentioned it frequently during our interview with him. Perhaps this reflects a belief that chance and circumstance rule a man's life more than the man himself, but I think not. I think that perhaps he uses the word to symbolize courage within a man, for chance and circumstance may buffet a man without ruling him or defeating him, and this is the type of story that Hemingway writes so well.

As we walked down the steps and away from the house, Ernest Hemingway called out in the silence. He said simply, "Good luck to both of you." Two hours had passed since our nervous approach to the house.

The wars and revolutions, exploding bombs, crashing airplanes, bloody and beauteous bullfights, and hard drinking Parisian days were far removed from the quiet Cuban countryside, but neither Jack nor I was forgetting what a great amount of living lay behind this man and what hard cold beauty has flowed from his pen.

Benjamin Franklin Hotel officials told Hooker that 500 couples could be accommodated in the hotel's ballroom.

After the juniors and their dates have dined, tables will be cleared away for dancing, said Hooker.

The steering committee vote on the question was unanimous, although some members indicated they would have preferred Palumbo's.

Rev. Dante Girolami, O.S.A., class moderator, said he went along with class president Jack Decker and Hooker in leaning toward the Ben Franklin.

Father Girolami said he considered the Franklin a "classier place". He said juniors and their dates should have a better time because there will be more room for dancing.

At Palumbo's last year, according to the moderator: there was not as much room for dancing, the class was divided into two rooms for dinner and the group had to spend most of the evening talking "in their own little group".

Palumbo's last year arranged a floor show for the juniors. This was the main reason, apparently, that some members of the steering committee favored going back to the Philadelphia night spot. There will be no type of floor show at the Franklin, but Father Girolami said the juniors should have a better time since they could do more dancing.

The dinner dance site was the only matter decided by the steering committee Thursday. Another meeting was scheduled for Monday.

A report on some bands being considered for the Junior Prom, the night before the dinner dance, was made.

The committee was given a list of 11 bands, from which five were picked. The class will vote on the band, according to Decker.

The five bands being considered, in order of preference voted by the steering committee: Russ Morgan, Richard Maltby, the Commanders, Art Mooney and Charlie Spivak. Other bands are being considered, Decker said.

All 11 bands, according to Tom Curran, Band Committee Chairman, were listed in the $1,000-$1,250 category by a Philadelphia music agent.

No band commitments can be made before Jan. 1, Curran quoted the agent as saying.

During the meeting Decker appointed Dick McEntee, a chemical engineer from Franklin, N. J., to handle newspaper publicity for the class.

Simple Setting

It is true that the set is by no means complex; all that is required is the judge advocate s bench and the witness stand. However, they are both quite intricate.

The judges bench, which will be in stage left, is approximately 4 feet, 6 inches high and 14 feet long and has a slight pitch at about a 15 degree angle from the center. The front is constructed to appear pannelled. This will serve the judge advocate and his staff of six.

The witness stand, placed in stage center, is round with one step. It is made with curved plywood supported by a series of curved beams.

To round out the picture, on stage right, front and back, are desks, the latter for the defense Counsel and the former for the prosecution. There are no rear or wall sets.

A black curtain is hung and creates a beautiful and intriguing scene.

Militarily Perfect

Careful attention has been given to the set so it will be militarily perfect. This is to be expected, for Father Krupa, Belle Masque moderator is once again doing his job of set designing.

Although hampered by band practice, dance decorating, and various other distractions of the field house, the "Masques" have leased a garage in Garret Hill in which to practice.

The actors will only have a total of one month to get in shape for the opening date, which is Nov. 3. Consequently, they hold practice until quite late in the evening.

Chairmen Tom Curran and Jim Judge announced that posters and handbills will soon flood the campus.

Andy Iaccarino and John Walsh, ticket chairmen, say they expect a sellout crowd. Tickets will go on sale next week. They may be purchased from any member of Belle Masque, or in the Pie Shop.

B. Department Requirement

The IA program calls for a minimum of five electives of three-credits each. One elective must be taken in each of the following areas: cultural, social relations, and a technical field. The remaining two electives can be taken in any two of the above-mentoned areas. The student is relatively free to decide from what field or fields within each area he wishes to select his electives as well as the specific elective or elective within each field. Each student will be assigned a departmental adviser, and all electives must be approved by the adviser. The main purpose of such approval is to assure that the departmental requirement is fulfilled.

of the case method, problem situations and varied readings in many diverse fields is given opportunities: (1) to gain practice in using the basic knowledge that he learns; (2) to develop a company-wide viewpoint toward business problems and their resolutions; (3) to gain facility in coordinating general and specialized knowledge, and (4) to evaluate the social, cultural and ethical implications of alternative business policies.

Consequently ,through the use of certain instructional techniques, the student is required to do the same thing in class which he, as a professional man and citizen, will be expected to do later on in the world.

Hence, classes assume a professional atmosphere, and every possible effort is made to teach the courses in such a manner as to stimulate independent thinking on the part of the student and to enable him to continue learning on his own.

Student Committee Requests Senior Privileges

Cars, Lounge In Dougherty Big Issues

Requests for the establishment of senior privileges will highlight the first meeting of the newly-formed President's Committee for Students tomorrow at 3:30 in the Mendel Hall conference chamber.

Senior Dick Peer, serving on the committee as chairman of the Student Council, and junior Jack O'Rourke, and seniors Henry Whelan and Harry Nash, the three appointees to the group, will meet with Rev. James A. Donnellon, O.S.A., University President. Rev. George McLaughlin, O.S.A., Dean of Student Activities, will be present at the meeting in an advisory capacity.

The committee, formed last May to replace the Student-Faculty group, will present the following recommendations to Father Donnellon for consideration:

1. A formal opening dinner for members of the Class of 1956 and Student Council representatives in the dining hall of Dougherty Hall the night prior to the regular opening of the facility to the student body.

2. The exclusive use of the small center lounge in Dougherty Hall for seniors and their

Cotillion, Richmond Battle, Parties Are Top Attractions

Villanova's one and only dance-football weekend of the year bursts open Friday night when the Sophomore Cotillion takes over the Field House and blows itself out with informal celebrations after the Villanova University of Richmond game Saturday afternoon in Villanova Stadium.

The Cotillion, which is informal and open to all students, will feature the music of Harry Yeakel and his orchestra—who played at the affair last year.

Military Theme

The setting for the 9 'til 1 dance will be military, but the decorations committee insists that details of the theme will be kept secret.

Cotillion chairman, Mike Rafferty expects the crowd to exceed the record set by last year's dance, when some 800 couples jammed into the Field House.

Tickets, priced at $2.50 per couple, are available in the Pie Shoppe or from about 30 vendors patrolling the campus.

Outdoor Dancing(?)

A novel angle to the dance has been announced by the dance committee — dancing under strings of lights on the Belle Air parking lot, weather permitting.

During the first intermission, about 10 o'clock, the Mainliners will perform. The second inter-

Last minute touches and those little added attractions that impart the quality to a Belle Masque production are the concern of the cast, stage crew, and business staff of Belle Masque as their fall production of the "Caine Court Martial" comes within a week of its opening date, November 3.

Authenticity Guaranteed

Much credit for the authenticity of the production goes to Lieutenant (j.g.) James Wilson, freshman Naval Science instructor, who has devoted his time and effort to see that all details of the show are in accordance with Naval regulations.

Tickets Sold Soon

John Walsh and Andy Iaccarino, ticket co-chairmen, announced that tickets will go on sale in the Pie Shoppe beginning this coming Monday and may be purchased from any member of Belle Masque. The price for college students and their dates is $1. General admission is $1.25.

The important job of costuming the "Caine" actors has been undertaken by Stan McGeehan, Arts junior.

Horan Replaces Guerrisi as Prom Chairman

Jerry Guerrisi, newly elected president of the senior class, has announced two changes in the Class of '56 administration resulting from his switch to the top position.

Mike Horan, a Liberal Arts student from Manhasset, L. I., has been appointed to the post of senior prom chairman, the job Guerrisi originally held. Horan was a major cog in the class' junior year plans, carrying out the orphans' projects along with Bernie Steinfelt and Don Alton.

Replacing Guerrisi on the class steering committee will be Matt Heim, an English major and day hop from Wayne. Heim has contributed in committeeman capacities several times in the past.

Weekend Spirit . . . .

Overlooking the results of the football game, only one thing could be said about last weekend.

It was remarkable.

First of all, and most important, the spirit was there. The spirit was all-pervading, and the spirit was spontaneous.

This was true as a result of several factors.

Pete Quinn and his Spirit Committee did a truly outstanding job in drumming up one of the most infectious and inspiring pep rallies ever held at Villanova. It was probably the biggest, too.

Secondly, there were the Basca Award hall chairmen, who, working against the wages of the bad weather Friday night, put up some very good displays and showed very encouraging competitive spirit in doing so. Simpson Hall's Joe Ezerski and his boys are to be congratulated for their winning effort. Sullivan and Delurey also did themselves proud.

Dayhop John Henry and his cohorts from off-campus did a good job in decorating the front of the Pie Shoppe; they might have done even better had more of their fellows shown comparable interest.

The spirit of the student body as a whole was the most heartening factor. As one hall counsellor put it the other night: "You watch this place this weekend (last), it'll be humming. You'll see it in the carefree attitudes, the anticipations expressed in the bull sessions, the singing in the showers, the antics in the chow hall. There's nothing like a home football game, with all the added attractions on the side, to turn a campus on its ear. It's the best thing that could happen to this school."

How right he was. True, the disappointing showing of the football club detracted from the weekend, but the good effects—of the campus atmosphere, of the dating and partying plans, of the visting parents and friends—were all very obviously felt.

It all starts again this weekend, with a big dance thrown in to boot. The weekend still has the same potentialities as the one just past: the color, the girls, the friends, the classic fall weather (one hopes), the football pageantry, the picnics, the parties, the enthusiasm—everything that makes college life the fifth estate that it truly is.

Not only that, but there's another crack at that win column coming up.

For about 470 of us, it's the third and last weekend of its kind.

Let's make use of it.

Weekly Discussion Column:

Now See Here, Mr. Quinn: An Engineer and Marketing Major Present a Rebuttal

By Jack Gerrard, Ch.E., '56

In the October 12 issue of the VILLANOVAN, there appeared an article entitled "An Arts Man Probes Engineering Question", created by a close personal friend, Pete Quinn. In this article appeared this statement: "It don't make sense to me why engineers should have to study history, English and stuff like that," attributed to a sophomore who, one presumes, is now busily repeating English 101.

Following this grammatical faux pax were the results of "informal discussions" (confined to sophomore engineers) which indicated that said engineers thought "Liberal Arts education has no place in the factual science of engineering".

It is obvious that the author, though well-intentioned, has probed neither very extensively nor very comprehensively into the problem whence he speaks. In their second year, many engineers are lost in the "glory" of their academic position, and since the Arts courses they encounter appear in the form of fodder as electives, they little realize the importance of these courses.

As is indicated in Pete's discourse, the senior and graduate engineers are in great disagreement with the sophomores on this point. Contrary to the article in question, the vast majority of frosh and sophomores queried by this writer retorted thusly: "Of course, we need Arts courses." Granted, some replied "What do we need them for?" but this is analogous to many Arts students' opinion that "all engineering courses are for narrow-minded queers".

Another statement that left itself wide open to question was "the trend in our business world shows a definite leaning toward the hiring of the Arts student". Certainly, the author has placed himself on a very wobbly conjectual limb with such a statement. What he must mean is that the business world is rather dissatisfied with the schools of the nation that are producing business majors who are strictly business men, and engineers who are strictly engineers. They seek a combination of qualities in the well-rounded, intelligent, clear-thinking, "sharp" young man who is essential to the country's welfare.

This facility, particularly in literary fields, can be gained only through the Arts courses. At great expenditure of time and energy, one can gain basic familiarity with English, philosophy, logic, et al., without the standard courses. However, for a firm basis of deep comprehension, the formal education is essential.

The few pseudo-intellectual members of our Arts school, between quotations of Lovelace and other such exhibitions of literary pedantry, should not vent their wrath on the engineer for his lack of the intangible "well-rounded" quality. Rather, they should bring themselves to realize the plight of our professors in arranging a four-year course which can give us sufficient technical knowledge to hold our own in industry.

At present, our faculty is more than fulfilling this requirement. Next, they must attempt to instill us with that indefinable something that is the "Arts Intellect" and which in the future will enable us to converse confidently in the realism of Chekov, the impact of the Renaissance, and the Romantic moderation of Tennyson.

It must be realized, however, that our professors must first turn out engineers.

Secondly, they must turn out engineers who are not alienated by discussions in non-technical fields.

• • • • • • •

By Bob Cassidy, Marketing, '56

A recent article in the VILLANOVAN on the engineer's need for liberal arts training has evoked some thought in this writer's mind concerning the value of liberal arts to the ordinary businessman. Our columnist of two weeks ago suggested that a liberal arts education instills an impressive ability in the business executive. During social and business engagements the individual versed in humanistic studies would thus be able to knowingly and fluently discuss topics beyond the narrow field of his occupation. This is a limited view.

Decisions and Economics

A businessman's success lies in the ability to make the proper decision. He must be able to determine the various alternatives of a particular situation, analyze them, and choose that alternative which will grant maximum benefit. A recent poll by Fortune magazine reports that most executives claim their decisive abilities are a product of intuition and experience. No one should know better than they.

What many businessmen fail to realize is that there is a study which, in its own way, substitutes for many phases of experience. It is the science of alternatives and choice; it is the science of modern economics.

The layman's concept of economics has something to do with saving money. Fundamentally, this definition is correct. Although circuitous, it intrinsically implies choice, for the conversation of money requires a decision between two or more known alternatives. However, a study of modern economics affords the student more than a look into practical utility. It teaches him that there are many unknown alternatives in the particular situation, enables him to determine what some of them are (for the human mind is not always capable of grasping the whole of a complex situation),

Letters To.... ....The Editor

Is Alumni Also to Blame for Lethargy?

I am writing this letter hoping that your studies permit you time to read letters from indignant alumni. Having graduated from Villanova in June 1954, I have witnessed some of the football fortunes of the Wildcats.

Jim Leaming's article in the September 24 Saturday Evening Post seemed more of an apology for Villanova football and for the school itself. Remembering the 1952 season, especially the Parris Island game, the 1953 Fordham game and a great Syracuse upset, the Wildcat spirit must certainly have died.

From correspondence with a few other graduates, I find that others agree that being ranked eighteenth in won-lost percentages over the last 25 years coupled with great basketball teams rank us second to none as far as athletics are concerned.

If the student body is lax with regard to spirit, some blame must rest with the alumni. More cooperation from the graduates in the Philadelphia area might have lessened the bad publicity that "Bud" Dudley's 'grocery store" plan envoked.

Bringing fans to the Villanova games was the important result and this graduate commends Mr. Dudley highly.

On reading the letter over, I can see the many points left out. However, I feel the idea that a Villanova man, whether graduate or student, should be proud of his college and his education.

. . . . . At last weeks Basca Award pep rally, which might be ranked among the greatest emotional upheavals the campus has ever witnessed. Spirit simply flowed until it was rudely dampened by a Wolfpack that just ate up an extremely tame Wildcat. As far as this week's "pep" rally is concerned . . . you had better bring your own fire engine.

. . . . . At the Navy Building today, I see blood all over the place. The campus blood letting contest is on and whoever gives the most gets a free subscription to the Marine Corps Gazette. The corpulent corporal has already given three and a half gallons and looks like a good bet to win. Seriously, though, let's all give a mere pint.

and assists him in choosing among them with a greater awareness of their various implications.

Decisions and Liberal Arts

Liberal arts training as a necessity for the businessman is now being realized by large industries. Last year, the Bell Telephone Company of Pennsylvania, cooperating with the University of Pennsylvania, established the Institute of Humanistic Studies for Executives. Briefly stated, its objective was to aid its trainees in better understanding of the persons and the world about them. At this experimental school seventeen promising executives of the Bell System were subjected to ten months of intensive study in the liberal arts. The curriculum consisted of courses in systematic logic, music, art, literature, city planning, political science, international relations, and a popular American Civilization course. The students were required to give lectures on the classics, to attend lectures by Henry S. Commager, Jacques Lipchitz, and other renowned scholars.

After the course was over, a penetrating analysis revealed that the objectives were met. The seventeen executives felt that they now had a broader view of life, an outlook not limited by the technicalities of their trade.

More important, the course fired the students with renewed and greater self-confidence. They were now surer that their professional decisions were the right ones; and they felt that the humanities' course enabled them to better express in their own minds the alternatives in the business situation.

SYNTHESIS

If the ability to make the proper decision is of paramount importance to the businessman, how much more effective would the liberal arts course be if it were complemented by that discipline which conditions the mind for proper decision-making, the science of modern economics.

Bill Jones, a junior English major, has been named feature editor of the VILLANOVAN, replacing sophomore Clem Birch.

Editor Harry Nash announced Jones' appointment after Birch resigned "because of the press of his studies."

Jones is a graduate of St. Augustine High School in Brooklyn.

Social, Spiritual Life Here Seen Better:

A Weekend Observation of Indiana: Friendly, Casual, Spirit Lacking

Ed. Note: Senior Bruce Martin and a group of fellow Villanovans traveled out to Bloomington, Indiana for the Wildcats' clash with the Big Ten club week before last. Here is an account of the author's observations of campus life at the Indiana institution.

by Bruce Martin

Last weekend, Villanova played its first game in the 'Big Ten', the opponent being Indiana University. Eight of the Villanova faithful made the long and monotonous 700-mile-plus trip out to Bloomington, Indiana to root for victory. The results of the game are known but there is another side of the story that not too many Villanovans have any understanding of—what life at a large non-sectarian school is like.

For two of the group this was the second look at a 'Big Ten' school but their first under actual conditions, since the other occasion was in summer school when the normal or typical student body was not present.

Certain Features

There were certain features that anyone can learn even without a trip to the campus; namely: what the campus is like or how the school is rated scholastically, but there are other features that only a weekend could bring to light.

Bruce Martin

The overall campus of Indiana is more or less what all of us expected considering that it is a state university with a famous reputation. Compared to Villanova it was about four times as large as our campus and possesses many features that are only dreams of our trustees. For example, the student union is a structure at least twice the size of ours which has just about everything a person could dream of—hotel rooms for guests, restaurant, cafeteria, many lounges, and several recreation rooms. Naturally, there are dormitories, each with its own dining facilities, classroom buildings, and parking lots for resident student cars.

30 Frats

But this in only the exterior; the main life of the school, as it is in all universities of this type, is in the fraternities, of which there are approximately thirty. The houses themselves are all beautiful, about four times the size of a normal house, on the style of some of these large old mansions here on the Main Line.

Strictly Opinion

By DON ALTON

Some of us waited three years for last Saturday's home game . . . the real homey, campus type, and now the troops are at the wailing wall again. The latest cry is for the return to the unfriendly, vast, and reasonable bowl atmosphere. It seems that some of the Villanovans felt the three dollars leaving the wallet for that beautiful, intelligent creature they escorted . . . naturally the imported talent appeared for the 'big' weekend. May we remind these Wildcats that those teams don't run on muscle alone. Expenses are pretty steep, and Villanova frowns upon red ink used outside of marking pencils. When we get the new stadium, promised in the building plan, Villanovans will be able to treat their dates to a real home game, and be able to afford the hot dogs and cold drinks.

People who were living under borrowed blankets in Sullivan began to look for a secondary cover during this last week. This was reason enough to know that winter is on its way . . . but the more pleasing signs of winter are appearing. Those fireplaces at Chestnut Hill are being stoked for the kindler season . . . seems the female type proms are in the air.

The post office lines were similar to those of the chow hall, and it was impossible to get near a telephone in the dorms . . . the neighborly dates were tucked in the shadows with care . . . for Villanovans knew that the real one would soon be there, and so another ancient tradition is maintained.

Americans are a proud lot of people who will not hesitate to sound off about the advantages of these United States, but it has been observed that they tend to miss the boat when they have an opportunity to show that they are Americans. Every Tuesday afternoon in the fall the notes of our national anthem float over the lazy Villanova campus. How many men of this university show the respect that is due to the flag for which they will soon have to don a uniform? One young lady had to take it upon herself to boot a few of our citizens to their feet last week. We can all think over our past reactions to this weekly event.

A new one for that book of campus classics. Addressed to a new resident of Sullivan, "Hi, are you living in one of the recreation rooms this year?" Answer—"No, the linen closet." And it really happened!

Every year we hear from a reliable source that many graduates of this university apply for a position in the F.B.I. This has been handed down from above, and the fact has been confirmed recently. Upon further inquiry, one will find that further qualifications call for a law degree and some experience with common convict type. We are proud to be among one of the leading sources of supply for the F.B.I.

There is talk in circulation concerning the senior gift. One fine idea appeared over the smoke and crumbs of the local eating club. Why not take the senior breakage fees . . . add this sum to the balance left in the class treasury, and start another first for the Class of '56. The idea is to establish an endowment for a scholarship fund for immediate members of the families of the Class of '56. This would be a competitive scholarship, and the funds would be invested wisely by the endowment committee. This would benefit the members of the class, the school, and insure a good caliber of future Villanovans.

This column will have to end. My roomie is carrying out his weekly ritual of dusting his books. I hate dust.

This Weekend at Hopkins:

Three A.I.E.E.-I.R.E. Men Attend Institute Meeting

Three representatives of Villanova's A.I.E.E.-I.R.E. group will attend a convention of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers this weekend at Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore. Jack Downing, chairman, George Ahearn, vice-chairman, and Professor John B. Clothier, moderator, will make the trip this Friday and Saturday.

The meeting is for student branch chairmen and counselors of the Second District of the A.I.E.E., and representatives of more than twenty Middle Atlantic colleges will attend the two day affair.

Discussions and conferences with the chairmen and counselors from the different schools are scheduled to spotlight the planning and activities of student branch organizations.

A banquet Friday night will highlight the convention.

Members of the faculty and the Naval staff have noticed incidents of complete disregard by the students strolling idly by the area in which the flag is being lowered and others refusing to stand.

It is certainly no hardship to the student to spare a moment once in a while for his country's flag.

A Dollar Paradise:

An Evening Spent With Mr. Ormandy

by Pete Scott

It might be Friday afternoon, Saturday evening, or Monday night. The time is unimportant since you recognize this haven because of the snake-line of chattering, eager enthusiasts, by an age-blackened, antiquated structure that sits aloof from tall, erect neighbors.

A Venerable Firetrap

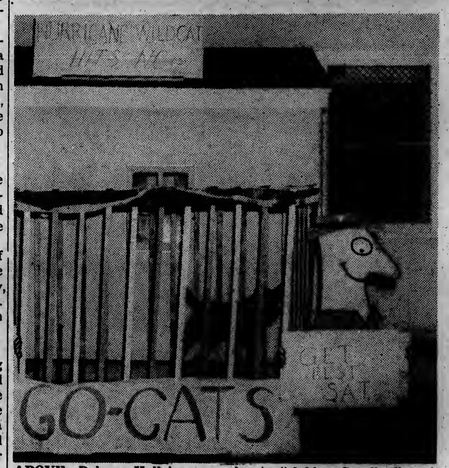
The line wriggles around the corner of Broad and Locust streets and slithers into a side entrance under a sign that reads: "Amphitheater, one dollar, general admission." This is the Academy of Music.

You enter, and begin the long trudge. Up and around slanted stairways you go through doors into a curved corridor.

Panting, you enter one of the entrances leading from the corridor.

Light shimmers from a massive chandelier hanging from a dome ceiling on which are faded frescoes. Your eyes are fixed on the two immense columns, figured with statues, that rise from either side of the stage to support the dome.

Lush Interior



Then the red plush seats, the gallerys, the boxes falling below, focus in the ruddy gold hues of the candelabra house lights.

From the hard wood seats of the amphitheater, the stage seems minute. A short, stumpy, bald man limps onto the stage. He bows and ascends the podium and begins to conduct.

Ormandy's Orchestra

Now the waiting, the long climb up the steps, the hard cramped seat, the dollar become worthwhile sacrifices. Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra are world renowned artists, and you share their artistry in "One Dollar Paradise".

BUSINESS WHIRL Ready By Early December: Keane

Layouts for the first issue of the BUSINESS WHIRL have already been drawn up, Editor Phil Keane announced last week.

The issue will contain articles by undergraduates discussing general trends in business, campus news and a special section on research information.

First issue will be ready for distribution by early December, according to Keane.

Moderators of the magazine are Mr. Frederick Burgess, Dr. Walter Klein, Mr. Patrick Dougherty and Mr. Jerome Fischer. Also giving a helping hand is Rev. John J. Vrana, O.S.A., director of the research center where the magazine is printed.

Keane indicated the issue should be "greatly" improved because of improvements in the research center, which contains a new press.

Sixty New Members Join Active Sanctuary Society

Approximately sixty new members turned out at the second meeting of the Sanctuary Society last week. Plans for the year were discussed as the first item on the agenda. Rev. Joseph A. Kemme, O.S.A., University Chaplain and moderator of the Society, welcomed the new members into the organization.

Father Kemme will start instructing the new members this week in the serving of the Mass.

The Sanctuary Society's regular meetings are held on the Tuesday preceding the First Friday of the month. Other meetings are held periodically during the year.

Bob McDonnell, president of the Society, expressed great pleasure at the number of new members and their apparent enthusiasm for the organization.

Seniors

By a 12-vote margin, Jerry Guerrisi was installed as president of the University's senior class last Thursday.

Sixty-two per cent of the class cast ballots in the election arranged to fill the vacancy caused by Frank Hartmann's resignation to enter the Augustinian Seminary.

Guerrisi, a C & F student from Lebanon, Pa., drew 108 votes. Bob Farley finished second with 96; Paul Porreca had 70 and Earl Warrington, 18.

Tom Mullen, class vice president, had been filling the vacancy until the election could be set up by the Student Council elections committee, headed by Bob Fredericks.

WALT GOULD'S BOYS PERFORM FOR THE STADIUM CROWD

Strictly Opinion

By DON ALTON

Some of us waited three years for last Saturday's home game . . . the real homey, campus type, and now the troops are at the wailing wall again. The latest cry is for the return to the unfriendly, vast, and reasonable bowl atmosphere. It seems that some of the Villanovans felt the three dollars leaving the wallet for that beautiful, intelligent creature they escorted . . . naturally the imported talent appeared for the 'big' weekend. May we remind these Wildcats that those teams don't run on muscle alone. Expenses are pretty steep, and Villanova frowns upon red ink used outside of marking pencils. When we get the new stadium, promised in the building plan, Villanovans will be able to treat their dates to a real home game, and be able to afford the hot dogs and cold drinks.

People who were living under borrowed blankets in Sullivan began to look for a secondary cover during this last week. This was reason enough to know that winter is on its way . . . but the more pleasing signs of winter are appearing. Those fireplaces at Chestnut Hill are being stoked for the kindler season . . . seems the female type proms are in the air.

The post office lines were similar to those of the chow hall, and it was impossible to get near a telephone in the dorms . . . the neighborly dates were tucked in the shadows with care . . . for Villanovans knew that the real one would soon be there, and so another ancient tradition is maintained.

Americans are a proud lot of people who will not hesitate to sound off about the advantages of these United States, but it has been observed that they tend to miss the boat when they have an opportunity to show that they are Americans. Every Tuesday afternoon in the fall the notes of our national anthem float over the lazy Villanova campus. How many men of this university show the respect that is due to the flag for which they will soon have to don a uniform? One young lady had to take it upon herself to boot a few of our citizens to their feet last week. We can all think over our past reactions to this weekly event.

A new one for that book of campus classics. Addressed to a new resident of Sullivan, "Hi, are you living in one of the recreation rooms this year?" Answer—"No, the linen closet." And it really happened!

Every year we hear from a reliable source that many graduates of this university apply for a position in the F.B.I. This has been handed down from above, and the fact has been confirmed recently. Upon further inquiry, one will find that further qualifications call for a law degree and some experience with common convict type. We are proud to be among one of the leading sources of supply for the F.B.I.

There is talk in circulation concerning the senior gift. One fine idea appeared over the smoke and crumbs of the local eating club. Why not take the senior breakage fees . . . add this sum to the balance left in the class treasury, and start another first for the Class of '56. The idea is to establish an endowment for a scholarship fund for immediate members of the families of the Class of '56. This would be a competitive scholarship, and the funds would be invested wisely by the endowment committee. This would benefit the members of the class, the school, and insure a good caliber of future Villanovans.

This column will have to end. My roomie is carrying out his weekly ritual of dusting his books. I hate dust.

This Weekend at Hopkins:

Three A.I.E.E.-I.R.E. Men Attend Institute Meeting

Three representatives of Villanova's A.I.E.E.-I.R.E. group will attend a convention of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers this weekend at Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore. Jack Downing, chairman, George Ahearn, vice-chairman, and Professor John B. Clothier, moderator, will make the trip this Friday and Saturday.

The meeting is for student branch chairmen and counselors of the Second District of the A.I.E.E., and representatives of more than twenty Middle Atlantic colleges will attend the two day affair.

Discussions and conferences with the chairmen and counselors from the different schools are scheduled to spotlight the planning and activities of student branch organizations.

A banquet Friday night will highlight the convention.

Members of the faculty and the Naval staff have noticed incidents of complete disregard by the students strolling idly by the area in which the flag is being lowered and others refusing to stand.

It is certainly no hardship to the student to spare a moment once in a while for his country's flag.

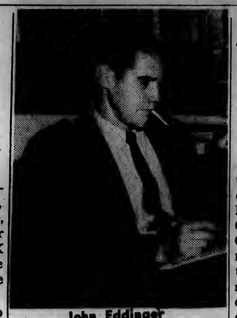
LYNX Plans Announced; Out Nov. 21

Jack Eddinger and Joe Barret, co-editors of the LYNX, Villanova's literary magazine, announced this week plans for the all new LYNX. The LYNX of 1955 will mark a considerable change from the LYNX of the past.

Its size will be enlarged to 9" by 6" in order to accommodate its many new features. This new LYNX will contain, besides its short stories, poems and essays, book reviews, features on art and music and other branches of culture.

The LYNX, contrary to popular opinion, is not a magazine written exclusively by and for English majors. It is a well rounded publication for the enjoyment of students in all branches of study.

Call for Material



The LYNX needs you, the students, to supply its material. It is open to any and all students who wish to contribute articles in the literary line. The call is also out for campus artists. A cover has not yet been chosen for 1955's new LYNX and anyone who can draw is welcome to submit his or her creation for a cover design. The LYNX staff wishes to choose from as many designs as possible.

Nov. 1: Deadline

The deadline is extremely near. All work must be submitted on or before Tuesday, Nov. 1. It may be given to either Jack Eddinger or Joe Barrett, or dropped off at the English office in the basement of Austin Hall or the LYNX office in Dougherty Hall.

This Fall there will be no short story contest. But there will be one held in the Spring. So if you cannot make the Nov. 1 deadline, write a short story for the Spring LYNX. You may win some ever welcome money.

The Fall edition of the new 1955 LYNX will be available on campus about Monday, Nov. 21. You can take one home for Thanksgiving.

"I Doubt It" One of WVIL's Top Productions

There seems to be little doubt that "I Doubt It", a panel show on WVIL, is one of the most popular offerings of the campus station.

The show is the idea of Ed Shea, probably the most professional broadcaster at the station. Ed conceived the idea three years ago to bolster the lagging production department. He has brought it around to the degree where today it is such a permanent fixture that if discontinued, it would be sorely missed by all WVIL listeners.

Utilizing the experience he attains every summer by working at commercial stations, Ed has put the show on a completely professional basis. As moderator, he conducts the panel composed of three young ladies from Rosemont and three Villanovans who compete against each other as teams.

The team competition is based upon knowledge of current events, and the team compiling the most points at the end of the show wins. Although Rosemont has recently shown some improvement, Villanova has continued to prove far superior in competition.

Ed stated that anyone wishing to appear as a panelist should contact him for an interview.

A.S.M.E. Men Treated to SAE Fete

Twelve student members of the A.S.M.E. were dinner guests of the Society of Automotive Engineers, Wednesday evening, October 12, at the Engineers Club in Philadelphia. Before dinner, the group congregated in the men's bar, where internal stresses were filled, and then empty cocktail glasses were discussed. Dinner of roast beef was tastefully served in the Banquet room, followed by movies of the Mexican Road Race presented by the Ford Motor Co. It was felt that the question of coctail glass stresses needed further investigation, so samples were procured for this purpose at Villanova.

Another group of student A.S.M.E. members made a field trip to Schmidt's Brewery in Philadelphia, Wednesday, October 19. A company representative conducted the tour and explained the entire brewing process. After the tour, refreshments were served at the company bar.

Willy Meyer announced that the A.S.M.E. football team will play the A.I.E.E. this afternoon.

Labor Relations Expert Speaker At IRC Meeting

Mr. William Weinberg, a graduate of New Jersey State Teachers College, and presently affiliated with that state's Board of Mediation, will address the Industrial Relations Club tonight during a meeting beginning at 7:30.

The meeting is set for Room 207 C & F.

Weinberg's subject will be "Mediation and the Maturity of Labor Relations".

Weinberg received his Masters from Temple University, and is now working for a Ph.D. at Penn. He has taught at Temple, Rider College, and the Institute of Management and Labor Relations at Rutgers.

A.S.M.E Officers Attend Meeting Of Nat'l Society

Today the American Society of Civil Engineers conference of Metropolitan Student Chapters convenes at the Statler Hotel in New York City. The officers of the Villanova chapter will attend.

Charlie Catania, Dick Gerhard, Bill Barton, and Dick Mason have taken this opportunity to witness a part of the three day convention annually given by the A.S.C.E.

At a recent meeting of the A.S.C.E. several topics were discussed. A Sophomore representative was suggested, and a show of hands found no dissentors. This election will be held at a later date.

Gene Anderer and Lou O'Brien, co-chairmen of the program committee, are arranging for a speaker to feature the meeting, to be held next Monday.

Also on the fire is a student field trip. The most probable locations being considered are: Sparrow's Point, near Baltimore, and the Stroudsberg area which was so devastating'y struck by the effects of Hurricane Diane. The time and place for the trip will be announced at Monday's meeting.

Belle Air Installs New Ad System

The business staff of the Belle Air Yearbook, under the direc- of its manager, Tom McInerney, has announced that the system of ads formerly used by the Belle Air will be discontinued. A new system has been devised by Rev. Daniel P. Falvey, O.S.A. the Cooke Publishing Company, and McInerney. Father Falvey is a co-moderator of the yearbook.

In the past the ads were printed on a full, half or quarter page. This resulted in a needless loss of money for the Belle Air. This year's policy will be considerly more advantageous. This year three different donations have been devised.

Sponsor $100.00
Patron $50.00
Donation $25.00

Listed Together

All sponsors will be listed together on one page with their business or home address. The purpose of the ad is not primarily for advertising, since advertising advantages in a yearbook are small, but to help the Belle Air financially. The ad therefor will serve a twofold duty; it will bolster the prestige of the sponsor and aid the yearbook. The same situation holds for the patrons, who will have a page for themselves and likewise for the donators.

The 20 per cent commission for new ads and 10 per cent commission for old ads will continue.

Students holding ad contract blanks are asked to disregard them and contact Tom McInerney for new ones.

The financial goal for the 1956 Belle Air is $3,000. It is up to the students to pitch in and attain this mark.

Seniors, NOTE:

If the following seniors want their pictures to appear in the senior section of the 1955 BELLE AIR, it is imperative for them to have their portraits made before Nov. 15.

Bob Cassidy, feature editor of the yearbook, reports these seniors have not had their portraits taken:

Master Sargeant John E. Waryha, assistant Marine instructor, speaking in his capacity as coach and moderator of the Villanova rifle team, called for any Villanovans with previous experience in team shooting with a rifle to present themselves for a tryout for the team.

Everyone Welcome

Anyone without previous experience is welcome to try out although nothing can be promised in the way of making the team. Although primarily interested in the NROTC unit and University teams, Sargeant Waryha and members of the team will aid anyone who shows sufficient interest and sufficient promise in the handling of a rifle.

ENGINEER Nov. 5

The VILLANOVA ENGINEER will put in its first appearance of the semester Nov. 5, Editor Jake Clancy announced at a staff meeting last week.

Clancy said the deadline for students writing articles for the December issue is Nov. 15.

Students interested in writing articles for the ENGINEER may get information from Clancy (319 Sullivan) or Len Bellanca (105 Sullivan).

CORRECTION

The VILLANOVAN would like to correct a mistake printed last week. In the story concerning the scholarship committee, it was reported that the committee was establihed to aid high school students in gaining scholarships to Villanova.

Actually, the committee was formed to assist Villanova students in winning grants and scholarships to graduate schools.

.....Fraternity Row.....

DPM Enjoys Speech By Moderator

A talk on "The Role of a Husband" and election of two officers marked Wednesday's meeting of Delta Pi Mu fraternity, termed one of the "best" sessions in the fraternity's history.

Bruce Martin was elected vice president without opposition, and Joe Jackson was voted Student Council representative.

Addressing the group was Dr. John McEnerney, fraternity moderator and associate professor of classics. He was speaking as a married man of 14 years and the father of seven children.

Men Ignorant

"Most men marry but don't know what they are in for," said Dr. McEnerney in stressing man's universal ignorance of exactly what role he plays in the scheme of love, marriage and fatherhood in direct contrast to woman's instinctive knowledge and constant planning.

The speaker noted that the man's awareness of his true role only comes slowly after several years of married life.

Servant and Lord

The paradoxical role of lord and servant which is the position of the man, according to Dr. McEnerney, is shown by his family's complete dependence upon him as the provider of basic needs, the ultimate head in authority, the source of strength; At the same time the man is subject to their needs, especialy his wife's need for tenderness, understanding and help. In the performance of the husband's duties he has the great responsibility to God for his success or failure and particularly for his attitudes and examples which so greatly affect his wife and children.

Emulate St. Joseph

In conclusion Dr. McEnerney emphasized the fact that marriage lasts a lifetime and that love must be on a "peaceful", not "passionate" basis. He gave an example of St. Joseph as the model and proof of this true love.

The new elections were called to fill the vice-presidency, vacated by Phil Taddeo when he became president of the International Relations Society and the Student Council seat, held by Bob Ford until he was awarded a Council slot as alumni representative.

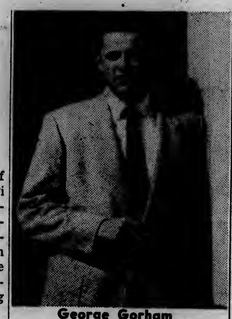
PKP Is Off To Energetic Beginnings

Under the leadership of George Gorham, Phi Kappa Pi has made a quick start on another year. At present the fraternity has the largest membership in its history. It has been a very active organiation in the past few years. PKP is the fraternity of the Engineering School.



Frosh Join Later

Freshmen engineers will have the opportunity to join the fraternity after the beginning of the second term.

As soon as the school year was underway, the fraternity gathered its forces and completed the preparations begun last May for the first event on its calendar. The result was the Owl Hop, which crowded approximately six hundred couples in to the field house. It was the most successful dance the fraternity has sponsored to date.

The fraternity brothers marched in the pre-game rally parade to the stadium last Saturday afternoon, escorting their newly chosen queen to her place of honor at the game. A lively chorus of cheerleaders, headed by a high stepping majorette, led the members in the march.

Villanova Singers Continue To Practice New Numbers

The Villanova Singers commenced work on their musical selections at Tuesday night's rehearsal. According to the director, Dean Reuschlein, the pitch of the spirit and the participation was raised to a new height. Included in the various new music, and what is shaping up to be prime numbers for the Glee Club, are "The Viking Song" and a rousing sea chanty, "Old Man Noah," from the Yale Glee Club Collection.

Bob Ford, the club president, has mentioned that during the month of November the Singers expect to visit a few of the neighboring girl's colleges. However, plans are still in the tentative stage.

In addition to the club's secular interests, they will perform once a week at the student's evening chapel exercises. The organization has been received very well in the past and it will endeavor to achieve that same quality of acceptance.

A new edition to this year's group is the accompanist, freshman Ken MacGillivray. Ken is by no means a novice at this type of activity. In high school he excelled as the Glee Club's accompanist; also, he has appeared in many public recitals.

fore beginning again, before renewing the same gift, the same sacrifice: to this you have pledged yourselves so largeheartedly . . . "

So these are the reasons for giving blood: Christian charity, self-sacrifice, the matter of school spirit for a student body project, and so on. Now the only thing to do is get to the Navy Building armory either today or tomorrow between the hours of 10 a.m. and 3:30 p.m., roll up your sleeve and give a little blood.

Today and tomorrow the Red Cross blood donor unit will be on campus, looking for an even greater response than that of last year, when almost 250 Villanovans contributed a pint of blood.

288 Goal

This year's goal is 288 pints. Anyone between the ages of 18 58 may contribute. Any student under 21 needs only a parent's signature or that of a priest. If 20% of the students give (which would be around 620), the Red Cross will extend automatic blood transfusion coverage for all Villanovans and their families for a year.

Law School Moot Court Team Sharpens Its Wits

The Law School's preparation for participation in the National Moot Court Competition got underway on last Thursday evening when a practice argument was held. Last year the Villanova team defeated the University of Pennsylvania Law School and the Temple University Law School. The Main Line barristers are hopeful of equal success this year.

Argue Trust Case

The case for the argument involved the legality under the Federal Anti-Trust laws of an oil refining company's acquisition of a chain of gasoline stations which had been selling the products of a competitor.

The judges were William T. Coleman, Jr., Christopher J. Branda, and John W. Fawcett. III, all of whom are associated with prominent Philadelphia law firms. Mr. Coleman, who was formerly a law clerk to Justice Frankfurter of the United States Supreme Court, served as Chief Justice.

Arguing as council for the appellant were James R. Garland (Loyala, '43), Thomas J. Brady (St. Peters, '53), and James A. Matthews (Duquesne, '52).

Opposing them were Arthur R. Flores (Siena '53), Joseph R. Glancey (Villanova '50), and Joseph R. McDonald (La Salle '50). The argument was open to the public.

Federal Service Exams Scheduled

The Civil Service Commission has announced that the new Federal Service Entrance Examination will be given to interested College Seniors on Saturday, December 10, 1955. The closing date for filing for the examination is November 18, 1955. All interested Seniors are instructed to contact Mr. Redfern in the Placement Office for details. This examination will replace the Junior Management Exam formerly given to those desiring to enter the Government service.

Hattrick will call the signals, while his backfield assistants will include Norm Peer, a Sophomore who will be at right half, Bob McCaffery, at the left half post, and Art Voute at fullback.

In the DPE line will be Captain Dave Burns, Burns McLindon, Hank Knoblock, Jerry Guerrisi, and Fred Onorato. The stout stalwarts for the DPM aggregation include Jim Bambury and Mike Horan, Jim Judge at center, and Tom Curran and Don Couig filling out the remainder of DPM's front wall.

Captains of the teams, Burns and Horan, expressed the wish that members of both fraternities turn out to cheer their squads to victory, in what proved to be the widest and wooliest gridiron contest in the intramural loop.

Law Students Schedule List Of Fall Events

Villanova's School of law, expanding its list of activities to keep pace with its increase enrollment, has a variety of events scheduled throughout the fall semester.

The school's inter-class football schedule got underway Monday, with the freshmen engaging the third-year men, who were champions last year.

The Halloween Dance, set for next Monday, is being sponsored by the Inter-Club Council, and will be held at the Conestoga Barn. The affair is closed to students and faculty of the Law School, and their dates and wives.

A committee has been appointed by the Executive Board of the Student Bar Association to study proposed amendments in the constitution of the Student Bar. This committee is composed of third-year student Don Greishober, and second classmen John Larkin and Joe Malloy.

The National Moot Court team of the Law School completed its brief for the forthcoming nationwide competition. Last year's team represented the local district in the advanced competition in New York, and hopes are high for a repeat of last year's success. The team is composed of third-year men Arthur Flores, Tom Brady and Jim Garland.

Question of Respect For Flag Considered

An old problem at Villanova came into attention last week. Rev. Edward B. McKee, O.S.A., University vice president and Lt. Col. Elliot M. Wilson, executive officer of the Villanova N.R.O.T.C. unit, both expressed the hope, that in the future, all Villanova will remember to display the proper courtesy to the national anthem and the national ensign.

The case at point is the indifference of passers by and more particularly students "laughing" on the terrace of the library when the flag is lowered after N.R.O.T.C. drill on Tuesdays.

Sergeant Waryha, assistant instructor to the Marine Corps, unit at Villanova, outlined the proper procedure to be followed when the national anthem is played and the flag lowered.

Students in the area should face in the direction of the flag, in standing position, and place the right hand over the left breast.

Law School Bids

Specifications and drawings for the new School of Law were received last week and university officials have invited contractors and sub-contractors to submit bids.

Bids are to be returned by Nov. 5.

University officials said if all proceeds satisfactority construction on the new building will begin before the end of next month.

Alumni Board Of Governors Meets Sunday

The first of four annual meetings by the Board of Governors of the Villanova Alumni Association will be held on the campus Sunday at 2 p.m.

At this meeting to discuss alumni affairs, the Class of '56 will be represented by Bob Ford who is thus able to personally report alumni information at senior class meetings. George Harris, Alumni Director, could not announce the topics to be discussed at this meeting but did outline the organizations and the activities of the Alumni Association.

73 U.S. Alumni Clubs

He said that the Board of Governors is composed of representatives from the seventy-three local alumni clubs in the United States, Cuba ,and Puerto Rico, in addition to two representatives appointed by the executive committee of the Board.

In addition to the four annual Board of Governor's meetings, the Alumni Association published the "Villanovan Alumnus" four times a year which contains current school news, articles of interest by the faculty, and class notes on fellow alumni members.

The association also sponsors the Annual Homecoming Celebration which is being held this year at the Haverford Court Hotel after the Richmond game and the annual weekend Reunion after graduation in June.

Football Banquet

The Philadelphia Club gives an annual banquet to the football team which will be Dec. 5 at the Penn Sherwood Hotel. The South New Jersey Club sponsors a banquet for the basketball team.

The New York Club is host to Villanova alumni and students

The final University screening process considered a list of 50 seniors originally submitted by a five-man Class of 1956 committee, and also a list of men nominated by the various deans. Therefore, it is possible that a man left off the 50-man list could be included in the final 32, if his qualifications were considered high enough by the final three-man screening group. On the other hand, a man named on both the 50-student list and the dean's listing could be eliminated for reasons of academic, disciplinary or chapel deficiency.

Published Soon

The Who's Who finalists' names should be sent back to the University from the national committee by the middle of November, at which time the list will be published.

A Vatican Vicar Visits Villanova:

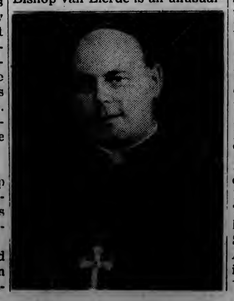
Few Aware of Presence of Prominent Churchman Residing at Monastery

by Clem Birch

Ed. Note: The Most Rev. Pete C. van Lierde, O.S.A., a prominent churchman, spent several weeks recently in the monastery as a visitor to the United States. Following is a personality sketch of the Vatican Vicar and his honors:

Less than three weeks ago, the Most Reverend Peter C. van Lierde, O.S.A., came to Villanova to begin a stay in the United States which would encompass six weeks or more.

Although few have been aware of the fact, the University has had residing in the monastery one of the most prominent Augustinians in the world today. As Vicar General of Vatican City, a post he's held since Jan. 13, 1951, the bishop has had the Vatican as his diocese. This position is only fair compensation for all he has done as a priest.



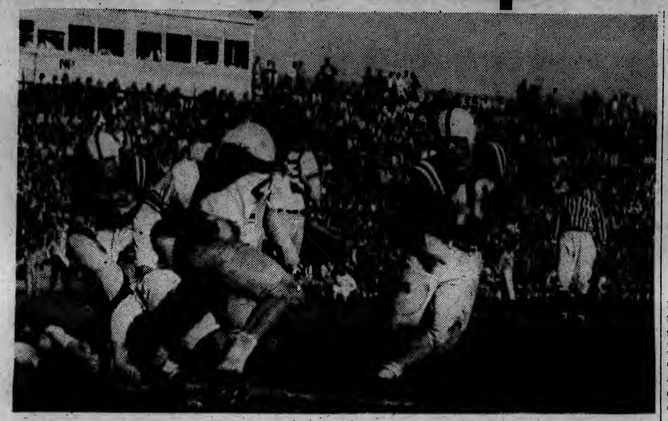
Great Prominence

At the present time Bishop van Lierde is also the Papal Sacristan, a position that carries with it a high degree of prominence.

Originally His Excellence lived in Belgium where he was born in 1907 in the town of Hasselt. His early studies were conducted at the College of St. John Berchman in Brussels. He did not enter the Augustinian order until he had completed studies in the humanities at the Gymnasium of the Augustinian Fathers in Eindhoven, Holland. Much time was spent in philosophy and theology before he was ordained on May 30, 1931.

Doctor of Theology

Besides being a highly able man on the administrative level, Bishop van Lierde is an unusually intelligent person. A fact which sheds some light on this matter is that in the year of his ordination he was sent to Rome, where, two years later, he was made Doctor of Theology, "magna cum laude."



In the following year studies occupied most of his time. In 1936-37 he taught Sacred Scripture in the Seminary of the Augustinian Fathers of the Dutch Province. Again he turned to further advanced study which was taken in Palestine, Trans-Jordan, Syria and Egypt.

His life as an administrator began in 1939 when the Most Reverend Father General of the order made him Vice Rector of the order's International College of Theology of St. Monica. In 1941 he was made Rector. This position His Excellency held until 1948 when the Second World War had passed, leaving its deep scars behind. Throughout these years he published several volumes: "La Spiritualite de l'Ordre de Sant Augustin," a manual of Gregorian Chant, "Various States of

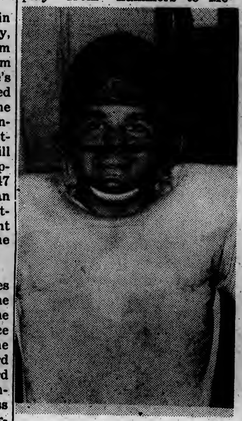
N.C. State Whips Wildcats 34-13



Ciarrochi's Ball-Carrying Bright Spot For Wildcats

A team whose spirit had reached fever pitch early Saturday began the slow and painful rebuilding of mind and body Monday for this weekend's game with Richmond.

"We're determined more than ever to win this weekend", declared senior tackle Mike Barry.

Flaying for the first time on campus since 1952 the Wildcats saw their 21-year victory streak at home smashed by a fired up North Carolina State eleven led by quarterback Eddie West. West, playing the game with a broken thumb on his passing hand, fired two touchdown passes and scored two himself.

Villanova's two touchdowns were scored by Captain Don McComb and fullback Al Ciarrochi. Behind 21-0 late in the second quarter the Mainliners began a march from midfield for the first score. John Lammers' pass to Pete Cassidy plus a 15-yard penalty against State set the stage for the touchdown on a beautiful 27-yard pass play from Lammers to Mc-

Don Luzzi

Comb who snared the aerial away from two Rebel defenders.

Ciarrochi Gets Second TD

The Wildcats second score came as a result of the hard running of Ciarrochi, who blasted through the tough State line after time to finally score on a 12-yard run. This brought the Wildcats within striking distance and when Villanova recovered a N. C. State fumble on the ensuing kickoff the crowd was on its feet yelling and screaming. However, the drive was stopped after two first downs.

Outstanding also for the home forces were linemen Ronnie Wood, Don Luzzi, and McComb and backs Ciarrochi and Bauer. Ciarrochi averaged 5.4 yards per carry for 11 attempts. This was more than half of Villanova's total of 99 yards gained rushing.

Punting Average of 20

Other important factors were the total yardage of 294 yards for the Wolfpack, of which 181 were on the ground, and the fact that the Mainliners lost the ball four times on fumbles and had a punting average of only 20 yards.

This Saturday the Wildcats conclude their home season at Goodreau Stadium against the University of Richmond.

Third in Row For Undefeated Freshman Team

Villanova's undefeated Freshman football team won their third straight last Thursday as they routed Stevens Trade of Lancaster, Pa., 32-0. This conquest gave the Frosh squad the amazing record of having scored 101 points to their opponents 6, in the three games played to date. Even more unusual is the fact that the first string of the Freshman team did not play the whole 48 minutes of the game, as everybody on the squad got into the contest.

The Villanovans scored in every period last Thursday, with a fine team effort. Jim Grazione's fine passing arm sparked the Blue and White's aerial offense, as he completed seven out of ten passes for the grand total of 169 yards gained. On the ground, the greatest damage was done by Bill Bogley who, in twelve tries, ripped through the defense for 147 yards. Grazione's stand-ins, Dan Lowrey and Ed Rohre, completed six passes out of the eight they attempted to add to the Frosh's smashing air attack.

Blocking Aids Backfield

Two of Grazione's passes were good for six points, one each to Rollie West and Gene Opella. Bogley scored twice during his appearance in the game ,once from the two yard line and once on a fine 28-yard run. The other Villanova touchdown came on a Lowrey pass to left end Jerry Billings, covering eighteen yards. Hank Kwiathowski completed two out of five placement kicks to account for the rest of the scoring. The Frosh managed all this scoring despite 125 yards in penalties. Coach Di Fillipo thought much credit should be given to the fine defensive blocking of Kwiathowski, Tom Fletcher and Jim Ciniglia.

This red-hot aggregation will put its wares on display for the University students next Friday, Nov. 4, in a home contest with the University of Delaware Freshman eleven. It seems worthwhile geting out to see these boys, who may on following years, be making the "Villanova Wildcats" a name to be reckoned with on the gridiron.

Alex Again!

Villanova Harriers Conquer St. Joseph's and Georgetown

While Villanova's strongly supported football team was losing their fifth game of the season, the Wildcat harriers, with more participants than onlookers, were winning their third straight meet of the season. Proving that talent and will were enough to win, Alex Breckenridge led the way to topple St. Joseph's and Georgetown.

In this triangular meet, Villanova registered 35 points, while St. Joseph's was second with 39, and the Hoyas trailed with 49. The deciding factor of the meet was the capturing of the one-two spots by Breckenridge and Ron Delany.

Alex Does 19:29

As for the race itself, it was all Breckenridge's after the first half mile. It was at this point that he took the lead and never relinquished it. He crossed the finish line after the four mile jaunt in the fine time of 19:29 minutes, a good hundred yards ahead of second place Delany.

Actually, Alex' time was a new record for the course but Georgetown refused to acknowledge it. The Hoya judges claimed that Alex had cut distance off the course. If anything, the opposite was true. Because of the poor markings along the course, Breckenridge and Delany were misled, and wasted much valuable time in retracing their steps. It was generally agreed by all that the course markings were inadequate.

VU Places Four in 1st Ten

It should also be noted that in the first ten positions, Villanova placed four men. It should be further pointed out that three of the first five finishers were also Villanovans. Along with the Flying Scot, Breckenridge, and Irishman Ron Delany, there was John Kopil who crossed the line fifth.

The other Wildcat representative in the top ten was George Browne, who came in ninth, ahead of sixteen other contenders.

By winning this meet, Villanova not only added one more victory to its unblemished record, but also inflicted the first losses on both St. Joe's and Georgetown. These schools had records of 2-0 and 7-0 respec-

Richmond Invades Campus for Tilt With Villanova

By DICK BRADY

The Villanova Wildcats close their home season Saturday afternoon against the University of Richmond at Goodreau Stadium. Coach Ed Merrick's Spiders will be traveling north for their first meeting with the Wildcats, Richmond will be looking for a win, after last weekend's layoff, and the previous week's tie with Virginia Tech. Tech, incidentally, is the same team that soundly thrashed Penn, 33-0, three weeks ago.

Although the Richmond chances of taking any share in the Southern Conference title are nil, they still will prove a threat to the Main Line team.

Fajackowski a Threat

Spearheading the Richmond offense will be 6'0", 185 pound fullback Frank Pajaczkowski, who has been rated the best pro prospect squad on the squad. Giving him no little amount of help will be Frosh half back Dave Ames. Although it is his first year of college football, Ames came to Richmond greatly heralded, after his state scoring record in high school. It was Ames who dashed off 48

FORMAL GUARD MOUNT

Military pageantry of the highest order climaxed a colorful program of pre-game and half-time displays at the Villanova-North Carolina State game last Saturday put on by the NROTC drill team, the University band and the campus fraternities.

Colorful Spectacle

Diligent practice on the part of the champion drill team under the direction of Walt Gould, resulted in the Formal Guard Mount, a colorful military spectacle, rarely performed, with a counterpart in almost every country in the world.

The Formal Guard Mount was an eye-filling review with the drill team in formation, commands given with the band in the background and flags flying. The ceremony suggested the precision and satisfying display of a formal changing of the guard in Great Britain.

Fraternities Parade Floats

Preceding the Formal Guard Mount was a parade organized by the fraternities featuring floats entered by the various fraternities and fraternity members dressed in comic costumes.

Before the game the band put on its own show. They marched onto the field in a massive "V", playing "V for Villanova." Then they greeted North Carolina State with "HI" in block letters.

Precision Performance

Highlights of the band performance were the outlining of the nation to the tune of "Hail America," and the outlining of the University chapel while playing the "Alma Mater."

Never Losers Romp 38-0, Set New Scoring Record

Intramurals roared into their third week with the action becoming faster and rougher as the league shapes up and the teams dig in for the battle for top honors. The muddy fields made the going sloppy, but a little muck could not abate the drive and determination of the football diehards.

The Navy league saw the sailors slopping thru the mud with equal spirit as they battle for the top rung.

The teams in first place now know that they have a titanic struggle on their hands to remain there.

The results of the week are:

Never Losers Win

The Never Losers soundly trounced the Third Floor Boys, 38-0 on Thursday to establish a season high in points by one team in a game.

Tailback Larry "Guy" O'Brien engineered the Never Losers to five touchdowns on passes to Ed Keating, Bill Haley, twice each, and Buzzy Baron. The other touchdown came on an intercepted pass by Bill Money, who tightroped the sideline for the score. In the line for the Never Losers were such standouts as Harry Axt, Larry Theis and Tom Keating. Tom Keating scored the other two extra points.

Bob Durkin, Jim Giordano and Bill Callahan also played important roles in the romp.

Saints Win

Last Thursday morning in the 10:30 Mendel League the Saints, sporting a 2-1 record engaged the Crusaders, who were seeking their initial triumph. The Saints won 13-0. Less than five minutes had gone by when Dick Montgomery tossed a 12 yard pass to Joe Ryan for the T.D. Montgomery scored the extra point on an end run. The half ended with the Saints in the van by 7-0. The Saints second T.D. was also a pass from Montgomery to Ryan. The extra point was no good, the game ending 13-0.

Castoffs 6, Bulldogs 0

In the 4:30 Mendel League, Wednesday, the Castoffs beat the Bulldogs 6-0. The game was a tight, scoreless struggle until the third quarter when Matt Hulbert took the snap and lateralled to Dom Sorentino who uncorked a 40 yard scoring pass to Joe Marmora for the game's only score. Earlier the Bulldogs were stopped right on the goal line as their downs ran out. Both teams threatened again but did not score.

Syob Tafs Victors

In the 4:30 Austin league the Syob Tafs bested the Fly Weights 12-6. The Syob Tofs scored in the game's opening minutes on a five yard run by Frank Okenka. The Fly Weights soon evened matters with a 45 yard pass from Joe Inzitari to Don Bragg. But in the second half, Frank Okenka, a triple threat back, ran 40 yards around end for the winning T.D. The Fly Weights protested the game but the protest was overruled by the intramural department.

In the Navy league last Wednesday Charlie Co. beat Baker Co. 12-0. All scoring was done in the first half. Both touchdowns resulted from short passes from Dick Peer to Hank Nichols in the end zone. The game was close but Bob McDonnell's boys just couldn't get rolling. Charlie Co. now boasts a 3-0 record to tie Able Co. for the league lead.

INTRAMURAL FOOTBALL ACTION

Freshman 'Back Grazione Spurs Undefeated Team

Three weeks of football games have seen the Freshmen team hang up a like number of decisive wins. In each of the games the Frosh have displayed an amazing ability to push the ball across the opposing team's goal line. As is the case with any successful football team, a great deal of credit has to go to the men up front who open up the holes and stop the opponent's offensive thrusts and to the backs who lug the ball up and down the field.

However, behind every winning club in modern football is a smart, talent quarterback and the Frosh prove no exception to this rule. Jim Grazione is the man under center for Coach Dave De Fillippo's first year men, and in his early season performances he has shown the poise, drive and talent that make for winning football.

Graduate of South Philly

Grazione was graduated last June from South Catholic High of Philadelphia and was sought after by many of the nation's leading football powers, including Coach Terry Brennan's Notre Dame. Fortunately for Wildcat future prospects, Big Jim was lured to the Main Line campus breaking a tradition which has seen many fine city ball players head for the distant hills.

While in high school Jim piloted his team to the 1954 City Championship and since donning the Blue and White he has shown no signs of losing the winning touch. In the Princeton game Big Jim sparked the Baby Cats by tossing one touchdown pass to Rollie West — another Philly boy—and running for another. Grazione showed more than a strong arm in the Tiger game. On his run he swept wide on an option play and traveled 24 yards through the broken field.

Grazione's performances flash a word of warning to the varsity's five signal-callers.

So There's No Spirit Here?

by Dick Fitzpatrick

Many things have been said since the start of the current academic rat race about that old whipping post, Villanova spirit. Hardly had the dust of registration week settled when we found our spirit being detected, inspected, disected, bisected, and rejected by individuals and publications for miles around. There is, however, one angle which the great analysists of spirit seem to have overlooked in their rush to put the V. U. student body in the ranks of apathy. Why hasn't anyone made some comparison between our much abused ardor with that of some other educational institution?

Dawn's early light on October 14, 1955 found this writer wearily arriving on the campus of Indiana University, at Bloomington. Here we were at the site of Big Ten, big time football. Now we would be able to get a taste of honest to goodness bona fide school spirit, or so we thought. After a few hours of much needed rest, we started on a cook's tour of the slightly less than enormous I.U. campus. First we learned that Indiana has a resident student body of some 15,000 full time students and secondly that the campus occupies about half the area of Bloomington, a town of more than twenty thousand. Without even the aid of a slide rule we came upon the conclusion that here was a pretty large outfit, capable of producing first class football teams and top-flight team support. But the architects of Hoosier U. had omitted one major detail and that was student attitude.

Of Odors and Rain

After the grand tour, we settled back in a plush leather chair in one of the palatial fraternity houses that mark the campus, sipped the foam from our beer, and cautiously asked our host, "Well, what do you think of tomorrow's football game?" The answer, while gratifying to us who had traveled 707 miles to see the fray, was none the less astounding. "You'll probably murder us" was the reply. This gentleman obviously didn't care one way or another about the game, for after a few well chosen words of digust, he changed the subject.

The real crusher came the next afternoon, when amid feverish preparations on our part to get to the game a great many of our hosts sat gathered about the fraternity television set watching Notre Dame collide with Michigan State. "Our game?", came the answer to our obvious question, "Those guys stink and besides it looks like rain."

Here is my point. Do not sell the Wildcat spirit short. Man for man we can and do out-yell, out-cheer and out-support a good many of our friends at other institutions whose publicity departments have the uncanny ability to manufacture spirit where there is actually none at all. We are, to say the least, a small school in comparison with some of the mammoths with whom we knock heads on the gridiron. Maybe by reason of numbers they produce a little more noise than we do, but remember this, it is not the quantity but the quality that counts.

It Surrounds You

This year has seen the student body rise to a new high in support of the team, a team, by the way, which commands a great deal of respect no matter what the score reads. The bruised and bloody Indiana line will support this statement. We have gone all out to support the Cats, and under Pete Quinn's (alias Joe Morale) spirited leadership we have become more organized than ever. When we play a ball game people know we are around, people both on the field and in the stands.

No matter what anyone says the spirit is here. Do not believe everything you read in the papers or in the magazines. Look around, observe the attitude of those around you. Maybe you will never see Villanova spirit in print, but you don't have to; you can feel it all around you.

The bulwarks of the Spider line are tackle Erik Christensen and center Dick Eaton. Christensen has been on the All-Southern Conference team for the last three years. Six foot one inch, 220 pound Eaton is playing his first year with Richmond. His play thus far this season has impressed enough to convince coach Merrick that his problems of having lost his first two centers through graduation last year are more than solved.

each of the pledges has a task to perform during the time of initiation. Typical of these tasks is serving as a porter at the P&W station.

Boards were given to the pledges at the meeting from which they make paddles which form a necessary part of their required garb.

The trials and requirements of initiation were outlined to the pledges of Delta Pi Epsilon, C&F school fraternity, at a meeting last Thursday night.

After being welcomed as future members of the fraternity by Lou Donnatelli, D.P.E., president, the pledges were given over to the pledge committee headed by Lou Kollemeko. He outlined what could be expected during the initiation period and reminded them of their lowly status until after "hell night".

Uniform of the day for the pledges during the initiation period will be skimmer hats, SPATS, ribbon bow TIES, and signs indentying them as D.P.E. pledges.

Big brothers were assigned to the pledges for the purpose of seeing that the pledges comply with the requirements of the pledging period.

A Glance at the Big Ten

The regulations of these houses in regard to their members is quite free with the exception of no drinking on campus at all, no girls anywhere inside the houses during the week, and only till 12:25 on weekends.

The members of the fraternities as well as the rest of the student body dress quite differently than we do here in the east. Everything is very casual with corduroy pants, white bucks or suede shoes, a sport shirt, and a short haircut being the style. There are very few button down shirts, back straps or 'repp' ties and absolutely no pegged pants, winged collars and long key chains.

Great Guys

The guys themselves are nothing but the best and are definitely the most hospitable people any of us have ever met. The two Villanovans mentioned above had met a girl during the summer who is an Alpha Phi at Indiana and they wrote to her to see if she could find the group a place to stay. That was the extent to which the members of the Delta Upsilon Fraternity knew us yet they threw their pledges out of their beds to make room for us and gave us all the meals that were desired, in fact they made us feel right at home by coming up and introducing themselves warmly.

Another interesting difference between the eastern and midwestern fraternities is their means of rating. In the east the number one fraternity usually is the one that throws the best parties and has the best or most popular guys in it. Not so at Indiana, the top house is the one with the highest scholastic average and the most participation in extra-curricular activities. Parties don't mean anything and since there is no drinking in the fraternities they do not have any like you normally associate with the word.

Fall Carnival

There is another feature besides the fraternities worth mentioning though. The Villanova weekend was the Fall Carnival weekend there and therefore one of their bigger affairs. All the fraternities and sororities thought up, designed, and built side shows in the large field house along the theme of a carnival which were most interesting. The Us had a pie throwing booth, the DKEs: a Paris night club—complete; the Kappas: a freak show, and so on down the line. One booth was better than the other and everyone was having a great time.

There was one aspect of Indiana that completely surprised us and probably the WIP sportcaster and will surprise the rest of the Villanova students. That is that the Hoosiers have much less spirit than we have. Almost everyone that we met hoped that the Wildcats would win because they hated the football coach or just didn't care.

More Honors

The Holy Year in 1950 bore many great honors to all corners of the Catholic world. In one such corner at the close of that year was the newly appointed Papal Sacristan and Vicar General of Vatican City, the Most Rev. Peter Cannisus van Lierde, O.S.A. He was appointed by His Holiness Pope Pius XII on Jan. 13, 1951. Besides these very major offices he is also one of the Prelates of the Sacred Congregation of Rites.

Still Single

When Sunday morning came around these same eight Villanova boys—still single, sober, but showing signs of wear—had to drag themselves into their cars and leave Indiana only to look forward to the miserable nineteen hour ride home. A fabulous, sleepless weekend was had by all but the Monday night conclusion was, "It was too far" and, "They have a lot more money and buildings than we have yet the Hoosiers don't begin to compare with Villanova for social and spiritual life." It was good to be home!

Explaining Government

In November 1954 he published a work in the Dutch language on the central government of the Church. Its title is "Behind the Bronze Door". "It is the aim of this work, which the Holy Father has deigned to approve and bless, to describe in a detailed but concise manner the actual functioning of the central government of the Church," said the bishop. The work is currently being translated into three languages, French, German and Italian. There is an English translation planned.

Just this past February, His Excellency was named Vicar General of the patriarchal basilica of St. Peter's in Rome. In June Her Majesty Juliana, Queen of the Netherlands, named the Bishop a Knight of the Order of the Lion of Holland.

Villanova has been indeed fortunate to have the Bishop as a guest. Because of engagements with Catholic groups throughout the country the Bishop's time actually spent on campus was short. In addition, he has made occasional visits to Canada since his arrival here. A trip to California is being planned for the end of this year.

WVIL INTERVIEW

"Somethin' Smith and the Red Heads", Epic recording stars, will be interviewed over WVIL tonight at 8:15.

Conducting the interview from Chubby's night club will be John Nosica.

LAW SCHOOL FORUM

Villanova's School of Law will present its second law school forum Nov. 2. All interested students have been invited to attend by the law school faculty.

ICG

The Intercollegiate Conference on Government will meet tomorrow at 10:30 a. m. in 104 C&F.

At a joint meeting with the Rosemont chapter last Tuesday, plans were discussed for a social for regional chapters. Another joint meeting was tentatively planned.

NFCCS

An intercollegiate Mass and communion breakfast sponsored by the National Federation of Catholic College Students will be held this Sunday at LaSalle College.

Student government presidents and those interested in student government will attend.

Following the mass and communion breakfast a regional seminar will be held.

LIBRARY DONATION

A rare Rembrandt etching, "The Descent from the Cross," was recently donated to Villanova's library by the late John Joseph McVey, a former prominent Philadelphia publisher.

Other items included in the bequest were three prints by Audubon, the famous American ornothologist and biologist, and three water colors by Susan H. Bradley.

Coins dating to the Civil War, currency issued as early as 1817, and an American flag with 45 stars, complete the donation.

McVey, an outstanding Philadelphia layman all his life, collected these items in his dealings with books, art, and antiques.

ASTRONOMY CLUB

The solar system was the subject of an informative talk by Father Jenkins at the weekly meeting of the Astronomer's club. Father Jenkins, club moderator and organizer, touched on many of the mysteries of the planets.

New Telescope

Later the group made a trip to the observatory atop Mendel Hall and viewed the moon through the new telescope. The instrument has a magnification of approximately 100X.

The Club has a growing membership and is one of the campus' more interesting activities. Meetings are held every Thursday evening at 7:15, and all are welcome.

PHYSICS CLUB

Charles Ross, a physics major, lectured before the Physics Club last Thursday on the "Physics of Transistors". The talk was accompanied by a demonstration of a transistor in action. The device was built into an audio oscillator circuit which produced audible tones through a loudspeaker.

Tomorrow Ed Meyer will demonstrate the effects of high voltage discharge through a vacuum. The appartus will consist of a Crooke's tube and several colorful demonstration tubes.

Club President Charles Schwerdtfeger again mentioned that anyone interested is cordially invited to atend the meeting in the Physics Lab. at 10:30 a. m.

Peer Hopeful Of Requests' Acceptance

Student Council president Dick Peer, serving in that capacity as a member of the President's Committee for Students, says that the results of the first meeting last Thursday were "encouraging."

The newly-formed group, meeting with University President Father James A. Donnellon, O.S.A., and Dean of Student Activities Father George McLaughlin, O.S.A., presented a member of recommendations for consideration.

"Father President was extremely receptive to all the requests we presented, and I believe most of them will receive favorable action," said Peer.

Four Students

The other members of the committee are seniors Hank Whalen and Harry Nash and junior Jack O'Rourke. The committee meets with Father Donnellon again next Thursday.

Concerning the requests brought forth:

Father Donnellon said that he was sure a formal opening dinner in Dougherty Hall for seniors and Student Council members "could be arranged".

The question of a senior lounge in Dougherty was "very

Menz and Burns Appointed Prom Co-Chairmen

Senior class president Jerry Guerrisi has announced the appointment of prom co-chairmen, following the declination of the position by Mike Horan late last week.

Dave Burns, resident Commerce and Finance student, and Paul Menz, resident engineer, are the two men named to the post as co-directors.

Horan, appointed to replace Guerrisi after the latter was elected to the class presidency, declined the post at a steering committee meeting Thursday, because of the stress of his curriculum.

Both Active

Both Menz and Burns have been active in the workings of the Class of '56; Burns was junior year vice-president, and Menz has contributed as a commitee member on a number of occasions.

Seaton, Brockman, Murray Cast In Leading Roles

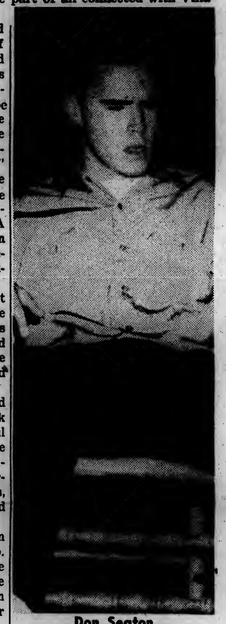
Scheduled on the docket at the Field House the next three days is the "Caine Mutiny Court Martial". The Rev. William J. Krupa, director and moderator of Belle Masque, is anxiously awaiting along with the faculty and student body the culmination of over a month's intensive work on the part of all connected with Villanova's dramatic society.

Don Seaton is the talented possessor of the difficult role of the disturbed Captain Queeg and sharing top billing with him as attorney for the defense, Lieutenant Barney Greenwold, will be Chuck Brockman. Both of these are remembered for their fine performance in last fall's production, "Command Decision."

Walt Doyle, a veteran Belle Masquer, will interpret the role of Captain Blakely, the president of the court of judges. A newcomer to Belle Masque, John Murray will portray the prosecuting attorney, Lieutenant-Commander John Challee.

Ray Clarke will be Lieutenant Keefer, the literary man of the "Caine" and the important parts of Lieutenant (j.g.) Keith and Signalman 3/c Urban will be essayed by Joe Barrett and Andy Iaccarino respectively.

The Doctors Lundeen and Bird are in the hands of Jack Erdlin and Jim Gilligan. Paul Gormley and Jack Dillon are the Orderly and Stenographer. Members of the Court are Tom Curran, Bill Brown, Mike Curtis, Nick Rinaldi, Jim Bourne and Vic Ludmerer.



Other Naval Officers are John Fitzpatrick and Malcolm Didio.

Tickets can be obtained in the Pie Shoppe or from any Belle Masque member. The price again is $1 for students and $1.25 for adults.

Joe Chinnicci and Jack Lowery and their capable crew will man the stage upon which will be the artistic, authentic set designed by Jake Krupa.

Mike Clark, Belle Masque president says that make-up for the show will be handled by our own Villanova co-eds, who have just completed a course in make-up under Father Krupa.

The only remaining task for Belle Masque is to put it over with the audiences. No one has any doubts that they will.

New Orders Will Be Taken:

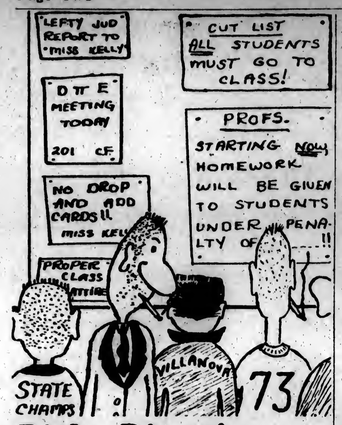
Juniors' Rings Arrive Tomorrow

Rings for members of the university's junior class will be distributed tomorrow from 10 a. m. until 5 p. m. and from 7 to 9 p. m.

Ring chairman Jim Judge said the rings will be distributed in the Student Activities Office on the third floor of Dougherty Hall.

Judge emphasized that full payment must be made by the student when he picks up his ring. Juniors who did not return a deposit to Dieges and Clust over the summer vacation must put in new orders if they want rings, Judge said.

Juniors who did not place their ring orders last May or during the first fittings in September may order rings tomorrow, according to the chairman.



Jim Judge

Judge did not know when these newly-ordered rings would be delivered.

Other members of the ring committee are: Joe Keffer, Arts & Sciences; Tom Scanlon and Dick Mason, engineering, and Bill Eckenrode and Eb McCall, C&F.

Sympathy is also expressed from the staff to football coach Frank Reagan, upon the death of his father-in-law.

Right Direction . . .

The newly-formed President's Committee for Students, meeting for the first time last Thursday with Father Donnellon, could be one of the most effective and progressive organs set up here at Villanova in recent years.

The committee, made up of three seniors and a junior, presented a list of recommendations to Father President that will surely be given deep and singular consideration.

Most of the recommendations presented dealt with discipline or handbook regulations, and these must be relayed by Father President to the Board of Discipline, consisting of Father McKee, Dean of Men, and nine or 10 priests who serve as hall prefects. In this case, the final decision will be up to the Board members, but Father President made it clear that he will present the students' case vigorously whenever he feels justified in doing so.

What is encouraging about it all is the fact that Father Donnellon seemed extremely receptive to almost all of the proposals presented him. Confronted point-blank with "How do you feel about this, Father?" questions, he displayed an understanding and in most cases offered replies that were very heartening.

In regard to the proposals that do not involve any disciplinary consideration, such as in the case of a senior lounge in Dougherty and a formal opening dinner there for the Class of '56 and the Student Council membership, Father President said this: "I will do all I can to help you realize the lounge in Dougherty; I certainly understand your need in that case. Concerning the formal opening dinner in the new dining hall, I'm sure that can be arranged."

All of which adds up to several conclusions: the recommendations made to Father Donnellon, when reasonable and feasible, stand an excellent chance of being accepted, as in the case of none-disciplinary measures, by Father President himself. As concerns those matters which must be referred to the Board of Discipline for final action, the committee has been assured that its case will be presented clearly by the University President himself.

The group meets again in less than two weeks; its effectiveness, or lack of it, will be more apparent then.

One thing is certain: it's all a step in the right direction.

How about action on Sullivan phone problem?

It is absolutely unbelieveable that a large, modern dormitory like Sullivan Hall could be so poorly equipped. There are 446 students living in Sullivan and there are but five telephones. This is an average of one phone per 90 men. The average in all the other dorms on campus is one telephone per 44 men, twice as good a ratio as that of Sullivan Hall.

Every night in Sullivan between six and ten o'clock, the telephones are in constant use. Moreover, lines are usually formed outside all the booths waiting for the use of the phone.

It is, therefore, almost impossible to receive a phone call in Sullivan Hall in the evening. A case of emergency or crisis at home, or any important matter, could make it impossible for parents to contact their sons. This is indeed a ridiculous situation.

I do not know on whose shoulders the responsibility of correction lies, but I do know something must be done about this deplorable situation.

Sincerely,
J. William Jones

What Are We Seeking?

A Look at Modern Life: Reflect . . . Find Happiness

Emerging from an imposed silence of two weeks duration, I rejoin my readers with undaunted verve, having inspired a reflective glance at modern life. If you will take the time to read this short article and heed its message, I promise you a happier and fuller life, a life "worth living".

Already I hear the deriding snicker of the Cynic, that cheater in the game of life, who, finding himself incapable of gaining happiness by himself, tries to steal it from others, but in doing so only destroys it for himself. We must ignore the Cynic. Death will have the last laugh on him.

The Hypocrite

On another side I see the Hypocrite standing ready to "play the role". He has many costumes and masks but is really only a contradiction in thought and act. He is a pretender to the throne of happiness, a "ham" actor on the stage of life. Beware of the Hypocrite; his calling card is the Lie.

Here also I find the Skeptic, the blind jester sitting at the throne of Ignorance. He doubts that he knows, yet knows that he doubts; he is the squared-circle in reality. He will never find happiness because he has destroyed his "looking glass". He dreams but never sleeps and life is an eternal nightmare. Pity the Skeptic.

Above all, we must tear down the idol, the craven image that has become our master, the false god, Time. Too long has it sucked the sap of life. What's the hurry? Time isn't conquered by catching up to it. Death meets it head on and destroys it. Why should we be servants of Time when we created it to serve us? Are we to be like Frankenstein, the makers of our own torment? Alas, in looking ahead to tomorrow, we often miss seeing today.

The Real Future

All the ideas about security and plans for the future—would we not be wiser to plan for the real future, the eternal life after death, with such vitality and ambition? That can only be done by living well today; every minute is ours and we are responsible for what we do with it.

It is a false notion that we are living longer, actually we are dying faster; and I'm not just being pessimistic. The Archaic meaning for speed is to kill. So slow up, relax; do your work with ease and "let the rest of the world go by". The Good Lord will never hold you accountable for not having had enough time, only for wasting what you had.

Not Too Late

Give life back its Spirit, its reason for being. Too long have we constructed it a shell and ourselves its prisoners. Enough of this fear of what tomorrow will bring. They fear, who are not certain of the end.

There is no such thing as "too late"; our chief concern is today. The present is most important because it is the "stuff" of which eternity is made. So don a smile, take a deep breath, and begin to live today. You'll be happier tomorrow that you did, and "tomorrow is forever".

A Powerful Emotion:

Love is the powerful emotion

THAT TIME OF YEAR
by Bill Jones

Now is the time of year
When a student begins to look,
With many a sigh of woe,
Into his empty pocketbook.

He sees with great alarm
And with greater despair,
That this thin little vault
Is so terribly, terribly bare.

He writes a letter home,
And asks for a little dough.
But in the sweet reply
The answer is always no.

He had a date to meet his mate,
Oh how he long for his honey.
But how can he take her out,
When he hasn't any money?

There is nothing he can do
To right this state of gloom.
Except to go in debt,
Or to sulk in his room.

The former he always chooses,
And borrows a little jack.
Then spends the whole semester
Trying to pay it back.

ey say economy is born
Through many years of strife.
I say that it is born
In four years of college life.

Peering . . .

. . . . . At the football team and the long awaited backyard victory. Things somehow look brighter all over and we now can talk in a civil tone whenever the word "football" is mentioned. Yes, we can even study more ambitiously now, and the food in the chow hall tastes a little better . . . I think.

The lounges weren't open but weary parents were at least allowed to view the beautiful furniture in its glass cage. Now if labor and management can remain compatable and strikeless, we'll have the rest of it open before May.

. . . . . Around the campus, to see if intellectual curiosity is actually waning, as some of the profs suspect. I reserve opinion on this subject, but one man told me that his biggest problem all day was the decision he had to make concerning a choice of raspberry and vanilla ice cream or butter pecan and chocolate at lunch yesterday.

. . . . . Around Rosemon't campus, I have noticed that, even though it was a warm day, the girls were all bundled up in their very collegiate camel hair coats. It makes one wonder whether it's the temperature or their emotional state that inspires such clothing. Reminds me of a story I heard recently about two camels trudging wearly across a torrid and dusty desert. One turns to the other and mutters, "I don't care what they say . . . I'm thirsty!" There could be an analogy there.

The VILLANOVAN urges its readers to submit letters to the editor on any pertinent subject, controversial or otherwise. The letter must be signed, but the name will be withheld from publication upon request.

A Rare and Awesome Silence:

Open Season On Students Arrives: That Evil Named Exam Is Here

There comes a time in November when a strange silence settles serenely over the campus. Under this mysterious stillness strange things are happening. The library staff scurries quickly about in anticipation of the multitudes of panic stricken students about to descend on the once quiet place like a horde of locusts.

Pin Balls Deserted

The Pie Shoppe reports a staggering increase in the sale of cigarettes, No Doz pills, and light bulbs. A rare silence hovers over the deserted pin ball machines alone in their stalls. The juke box is mysteriously quiet. Students, no longer relaxed, stride quickly, nervously about with long drawn faces supporting sleepless, bloodshot eyes.

No Commandoes

The "T" is curriously quiet. The commandos have vanished. Dust gathers on the chairs and tables. Even the female population is sparce. The ceiling, rarely visible, protrudes ominously into the serene, smokeless air.

Strictly Opinion

By DON ALTON

Men of Villanova, you are the unfortunate citizens of these democratic shores who are forced to earn your education as a "denizen of Outer Mediocrity," that is to say that you are not allowed to attend an Ivy League college. You are also forced to attend class with people of all races, colors, and religion, and you do not have the ancient tradition of riots or weekend revels to pass on to your children.

The information included in this column is passed on to you from the articles in the November issue of "Holiday". Here you will find three articles by ivy-waving alumni of the "superior" type educational process.

It seems that there are eight colleges that have been responsible for everything from the development of such cities as Philadelphia and Boston to the athletic events they now tend to deplore such as football. In these same institutions it is said that one will find the only education that is proper and gain the only true degree. Since these elite places of education can hold only two percent of all high school graduates, ninety-eight percent of the degrees handed out this June will be worthless.

These proud Ivy colleges boast of resources of $700,000,000, and the academic landscapes are described in some detail. Another point of pride is the selection of the honored few on the basis of geographic, racial and religious distribution. It would seem that some people have lost sight of the democratic and Christian principles upon which this nation was founded.

The unfortunate student that finds his campus littered with the unacceptables of the Ivy group is in a more realistic college situation. This world is made up of a great variety of peoples, and we all have to live together in life. If we take the position that a Negro cannot possess the same intellectual capacity as the "wonky" at Harvard, or that the freshman from the farm will never advance in life, then we had better give up the struggle. All is lost. There just aren't enough "wonkies" and "Weenies" to sustain and perpetuate the world.

One of the articles in this triumverate of tripe has a great deal to say about the social life of the Ivy . . . men? The tale was told by a self-confessed leader of Harvard riots, a la '51. He explains that a real fine riot is the best thing for the well rounded education. It is also brought to the attention of the lowly reader that an Ivy party must have drinks and drinkers to be good and nothing else. . . . . . .

This same idol of the Ivy world describes the "jolly-ups" held in conjunction with Radcliffe girls. These parties seemed to follow the liberal and academic freedom policy of the select colleges. Combine fifty girls, two hundred Harvard fellas, a liberal outlook on life, and you have the ideal party. The result does not resemble the Rosemont Teas or the Chestnut Hill Kindlers.

In the third literary flop of the issue, they explain the athletic policy at the Ivy schools. This evolves to nothing more than an apology for being fellas among men. They scowl at the football powers, then they pat themselves on the back for inventing every form of sport known to man . . . the only difference is that they employ their sports in a "superior" manner . . . what else?

After reading this collection of revelations of superior life as it is enjoyed by the select and liberal Ivy group, we should all be able to walk up our poor little campus . . . collect our 'democratized' degree . . . and boast of a sound mind and body as developed in an 'educational rabbit-warren' . . . one of the many of which America can be justifiably proud.

One final reminder to Villanovans, and other interested parties. Read the true story of life among the elite before you or yours step into the sacred halls of Ivy.

Radio Station Presents Weekly 'Name' Interviews

Through the facilities of its production department, WVIL, the University's radio station is presenting weekly interviews with top names in the recording industry as part of its regular broadcasting schedule. The interviews are broadcasted every Wednesday night from 8:15 to 8:30.

The show made its debut two weeks ago tonight with Somethin' Smith and The Redheads as guests. Last week the station played host to the Four Aces. Tonight, Al Hibbler, Decca recording star will make an appearance.

Idea of Rosica

The show is the idea of John Rosica, who handles the interviews. Each week John travels to local night clubs and after getting permission from the stars' managers, interviews them via tape recording.

John voiced his hopes that he can interview enough top name artists to allow the show to run for the remainder of the year.

Another area women's college has joined the social circuit—Holy Family College has invited all Villanova students to a mixer dance Sunday at 3 p.m.

Admission and refreshments are free. Directors to the college, located at Frankford and Grant Avenues, Torresdale, are posted on the Pie Shoppe bulletin board.

Holy Family was chartered last year as a four-year liberal arts college and moved into its new $1 million building in September.

UN Observed On Tenth Anniversary

By Jim Greenlee

October 24, 1955, was a momentous day, world wide. It marked the tenth anniversary of the most diverse, eminent, controversial, essential and successful organization in international history, the United Nations.

In 1945 the sceptics and cynics greatly outnumbered the sincere proponents of world organization. There were comparatively few who genuinely believed that ten years later it would not only be existant but comprise so influential and substantial a segement of international relations.

Some present day agnostics may still dubiously inquire, "Has the United Nations really been successful?"

The answer is emphatically, "Yes."

From its conception the U. N. has been the center of world tumolt and crisis. In March, 1946, Iran accused the Russians of refusing to remove Soviet troops from its country. Since that first complaint, the turbulent issues of Greece, Indonesia, Palestine, Berlin, Korea, Red China, Formosa, and atomic energy have been vehemently debated in the General Assembly. Each of these was a self contained crisis. Each was supposedly the most important question ever to confront the U. N.

During the lengthy parley which accompanied each issue, critics complained, "What good is the U. N. if it can't settle this?"

The settlements arrived at by the U.N. have not been completely agreeable to all parties concerned. They have been compromises.

The United States is not totally satisfied with the Korean agreement because the unification of Korea has not yet been effected. The once settled Arab-Palestine debacle is again threatening world peace. The atom bomb question still awaits solution.

Yet the U.N. has been successful. Were not these compro-

Ten Seniors Are Nominated for DES Society

Ten outstanding Seniors have been nominated for membership to Delta Epsilon Sigma, National Catholic Honorary Society.

They are: Francis Adams, Stephen Bernocco, Robert Connor, Robert Farley, Richard Fitzpatrick, Fred A. Gobillot, David Kuhn, Robert McCaffrey, Charles Schwerdtfeger, John I. Sullivan.

These Seniors have maintained a cumulative average of 3.00 or better. The Faculty Committee on Selecting for Membership will select those students who will comprise the group.

Any other Senior who as of February, 1956, will have such a cumulative average may ask for nomination.

A Senior on the present list whose average falls below 3.00 will be disqualified.

As a final test for selection, they must write a paper based on "The Making of the Modern Mind" by Craine Brinton.

Professorial Round-up:

History Instructor Rudhart Attained Doctorate At 22

Villanova's history department has always boasted many fine and skilled instructors, and last year it added to its ranks an outstanding scholar, Doctor Alexander Rudhart, as an assistant professor of history and political science.

Ph. at 22

Doctor Rudhart, probably the youngest Ph.D. on campus, was only 18 when he received his A.B. at the University of Vienna. At the age of 22 he received his Ph.D. in political science in the field of law. He also attended a school for interpreters along with his studies in law at the University of Vienna. At this interpreting school he completed studies in English and French. During the summer recesses, while working for his doctorate, he worked for an American refuge organization as an interpreter for refuges coming from the Balkan region of Eastern Europe.

Studied on His Own

Doctor Rudhart came to Villanova in 1953 and studied on his own, using the library. Due to the complex system involved in starting into university teaching in Europe, he remained here joining the faculty at Villanova in 1954. The reason for choosing Villanova Dr. Rudhart said was, "the great opportunity for advancement here."

Considering his European educational background Doctor Rudhart maintains:

"The primary purpose of a university is to prepare individuals for leadership in society as such it is a requirement that they should have as broad an educational background as possible, besides being well equipped in a particular field."

On the subject of American students, Doctor Rudhart believes that many students do not fully appreciate the advantages of higher education. He is especially referring to the students in the early years of college.

American education tends to "overspecialize" in particular fields. Doctor Rudhart also points out the trend of students in American colleges to evaluate their course in regards to financial returns. "Many students consider required courses a burden," said Doctor Rudhart in comparing courses without the humanities to being nothing more than a night school education.

Balanced Education

He believes that the student, no matter what field, whether science, business or history, should want a well-rounded education.

In this way the student is able to build up his personality thus preparing himself for leadership in society.

While his views are those of a European he exemplies the old adage of having the horse before the cart. In this case it is the man before the machine. If a man is to run a machine or business in society, then he is going to need a knowledge of the people in that society where he is going to run it.

In summarizing Dr. Rudhart's views, the college student whose object is a well-rounded education in fulfilling the primary purpose of the University is preparing himself for leadership in society.

In Marine Corps:

School's PLC Ranks Grow; Sophomore Is Sworn In

August Norman Gandia was sworn in this past Thursday by Captain John J. Grace, USMC Marine instructor for the Villanova NROTC unit, as the first PLC candidate for a commission in the marine corps to be accepted this year. This swells the number of PLC members in good standing at Villanova to twenty-two.

Gandia is a sophomore C&F student from Long Island, New York.

Familiar Phrase

PLC has become a familiar phrase on the college campus. It represents Platoon Leaders Class, an officer candidate program whereby you may qualify for a commission in the United States Marine Reserve.

PLC candidates participate in six week military courses at Quantico, Va. during two summer vacations from college. There are no military classes or drills during the school year.

During the first summer of training the candidate has the rank of corporal and during the second summer the rank of sargeant.

Upon graduation the PLC candidates, if they have completed the required training, are commissioned as second lieutenants.

. . . . . At Quantico . . . . .

The first assignment of the new second lieutenants is a period of six months additional training at the Officer Basic School at Quantico.

This training has traditionally set aside the Marine officer as a man of confidence.

Those interested in finding out more about the PLC program should contact Captain Grace or Sgt. Waryha in Commodore John Barry hall.

For those who would like to combine the marine corps with aviation an Aviation Office Candidate Course will be offered to college graduates who will attend a ten-week indoctrination course at Quantico. Successful graduates of the course will receive reserve commissions and be ordered to active duty as student aviators.

Villanovans Contribute 256 Blood Drive Pints

Despite the 256 pints of blood collected on a two-day Bloodmobile visit here last week, the Villanova drive chairman said he was "disappointed" although the Red Cross said it was satisfied.

Jack Essig said he had expected at least 288 donors since 300 had signed up. Many who gave blood had not signed up ahead of time, he added.

May Still Donate

Essig said students and faculty members who did not donate Wednesday or Thursday may contribute blood to the Wayne Bloodmobile, stationed at the Bryn Mawr Hospital. They may make appointments through Essig or Rev. George McLaughlin, O.S.A., dean of student activities.

Two members of the Wayne Red Cross chapter, which provided the volunteer workers for the Bloodmobile visit, expressed the Red Cross' thanks and praised students for their cooperation and spirit.

Ten Co-eds Give

Included in the list of donors were 10 co-eds, 120 midshipmen and seven officers and enlisted men from the NROTC unit and "2 or 3" faculty members, according to Essig.

The faculty turnout disappointed him, said Essig, because in the past faculty members and their wives have used blood from the Bloodmobile.

After moving around the Barry Hall armory for preliminary examinations and tests and donating their blood, the contributors were taken into the Navy library.

Refreshments Provided

There, while they were detained for at least 20 minutes, the donors wolfed down donuts, coffee, tea and pretzels. One resident student remarked to a companion: "This layout of chow would really look good about 10 o'clock tonight."

With Speaker:

A.S.C.E. Meet Tonight at 7:30 In C&F

The first regular monthly meeting of the Villanova student chapter of the American Society of Civil Engineers will be held tonight at 7:30 in 201 C & F.

Featured speaker will be Mr. Homer R. Seely, who will speak on the construction of suspension bridges, with emphasis on the new Philadelphia Gloucester (Walt Whitman) Bridge.

Mr. Seely is currently project engineer on the Philadelphia bridge for the consulting firm of Modjewski and Masters, who designed the span.

He has been associated with suspension bridge work for several years, including the Delaware Memorial Bridge in Wilmington and the Brooklyn Bridge. Mr. Seely's talk will be illustrated with slides.

ASCE president Charlie Catania urges all civil engineering students and other interested students to attend the meeting.

The Commerce and Finance School: What Improvements Could be Made?

Villanovans in all phases of C&F study offer candid opinions on what might be done to heighten the intellectual quality of their department

by Karl Smith and John McHale

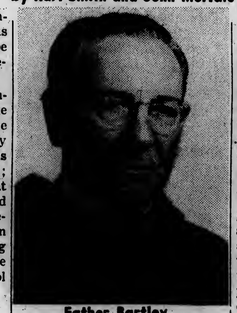
The question that many Commerce and Finance students want answered is, "What can be done to improve the C&F department?"

This question has been answered by students from the various departments within the school. The object of the survey is to receive various suggestions from the members of the school; many of them have stated that the addition of the newly formed Industrial Administration Department has aided greatly in the improvement. The following statements contain some of the ways the students feel the school could be "perked" up.

Jack Fraser, Marketing

More emphasis should be placed on grammatical subjects. A wider choice of electives should be offered to coincide with one's particular major. Smaller classrooms and more teaching facilities should be afforded.

Jim Curvey, Accounting



The administration should look into improving and expanding the present classroom and teaching facilities. There should also be various alterations made within the teaching department.

Ted Coogan, Finance

More classroom facilities

Dr. Klein, C&F professor recently named head of the newly-formed Industrial Administration course.

Father Bartley
Commerce & Finance Dean

should be made available in order to do away with grueling afternoon classes. There should also be several changes made within the C&F teaching department.

Tom Sprenger
Industrial Administration

Construction of a new ultra-modern C&F building is needed, also greater amount of cooperation between student and teacher, and a more liberal attitude concerning one's major.

Ralph DeCicco
Industrial Administration

Unlimited cuts should be given to any student who has achieved Dean's List during the previous semester. This would encourage many students to study more, thus enabling the status of the department to rise. Improvement in the faculty's attitude concerning student education and activities.

Norm Gandia, Marketing

The faculty should try to cover the topic more thoroughly in the classroom, thus cutting down on the after-class work. More specific courses should be added to enable the individual to be thoroughly familiar with his major.

Paul Flannigan, Marketing

There should be more meetings of the different clubs offered to the business student. Different business men and associations should be given the opportunity to talk to the students with reference to their majors. A wider choice of majors should be afforded to the students.

Dick Gary
Industrial Administration

There should be a more stringent method in selecting new students for admission into the school. Also needed is a more varied choice of electives to offer the student the opportunity to persue his major further. The classes should be smaller, and the afternoon classes done away with.

George Brandewiede, Finance

More cooperation between the students and faculty would help the department. A new C&F building with larger and more modern teaching facilities is needed.

Bob Gibbs, Accounting

There should be a wider choice of elective majors, enabling the student to acquire the particular education he wants. Younger and more experienced business men should be given the opportunity to speak and to teach the students.

Miss Kelly, Father Bartley's secretary in the C & F department, carries a sizeable portion of the administrative load.

Pre-Med Men Set Jefferson Hospital Tour

Forty Villanova pre-medical students will tour Jefferson Hospital and attend an informal symposium Saturday, Nov. 12, announced Dr. John A. McClain, head of the biology department.

The tour and symposium are sponsored by the Pennsylvania Delta Chapter of Alpha Epsilon Delta, the LaSalle College chapter of the National Pre-Medical Honor Society.

Villanova students will be taken on an executive tour of the hospital from 9 a. m. until noon. After lunch they will have the opportunity to fire questions at the symposium of students from Jefferson, Hahnemann, Temple, Pennsylvania and Women's medical schools.

These students will discuss the preparation, education and problems of the pre-medical student.

Dr. McClain indicated that the tour and symposium are expected to be of immense benefit to the pre-medical students in clarifying their uncertainties and in providing them with first-hand factual counsel in planning for their future profession.
